The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report on H. R. 8350 and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read instead of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8350) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$261,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$233,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "597,550"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 19, 21, 22, and 23.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8350) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, submit the following statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On Nos. 1 and 2: Strikes out the Senate language providing for the appointment of the Undersecretary of State by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and fixing his salary at $10,000, and appropriates $1,069,600, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,072,100, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries in the office of the Secretary of State.

On No. 3: Authorizes $2,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,800, as proposed by the House, for the operation and maintenance of the launch for the embassy at Constantinople.

On No. 13: Makes available for the fiscal year 1925, as proposed by the Senate, the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $47,750 heretofore appropriated for the revision of Chinese customs tariff.

On No. 14: Makes available for the fiscal year 1925, as proposed by the Senate, the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $21,000 heretofore appropriated for inquiry into extraterritoriality in China.

On No. 15: Places in the discretion of the President the use of $6,000 of the appropriation for the International Boundary Commission between the United States and Mexico for taking over the water gauging now being done by the State of Texas, as proposed by the Senate, instead of making mandatory such use of the money, as proposed by the House.

On No. 16: Makes available for the fiscal year 1925, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation of $15,000 heretofore made for the International Commission on Public and Private International Law.

On No. 17: Strikes out the House language making the quota of the United States for the support of the International Office of Public Health payable in gold francs.

On No. 18: Makes available for the fiscal year 1925, as proposed by the Senate, the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $20,000 heretofore appropriated for the Third Pan American Scientific Congress.

On No. 20: Appropriates $58,287, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $51,750, as proposed by the House, for contingent expenses of the Department of Justice.

On No. 24: Provides for printing and binding the official reports of the Supreme Court of the United States, and advance pamphlet installments thereof, during the fiscal year 1925, as proposed by the Senate, instead of 1924, as proposed by the House. It is merely the correction of an error.

On No. 25: Places a limitation of $150,000, as proposed by the Senate, on the amount of the appropriation of $840,00 for special assistants to district attorneys which may be expended for special counsel to enforce the national prohibition act.

On Nos. 26 and 27: Corrects the language of the paragraph making appropriations for contingent expenses of the Department of Commerce.

On No. 28: Appropriates $261,000, instead of $241,000, as proposed by the House, and $291,000, as proposed by the Senate, for commercial attachés.

On No. 29: Appropriates $400,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $385,000, as proposed by the House, for promoting commerce in Europe and other areas.

On No. 30: appropriates $181,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $166,000, as proposed by the House, for district and cooperative offices, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Cemmerce.

On No. 31: Appropriates $233,000, instead of $213,000, as proposed by the House, and $253,000, as proposed by the Senate, for promoting commerce in the Far East.

On No. 32: Appropriates $597,550, instead of $582,500, as proposed by the House, and $625,000, as proposed by the Senate, for export industries, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

On No. 33: Corrects the punctuation by inserting a semicolon, as proposed by the Senate, instead of a comma, as proposed by the House.

On No. 34: Appropriates $180,278, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $158,778, as proposed by the House, for the enforcement of wireless communication laws.

On Nos. 35 and 36: Appropriates $314,300, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $250,000, as proposed by the House, for Pacific coast surveys under the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and corrects the total.

On No. 37: Makes available for the fiscal year 1925, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation of $40,000 heretofore made for the establishment of a fish-rescue station on the Mississippi River.

On No. 38: Makes immediately available, as proposed by the Senate, $100,000 of the appropriation for additional land-border patrol under regulating immigration.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On Nos. 4 to 12, inclusive: Making appropriations for the surviving next of kin of consular officers dying in the service.

On No. 19: Relating to subsistence expenses of employees of the Mixed Claims Commission, United States and Germany, while in a travel status.

On Nos. 21, 22, and 23: Relating to salaries of employees in the war transaction section, Department of Justice.

MILTON W. SHREVE,
GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
W. B. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 8350, making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor, as it passed the House carried for items in dispute, on which the conferees have agreed, $3,117,678, and as it passed the Senate it carried $3,374,965. The conference figures now are $3,295,015. The real increase made by the Senate and agreed to by the conferees over the House bill is $177,337. There are three items that are not in agreement, and I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I call the attention of the gentleman to page 16 of the report regarding the $6,000 which I offered as an amendment to provide for the gauging of the water of the Rio Grande. That is left discretionary with the President, and I notice the House has receded. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that if this money is not expended in properly gauging the water by the Federal Government it may cost this Government $50,000,000 or $60,000,000. Why should it be left to the discretion of the President when it is really a duty upon the Federal Government?

Mr. SHREVE. I will say to the gentleman that that was an amendment put in by the Senate at the suggestion of Senator SHEPPARD, and we all know that Senator SHEPPARD is deeply interested in the gauging of this water. The Senators in conference felt that the President, having charge of the matter, would see that the gauging was done. We explained that the reason the amendment was put on the bill was for the very purpose of compelling the commission to do the gauging.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I usually agree with the Senator over there, but I think in this case he is mistaken, because I will state to the gentleman that it is not in accord with the request of the boundary commissioner, Mr. Curry, which I submitted, through a letter, to the Senator.

Mr. SHREVE. They understood fully the attitude of the House on the question. The only object we had was to enforce the gauging of the river.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is the idea.

Mr. SHREVE. But they said under their amendment the President would see that the work was done.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I trust he will.

Mr. SHREVE. And we accepted that statement.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is a duty upon the Federal Government and I think the Senator is mistaken in his view. I think it should be mandatory upon every President, because, I will state to my friend who suggested a similar amendment to me that I placed upon the bill and who had that much interest in the matter, that other Presidents have not seen to it that the gauging was done; and the State of Texas has had to do the gauging for several years in order to protect the Government. I would suggest to my friend that he adhere to the original amendment that I placed in the bill, making it mandatory on the Federal Government, and for once override the Senator from Texas on the proposition.

Mr. SHREVE. I am inclined to think that the Senators will live up religiously to the agreement and see that the work is done as they say.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I sincerely trust they will, but I would rather have it the other way, as the House placed it. I think it is safer for this Government, because, I will state to my friend, that the Mexican Government at all times has gauged this water and is now preparing to levy a claim, so I am informed, against this Government for excess water that they claim we have used, and therefore it is very essential that this work be done.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I desire to ask the gentleman with reference to Nos. 1 and 2, which strike out the Senate language providing for the appointment of the Undersecretary of State by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and fixing his salary at $10,000.

Mr. SHREVE. I may say that the Senate attempted to raise the salary of this Undersecretary from $7,500 to $10,000 and the House disagreed. This is simply bringing it back to $7,500.

Mr. McKEOWN. I wish to compliment the gentleman very much on that proposition. I am absolutely opposed to paying more than Members of Congress receive for work of a similar nature.

Mr. SHREVE. Thank you.

Mr. McKEOWN. There is another question I would like to ask the gentleman: What is the necessity for reenacting and making available the balances that have not been expended out of various appropriations? For instance, unexpended balances for Pan American Scientific Congress and $15,000 for eastern trade, and I call the gentleman's attention to the unexpended balance of $21,000 for the extraterritorial inquiry in China.

Mr. SHREVE. In reply to the gentleman permit me to say that item was authorized some time ago, but due to the effects of the war that work was never accomplished, and this is simply carrying out work started a long time ago in our legal relations with China.

Mr. McKEOWN. It is not the purpose of these men to simply use up the money that has been made available?

Mr. SHREVE. Absolutely not; it was work that was delayed by reason of the war. They are treaty obligations—and there are several of them—and it was necessary to reenact them and place the department in position to carry on the regular, orderly course of business with such foreign countries.

Mr. McKEOWN. I again compliment the gentleman, because I do not like this idea of these men having money they can not expend and then wanting a little more time in which to spend it. I want them to try to save it.

Mr. SHREVE. I quite agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call up and have read the amendments that are in disagreement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to take action on them?

Mr. SHREVE. I would like to have action taken on amendments 4 to 12.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Carrie Kitchin Hazeltine, widow of Ross Hazeltine, late consul at Lourenco Marques, Portuguese East Africa, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty, of illness incurred in the Consular Service, $4,500.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the reason we brought back these items is because they are legislation and we did not desire to establish the practice of legislating on an appropriation bill. I think the committee realizes that these are claims against the Government, and we are prepared to submit the matter to the House so it may take action upon it. It is establishing a precedent. If we are to pass items in this way on appropriation bills, it will soon become a precedent that we can not get away from. We are all anxious to keep the appropriation bills as clean from legislation as possible. So we place the responsibility squarely upon the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Certainly.

Mr. BRITTEN. Senate amendments 4 to 12 apply to consular officers who have died at their post of duty in the service of the Government. For 30 years this character of amendment has come to the House on various appropriation bills. I sincerely hope the managers on the part of the House will recede and concur in these nine Senate amendments. They are not out of the ordinary, but are brought back to the House only because they are legislation on an appropriation bill. Gentlemen in the House know that legislation on appropriation bills has become the custom rather than being unusual since the new rules of the House have divided the authority of the various committees. I recall that the naval appropriation bill now in conference comes to the House with much added legislation, which the conferees will probably agree to, because the legislation is not objectionable to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SHREVE. But that legislation is to be brought back to the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; it may come back, but it is not unusual for appropriation bills nowadays to have legislation added to them, and I hope the House managers will recede and concur.

Mr. Speaker, for more than 30 years past Congress has appropriated money for the relief of the widows of deceased diplomatic and consular officers, and I now have in mind the payment to the heirs of Alexander Clark, late minister and consul general to Liberia, being one year's salary, $4,000, authorized in act of July 28, 1892. Then again on March 3, 1893, Congress authorized a payment to Mrs. Sarah O. Hanna, widow of Bayless W. Hanna, late minister resident and consul general to Buenos Aires, of $5,375. There are dozens of precedents in the succeeding years, but I will not take up the time of the House to recite them. Suffice it to say that Congress has continued to promote this form of relief for the widows of many American consular officers, and I am sure that every Member of the House will agree with me that it is the least that could be done under the circumstances. Everybody knows that our diplomatic and consular representatives are underpaid and that their sudden death very often leaves a family in destitute circumstances. I am glad to call to the attention of the House the further fact that each of the nine Senate amendments apply to cases where the consular officer actually died at his post of duty from illness contracted in the service, with the single exception of an officer who was returning home in a sick and weakened condition who died aboard ship.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments 4 to 12, inclusive, and that it concur in the same.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendments from 4 to 12, inclusive, and upon that motion I ask that all amendments be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the amendments from 4 to 12, inclusive, be considered en bloc. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

(4) For Carrie Kitchin Hazeltine, widow of Ross Hazeltine, late consul at Lourenco Marques, Portuguese East Africa, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty, of illness incurred in the Consular Service, $4,500.

(5) For Pauline M. Robinson, widow of Fred R. Robinson, late consul to Saltillo, Mexico, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while returning to the United States from his post of duty of illness incurred in the Consular Service, $3,500.

(6) For May Adelaide Sharp, widow of Hunter Sharp, late consul at Edinburgh, Scotland, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty of illness incurred in the Consular Service, $5,000.

(7) For Ethel Roberts Loop, widow of Carl R. Loop, late consul at Catania, Italy, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty of illness incurred in the Consular Service, $4,000.

(8) For William B. Kirjassoff and David M. Kirjassoff, minor children of Max D. Kirjassoff, late consul at Yokohama, Japan, one year's salary of their deceased father, who died in the earthquake and fire while at his post of duty, $3,500.

(9) For Eliza R. Scidmore, sister of George H. Scidmore, late consul general at Yokohama, Japan, one year's salary of her deceased brother, who died of illness incurred in the Consular Service, $8,000.

(10) For Frances R. Jewett, widow of Milo A. Jewett, late consul of the United States at Trondhjem, Norway, $3,500, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty of illness incurred in the Consular Service.

(11) For Teresa B. Handley, widow of William W. Handley, late consul general at Callao-Lima, Peru, $5,500, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty of illness incurred in the Consular Service.

(12) For Irene Gracie Pontius, widow of Albert W. Pontius, late consul general at Mukden, China, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty of illness incurred in the Consular Service, $5,500.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHREVE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call up the amendment No. 19, at the bottom of page 4.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 21, strike out "and subsistence expenses" and insert "expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $8."

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in this amendment with an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SHREVE moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment of the Senate No. 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: "expense and per diem in lieu of subsistence, and the Secretary of State may allow per diem in lieu of subsistence for foreign travel at not to exceed $8."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to recede, and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to further insist on the disagreement to Nos. 21, 22, and 23, on page 4 of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendment 21: Page 33, line 5, strike out "one person" and insert "two persons."

Amendment 22: Page 33, line 7, after the word "annum," insert the word "each."

Amendment 23: Page 33, lines 7 to 9, inclusive, strike out the following language: Provided further, That the compensation agreed to be paid to any person by the Department of Justice shall be definitely fixed at the time of employment," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "but the Attorney General may fix the compensation of not to exceed eight persons at not to exceed $10,000 each."

Mr. SHREVE. I move that the House agree to the request of the Senate for a further conference.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Before that is done, did the gentleman include Senate amendment 23? I was under the impression that we had reached an agreement on amendment 23.

Mr. SHREVE. I thought so myself. I thought the matter was disposed of when the gentleman from Alabama and I departed, but it seems—and I get my information from the Clerk—that they were not disposed of.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In other words, they felt that all three amendments should be considered together?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the gentleman will agree that it is the sentiment of the House that we should adhere strictly to insistence on the provision of the House that not more than one person in the Department of Justice be employed at a cost exceeding $10,000. That seems to be the crux of all these amendments.

Mr. SHREVE. I am glad to have the support of the gentleman from Alabama in our contention that there should be but one person employed at a rate exceeding $10,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments 21, 22, and 23.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the request of the Senate for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. SHREVE, Mr. TINKHAM, and Mr. OLIVER of Alabama.

CRITICISMS OF CONGRESS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD concerning recent criticisms of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, several recent issues of the Literary Digest, a weekly magazine with very large circulation, have conspicuously displayed many bitter criticisms of Congress; and this was true notably of the issue of May 10, 1924. Please note carefully that this criticism is not directed at the majority—Republican—in control and responsible for the conduct of congressional business. The attack is a broad, general, and unconditional condemnation of Congress as an institution, as a governmental agency, as one of the chief creatures of our Federal Constitution.

Danger lurks in the mental attitude back of these complaints. The suggestion is unmistakable that such a useless, constantly irritating, business-disturbing agency as Congress be abolished or permanently prorogued. In a pretense of fairness the Literary Digest prints a few contrary views buried so deep in the text as not to attract attention. But the sensational, wholesale, passionate denunciations are played up far to the front to startle the eye and mind.

What can be the motive? Do such men as Judge Gary still, as Alexander Hamilton did, prefer a monarchy? Do they wish to transform the President into a dictator, an autocrat, a despot? Would they have such despotism slowly changed to a hereditary imperialism? Do they contemplate violent revolution, or a slow, silent, secret, sapping of liberty, till the people's power be enchained and militarism be enthroned? Let them either withdraw their words, confess their mistake, or stand convicted of treason to the sacred institutions our fathers set up to bless all humanity.

Congress is the most essential part of the constitutional machine. It not only must enact all laws, levy all taxes, appropriate all money, but when the Electoral College fails to function must elect the President, may remove the President or any other officer, including judges, by impeachment. Without Congress, neither the executive nor judicial department could ever function a single day.

Corruption in government does not creep in through congressional action or judicial decisions. History shows that in all countries and ages, as in our own, corruption springs up through the executive or administrative department. There is a reason. In Congress everything said is public for all to hear and printed for all to read. A jealous and ambitious minority is always watching every move of the majority, anxious to expose a fault. So in the courts the hearings are public and decisions written and printed in book form. There are two adversaries mutually and usually bitterly opposed in every court proceeding. There is simply no opportunity for corruption.

Generally wherever corruption in Members of Congress has been established it has been in conjunction with corruption of some executive or administrative officer. It has been due to some corrupt conspiracy between one executive and a Congressman relating to such matters as pardons, public lands, or public property, such as surplus war material, or permits, privileges, or franchises under executive control, or the division of the salary of some executive office. Corruption between Members of Congress regarding legislative business is entirely unknown, not even suspected or charged by the enemies of Congress.

The reason that corruption in government nearly always is found to exist in the executive branch is manifest. Executive acts, decisions, and orders are made in secret. Both sides are not publicly represented. There are no galleries "listening in." There is no stenographer taking down every word to be printed and scattered abroad. Here is the opportunity for corruption, and history, both past and present, shows that where the opportunity exists it is employed to the great financial benefit of the executive office holder. Such opportunity exists par excellence in the income tax bureau and prohibition enforcement unit. Does corruption exist there? If not, then only fear of exposure by a congressional investigation prevents it.

Consequently, the great duty of preserving the full limit of congressional power to investigate every thing and everybody connected with the Government, at any time. Most of this present tirade against Congress arises from the proper, necessary, and effectual investigations of executive corruptions that Congress has conducted.

The Literary Digest, having virtually challenged us to defend Congress created by the Constitution, I felt impelled to send a letter to its editor, and I herewith print same for the information of the public:

The EDITOR OF THE LITERARY DIGEST:

I feel a duty to answer your request for a statement—very brief it must be—fearing lest silence may be misconstrued to the prejudice of the liberties of America. I do not defend, nor would it be becoming to me, the personnel of the present Congress. I, too, would change the Republican majority to a Democratic majority. But the sentiments to which you are giving such wide circulation go deeper; they strike at Congress as an institution; they condemn parliamentary government. When you link together Bolshevism and Congress as joint destructive agencies, when you disseminate sentiments that "the worst thing we have is our American Congress," you necessarily argue the destruction of Congress. Indeed, one writer in The Chronicle of April 26, 1924, following the implications of Elbert H. Gary's statements, suggests that "Congress and all State legislatures take a five-year recess." He goes on to say: "We will never have a stable business situation until we have a stable government." Again: "Can business ever prosper in the true and complete sense with this vulture gnawing at its vitals?"

Did Judge Gary and his disciple writing in the Chronicle think "Congress the worst thing in America," "Congress a vulture," when in 1921 Congress enacted the high protective tariff law now in force? Do they regard the tariff as class legislation promoted by a selfish tariff bloc? I respectfully suggest that the trouble with Judge Gary and the other tariff beneficiaries is that they do not agree with the present majority in Congress regarding surtax rates on incomes, adjusted compensation for ex-soldiers, and restrictive immigration. They failed to suggest in April, 1921, that Congress should then take a five-year recess before it reduced the surtax rates and raised the tariff rates.

Judge Gary and those who think as he does are evidently entirely out of sympathy with popular government, with a parliamentary system, and therefore do not like our American institutions. They manifestly prefer an autocracy either of one man or a few, either Italian, Spanish, or Russian. Their great teacher and leader, Alexander Hamilton, in his day preferred the English Government for its "autocratic stability." But doubtless Judge Gary and his sympathizers regard the present English Parliament, which is the entire English Government—legislative, executive, and judicial—as worse even than the American Congress.

Judge Gary and his school forget that the essence of parliamentary government, of congressional government, of American Government, is majority rule by compromise. No one man nor set of men less than a majority can have their own sweet way. By compromise independence was finally declared and achieved. By compromise the Constitution was finally formulated and adopted and the National Capital located. By compromise the Nation has developed swiftly and mightily.

But some seem to think that suddenly American institutions have become all wrong. While there is restrictive immigration, there is not restriction on emigration; expatriation is an American doctrine. We should bless, not curse, the hand that feeds us.

Judge Gary and his school are following a dangerous course—"Worst things" ought to be changed. Thus they imply that Congress ought to be abolished, not merely recess five years. What would they have in its stead? "Aye, there's the rub." Does Judge Gary wish a "big business soviet"? Does he seek an American Mussolini? Is he organizing the American fascisti? Or does he prefer General Rivera and the methods of Spanish militarism? To dissolve and dismember the American Congress would be revolution. When a revolution starts where will it stop? But Judge Gary must remember that all revolutions start with words, thoughts, ideas, followed finally by deeds—violent deeds. Judge Gary is using the words and suggesting the ideas.

Let me respectfully but earnestly suggest an idea to Judge Gary and others who hastily and thoughtlessly repeat his words: Revolutions are decided by numerical, physical man power; not by money power, as elections are sometimes decided. As Senator Tillman used to say, "When skull cracking commences all men's skulls look alike." Judge Gary must remember that a hundred thousand Regular Army soldiers can not overwhelm a hundred million American people and hold them in restraint. He can not count on the National Guard and the organized reserves to help the Regular Army subjugate the American people.

Then, most earnestly do I plead for patience, tolerance, and the spirit of "give and take," the spirit of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln. The only hope for invested capital and the vested interest is in the American constitutional system, including both Federal and State Governments. Of this system, the legislative branch, to wit, Congress and all State legislatures, is the bedrock. The preservation of the American legislative system, including the fullest power to investigate everything and everybody at any time, is essential and indispensable to the preservation of American liberty, and liberty is more precious than life.

Let Judge Gary and his disciples reread and remember the American history, English history, French history, German history, Italian history, Russian history, Roman history, Biblical history, and rejoice that we still have an American Congress.

Let not Judge Gary and other "big business men" give any just cause for others to say of them as was said of the "big business men" of France long ago—"the Bourbons never learn anything and never forget anything."

Finally, let me suggest that the remedy is not to destroy the Congress, but to clean it out—not burn the barn to be rid of the rats. Let all men, including even Judge Gary, give their personal time and attention, not merely their money, to their civic and political duties. Let our ablest and cleanest men run for Congress, and, if necessary, let some of them forego the huge financial returns from industrial leadership, and, if elected, go into Congress to exemplify before the country their ideal of how a Congressman should function. Congress is not an abstract institution—it is composed of 531 human beings; so we are dealing with an individual and personal problem.

My personal experience and testimony is that Members of Congress, with rare exceptions, are able, honest, and patriotic men, but hoping to be reelected by a majority of the men and women in their respective districts; they will not take orders from any one man, though as rich as Judge Gary, or as able and learned as Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler.

J. J. McSWAIN.

The majority of all who love free institutions, and who therefore feel a deep protest against an attack upon the only direct representation the people have in the Federal Government, are voiceless. They have no great newspapers and magazines; but here is a letter from one of them:

A TIMELY PROTEST

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., May 12, 1924.

Hon. JOHN J. McSWAIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It was with deep concern and regret that I read a recent statement made by Judge Gary that "the worst thing we have in this country is Congress"—the Congress that was founded on the principles of true democracy, conceived in the faith that all men are created equal and therefore entitled to a voice in the making of those laws with which we are governed; a Congress that had its genesis in the cradle of liberty, that shone as a beacon light throughout the world in those dark days when life and liberty and the pursuit of happiness were purchased with the blood of our forefathers, and which since then has withstood the vicissitudes of civil war, governmental corruption, invasion of the doctrine of hate and anarchy, and that has made America the greatest nation on earth.

Shall we now tolerate utterances from men who regard themselves greater than Congress, that destroy the faith and confidence in that branch of our Government that we have learned from childhood to revere and respect? Shall they be permitted to malign and libel the men ordained as Representatives of the people, who are conscientiously endeavoring to serve all the people for the good of all, and, above all, restore the confidence of the people by stamping out dishonesty or any semblance of dishonesty among those who retain the stewardship of public office?

Is it possible that these "supermen"—and we do not refer particularly to Judge Gary—feel chagrined at their inability to control the destiny of the people through control of Congress, that they may either guide the lawmakers to do their bidding for the protection and gain of their own private interests, or prevent them from passing legislation demanded by the big majority that might somewhat impair these private interests? At least these men give vent to their spleen in such a manner as to foster and encourage that growing tendency in this country to disregard law and order and those institutions founded by the fathers of this Nation.

Can it be that we have a "supergovernment" ruled by such men as Judge Gary and Julius Barnes, who regard the Constitution as a "scrap of paper"? Woe be unto this Nation if the people become convinced of this! There is no doubt that these men, by virtue of their positions and influence, wield a big power in the Government, and I want to protest most vigorously against the position they take toward a measure that is the crying need of America to-day, for it involves the very life and existence of the most important industry in this country, agriculture.

Yours very truly,

GEO. E. DUIS,
President North Dakota Wheat Growers' Association.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 279, a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House Resolution 279

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 8209, to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall arise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution simply provides for the consideration of H. R. 8209, to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes. Under authority granted by Congress during the war the President took over a majority of the railroads and a good many of the steamboat transportation lines of the country. Under the special authority of that act he was granted power to take over these boats, barges, and steamboats and also to build additional ones to meet the demands of the Government. Because of the shortage of transportation facilities, he was obliged to buy a considerable number at war costs. When we passed the 1920 transportation act turning back the railroads to the individual owners, it was provided in sections 201 and 500 of that act that the Secretary of War should conduct, for the present at least, such transportation facilities as the Government then owned on the Lake Erie Canal, the Black Warrior River, and the Mississippi River. It has been found by actual working that it is practically impossible for the Secretary of War to carry out in an efficient way the provisions of that law, and it seems to be absolutely necessary, if we are going to get as good results as possible from the operation of these various lines, that there should be an independent corporation formed, of which the Government should own all the stock, to take over and operate these lines in accordance with the direction of Congress. The Government at the present time owns all of the barges, and so forth, and this act provides for a corporation with a capital of $5,000,000, and the Government shall own all of the stock. As a matter of fact, it simply puts the Government in a position to operate these various lines in an efficient, businesslike way, and under same conditions as any other private organization. As far as I know, there is no opposition to this general proposition. It comes as a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There has been a rule reported out from the Committee on Rules in respect to increased hospitalization. Can the gentleman advise the House when we may expect that to be called up?

Mr. SNELL. Either late this afternoon or to-morrow morning. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8209) to create the Inland Waterways Corporation, for the purpose of carrying out the mandates and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8209, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois to control one-half of the time in favor of the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, may I have the other half of that time? I am not opposed to the bill, but there are some features of it that I would like to discuss.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is no one on the committee who is opposed to the bill. I do not know that I could yield him half of the time, because I think there are some gentlemen on that side who want to discuss the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, no time was taken in the debate on the rule, practically, and it seems to me it might easily be agreed here to extend the time a little in the Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent, so that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] might have some time. If I had known the gentleman from Illinois desired time, I should have asked for it on the rule and arranged to give him some.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 5 or 10 minutes' time, but I do not want it on this bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, debate is confined to the bill under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If no member of the committee claims the right as opposing the bill, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee to control half the time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that.

Mr. RAINEY. I am not opposed to the bill, but there are some features of it I want to discuss that I am not in favor of.

Mr. DENISON. It is satisfactory to me if the gentleman from Tennessee controls one-half of the time, and then he can yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Tennessee will control the time in opposition to the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to proceed until I complete my statement without interruption, because I do not want to take up all of the time. Some of the other members of the committee desire an opportunity to express their views.

This is a question of transportation, and preliminary to an explanation of the bill I shall say just a few words upon the question of transportation. There is no question more important to the American people than that of transportation. The welfare of the entire country depends upon it, and the question of transportation is a question that is going to be before Congress for its attention for some time to come. About $20,000,000,000 is invested in the railroads, it is claimed, and freight rates are very high. That fact comes home to every family in the country. I have serious doubts whether there is any chance or any hope to get a material reduction in railroad freight rates in the country in the near future.

Mr. Markham, president of the Illinois Central Railroad, has stated that the railroads are going to require $10,000,000,000 for improved facilities in the next 10 years, or at the rate of a billion dollars a year. I do not see how they are going to get the money. I think it is impossible, because that will make the railroad investment at least $20,000,000,000, and rates will have to be fixed so as to give a reasonable return on the investment, if they ever expect to get the money. So I think it is impossible. Mr. Rhea, one of the great railroad men of the country, stated that the transportation necessities of the country double every 10 years, which is in harmony with the statement of Mr. Markham. If these facts are true, the railroads are going to be unable absolutely to take care of the country's transportation of the future. So the problem will be up to Congress to provide some sort of transportation facilities to accommodate the commerce, the industry, and the economic development of this country in the future.

How are we going to do it? Transportation has become more and more specialized, and it is going to become more so. We are developing highways, building hard roads, building feeders for the railroads, and motor haulage has to take care of a certain class of transportation; it is bound to do so. If we had not the hard roads and motor haulage in this country, the railroads could not now take care of the transportation of the country. We have to improve the roads and use motor haulage and furnish feeders for the railroads. Now, then, the railroads have to handle a certain class of transportation that can not be handled either by motor haulage or water haulage. But there is a class of freight that the railroads ought not to be expected to handle and will not in the future handle, and that class must be handled by the rivers and canals of the country. Transportation is going to become more and more specialized as the country develops and industries increase, and those who have studied the subject carefully, I think, will agree that the future needs of the country absolutely make it imperative that the Government improve the rivers and inland waterways and take some appropriate action to rehabilitate water transportation.

The older countries have found this to be so. Germany has 8,500 miles of improved waterways; France has 8,600 miles of improved waterways, and 25 per cent of all the freight of the Republic of France is transported on its waterways. Forty-one per cent of all the freight that goes into the great city of Paris goes on the Seine River. There is also the little country of Belgium, which has about 1,500 miles of improved waterways. Those countries have found their industrial development depended absolutely upon the development of their waterways, and they are honeycombed with canals and improved rivers. As we increase in population and as our business and industries increase we ought to develop our great system of waterways in this country. The railroads alone can not meet the situation. And so that problem is our problem, and it is up to us to provide for a system of water transportation.

Now, let me give you a few figures which perhaps some of you may know, but may have forgotten. We have expended in this country, I find on making some investigation recently, $1,058,453,343 in the development of rivers and harbors already. We have expended something over $600,000,000 in the development and improvement of rivers alone. Let me give you these illustrations: We have expended on the improvement of the Warrior River, which runs from above Birmingham down to Mobile, about 419 miles—we have expended on that river and its 17 locks $10,271,295, and that project has been completed.

That is a completed project. We have expended on the Mississippi River from the head of the Passes up to the mouth of the Ohio River $137,920,738, and from the mouth of the Ohio to the mouth of the Missouri about $21,681,600, and from the mouth of the Missouri to Minneapolis $34,402,000, so that upon the Mississippi River system we have expended about $194,004,338, according to the best figures I could get from the engineers. On the Ohio River we have expended about $89,542,389, and on the Missouri River $19,027,500. Now, we have expended all this money on the theory that we are going to make these rivers navigable and put commerce back on them. There still remains a great deal of work to be done. The Mississippi River is practically completed from the mouth of the Ohio to the head of the Passes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman mentioned the amount of money spent on river and harbor improvement. I want to state that we have spent considerable money at Miami, and constituents of mine established a steamship line to Miami; and just as soon as they began to make it a success the railroads got in and asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to allow them to reduce their rate so they could compete with the boats, and how can you ever establish water transportation so long as that exists?

Mr. DENISON. That is one of the problems Congress is going to have to take hold of, and I hope we may find a solution to it very soon.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. I know the gentleman is quite a student of waterways. Now, in view of what the gentleman has stated here, does not the gentleman think it is the duty of Congress to pass a river and harbor bill before we adjourn?

Mr. DENISON. I do; I think the river and harbor bill ought to be passed before Congress adjourns. Now, the problem which the gentleman from Maryland mentions is one that ought to be solved, and I think it will require additional legislation; but that is not entirely pertinent to the bill we are now considering.

I mentioned these expenditures for the improvement of rivers for the purpose of showing that Congress has expended a great deal of money for the development of water transportation. The Mississippi River has about 6,520 miles that can be improved into a navigable waterway—that is, the Mississippi River system, that runs right through the heart of the country, can be easily made into a navigable waterway system of that length.

Now, we are spending money each year to complete these projects. What is the purpose of it? What has all this been for? It is for the purpose of restoring commerce to our waterways, to relieve the railroads of their strain, and to cheapen transportation. And it will cheapen transportation. I will tell you why: The cost of transportation by railroad on the average is about 10¼ mills per ton-mile; on the rivers the Government is now hauling freight at an average of 3¼ mills per ton-mile, so that you can carry freight on the rivers at about one-third of what you can carry it for on the railroad.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. When you figure the cost of hauling freight on the waterways do you figure it on the cost of opening up the waterway and the improvements, or just the actual transportation?

Mr. DENISON. The actual transportation costs.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Well, the cost of transportation as figured on the railways includes the interest on the bonded indebtedness and all the construction costs.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; that is true, but we have always improved our rivers and harbors from the Federal Treasury as a national policy.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman the value of fully verifying the statements through the verification of the United States Board of Engineers and other most reliable sources as to the great amount saved?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. All countries have found it so, and we are going to find it so, that if you expect to get cheap transportation in this country—and you must have it—you have got to get it by water.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I understand that on the Warrior River as well as on the Mississippi River the Government is transporting freight at 3¼ mills per ton-mile, but that the business on the Warrior River has been running at a loss ever since they began. Have they reached the point where they can pay the expense and make a profit?

Mr. DENISON. The reason why the barge line on the Warrior River has not been operated at a profit is on account of certain conditions that exist there, and it is the purpose of this legislation to enable the Government to remove those conditions. If we can enact this legislation and give the Government a chance to carry out its program, freight can be carried on the Warrior River at a profit to the Government and at a great saving in transportation charges to the people.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not this put the Government in competition with private owners?

Mr. DENISON. No. There are no private owners that are now operating on these rivers.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. When you speak of the cost of water transportation, have you counted in the expense of improving the waterways and the maintenance and depreciation, or do you approximate that?

Mr. DENISON. Those items are not considered as part of the costs. The navigable rivers belong to the Government and are under the direct supervision of the Government, and we have to develop them for national defense purposes if for no other.

Now, I want to proceed with the discussion of the bill after these preliminary statements. This vast investment that we have made in the development of our waterways and the additional amount that will be required to complete them will not accomplish anything unless it succeeds in putting transportation back on the rivers. In the old days we had transportation on the Mississippi River and other rivers. There were packet steamers that went along and used such channels as they could find. But the days of such transportation have passed. The transportation that we are going to have on our waterways in the future is through an entirely different class of transportation facilities. We are using now the barge system, where we can haul bulky and heavy freight that does not require much speed, and where you can haul immense quantities with a small amount of power.

During the war the Government came into possession of various facilities for transportation on the Mississippi River and other rivers. The Government took them because the railroads had fallen down and were unable to carry the commerce of the country; and we resorted to every possible means of transportation. Among other things, we took over tugs and barges on the rivers, and anything that we could get, at any price we could get them for. Of course, we had to take them at high prices during the war. The Government then began to increase its facilities for water transportation, but it was done at war prices; and when the war ended and we began to settle up our accounts we found quite a large number of barges and towboats and other water craft in the possession of the Railway Administration which had been taken over during the war. Something had to be done with them. We handled that question in the transportation act—section 201 of the act of 1920. That act provided that all such facilities that the Government had come into possession of should be turned over to the Secretary of War, and he was given a mandate to operate them on the Mississippi River and the Warrior River as a transportation system.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. In a moment. He was told in that act to operate them as a private transportation company, and he has been doing so the very best he could since the passage of the transportation act.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does the act apply only to the Mississippi River?

Mr. DENISON. No; it applies also to the Warrior River.

Mr. ABERNETHY. We had a very substantial boat line operated by the Government from Baltimore to Newbern, N. C. That was gobbled up by somebody and taken off. Colonel Ashburn had charge of it. I notice here that he has given you certain information. I want to support the gentleman's bill, but if we have the same bad luck as we had on our waterway over here between Baltimore and Newbern it does not look very encouraging to me.

Mr. DENISON. That was a separate transportation company taken over by the Government as we did the railroads.

Mr. ABERNETHY. They got about half a million dollars' worth of property and sold it to a lot of irresponsible people. I had the matter from Colonel Ashburn, and I never have had a satisfactory explanation of what became of it.

Mr. DENISON. I am unable to give the gentleman from North Carolina any definite information about it, except that the Government turned back all these transportation facilities to the owners, and I presume they have been trying to operate them. Since then the Secretary of War has been operating these barges on the lower Mississippi from St. Louis to New Orleans, and on the Warrior from Birmingham to New Orleans. He has been operating them with some considerable success and now and then some considerable loss due to special conditions; but he has found that in the management of this immense business he is surrounded with so many limitations that surround all management by a Government bureau or a Government department that he can not operate them with any considerable success, and he feels that additional legislation should be enacted to enable him to carry out the mandate of Congress in a businesslike way and with a fair chance of success.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman have any information that the Secretary of War has changed his opinion with reference to privately operated affairs of the Government since he made the statement that he was in favor of selling the Panama Railroad and the Warrior River barges?

Mr. DENISON. I think I am in a position to advise the gentleman from Oklahoma that the Secretary of War, after further and mature consideration, has somewhat modified his views on that subject, and he is very anxious to have this legislation enacted.

The Secretary of War, in the operation of this barge system, has been carrying freight from St. Louis to New Orleans, and, through railroads connecting with the barge line, we have been carrying freight from 35 different States. Only about 20 per cent of the amount of freight that is being carried on the barge lines originates at points on the rivers. The freight is being sent from Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and other States, even from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin. That freight is sent to St. Louis and Cairo, Ill., and there loaded onto the barge line and transported down the river to New Orleans and to other parts of the world. They have been doing an immense business, but with increased facilities and improved business methods, which it is intended to give them by this legislation, the business of the barge lines can be wonderfully increased and the savings to the shippers of the country can be greatly increased.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. What difference will there be as to the losses? Who will have to pay the losses under this incorporation?

Mr. DENISON. What losses does the gentleman mean?

Mr. McKEOWN. The losses in operating the barges.

Mr. DENISON. Well, if they sustain any losses the Government will have to pay them just the same as it is paying them now.

Mr. McKEOWN. The Government does sustain losses now in the operation of these barges, does it not?

Mr. DENISON. No. Sometimes it sustains losses and at other times it has large earnings.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The reports and the testimony before the committee show that for the entire year there has been a profit to the Government in this operation.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; even under all these difficulties we have been making a fair profit.

Mr. McKEOWN. Then what is the necessity for a change?

Mr. DENISON. I am going to explain that. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed without interruption I will try to explain it to his entire satisfaction.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask this question. I wonder whether the gentleman has stated to the House that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has unanimously reported this bill?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. The committee gave very careful consideration to this bill; the hearings are contained in a fairly good-sized volume, and it has been favorably reported by the unanimous vote of the committee. The bill is wholly nonpartisan. It is a businesslike bill; it is trying to put some business methods into this business the Secretary of War is trying to conduct under the mandate of Congress.

In the last 30 months, gentlemen, this little barge line, with its poor facilities and under all the difficulties with which it has been surrounded, has saved to the shippers of the country the sum of $2,123,770 in freight rates. You understand, I suppose, that the barge lines carry freight at 80 per cent of the parallel rail rate, and the parallel rail rate along the Mississippi River is only about 60 per cent of the average freight rate of the country. So you can see what a saving it means to the shippers of the country to be able to use these facilities of water transportation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that people away from the river get the benefit of those reduced rates on freight that goes over the river?

Mr. DENISON. That is true. There is an immense amount of wheat that comes in from Kansas, Nebraska, and Iowa. It is shipped to St. Louis, and is there transhipped to the barges, and then it goes down the river for shipment to other parts of the world. The McCormick Harvester Co. is using the barge line very extensively now to ship their products to all parts of the world. As I said a moment ago, freight is being carried from practically every congressional district between the western border of Pennsylvania and the Rocky Mountains. They are all using this barge line in order to get the advantage of the cheap freight rates.

Now, the value of this matter is this: The Government is carrying on a pioneering enterprise in water transportation. We are carrying on an experiment. We are trying to demonstrate to the people of the country the efficiency, the value, the practicability, and the economy of water transportation. However, there are certain problems connected with water transportation which must be solved before private capital will invest in water transportation facilities. Those problems are so difficult and so great that it is the judgment of those who have made a study of this subject that the Government itself must solve them before private capital will again become interested.

Now, that is what we are trying to do. We have expert men handling these barge systems; they are working on the problems that are preventing the rehabilitation of water transportation; and just as soon as we can work those things out and solve those problems there is no doubt at all but that the private capital of the country will seek this investment and put transportation back on the rivers of the country just as fast as we can go ahead and complete the navigable channels.

Let me tell you what some of those problems are, if I have the time to do so: In the first place, before we can get transportation back on the rivers of the country we have to complete the navigable channels.

We have to have navigable channels, and the Government is carrying on that work from time to time; what we ought to do is to see that it is done as systematically and as rapidly as possible, because we can never restore transportation to the rivers until we complete the navigable channels. That is the first thing.

The next problem to work out is appropriate equipment. You have to have one sort of facility for the Mississippi River, for instance, and it takes an entirely different facility for the Warrior River, and it will take a different kind of a boat or barge for the Missouri River, and perhaps a different kind for the Ohio River. The Warrior River has 17 locks and only barges of a certain type can go through the locks. The upper Mississippi River has a certain depth of channel. The barges that are suitable for the lower Mississippi will not be suitable for the upper Mississippi. All these problems have to be worked out by engineers and require experimentation, and that is what we are doing.

Private capital can not afford to take the chances of loss in the working out of these problems, and our engineers are working on them. We have lost some money in the process of developing these things. We have built barges and found out after they were built they were not properly adapted to the place where they were to be used and could not be used there. There are immense engineering problems that must be worked out and that is one of the things the Government is undertaking to do in the operation of this barge system on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers. That is the second problem.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the parallel railroad rates along the Mississippi are only 60 per cent of the regular rates?

Mr. DENISON. Of the average rail rates of the interior.
Mr. LINTHICUM. Only 60 per cent of them?
Mr. DENISON. Yes.
Mr. LINTHICUM. Then the balance of it has to be made up from the interior parts of the country?
Mr. DENISON. That is exactly true. That suggests another one of our problems, and that is the difficult one. That is the thing, gentlemen of the committee, that really stands in the way of rehabilitating water transportation.
Transportation was driven off of the river by the railroads years ago.
Mr. LINTHICUM. Will it not be driven off again if that situation continues?
Mr. DENISON. We are hoping not. That is one of the problems that is up to Congress to solve. Years ago the Government permitted the railroads to reduce the rates along the rivers so that gradually transportation was driven off of the rivers. Of course, the interior of the country pays the loss back to the railroads. That is the system that has become entrenched, and private individuals can not dislodge it. It is a problem for the Government to solve and that is one of the things this barge service is now undertaking to do.
In the first place, you have got to have interchange rates between the railroads and the rivers, and the railroads are reluctant to give up any part of their business to a water transportation system; generally they will not do it unless they are made to do it. Some of them are voluntarily doing it now, but only a very few, and therefore it is up to the Government, I think, to take such proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission as will compel proper interchange arrangements with the railroads.
Then there is the further question of a proper division of the joint rates between rail and water transportation facilities. That is a problem that requires proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission. It will take several years to work it out, but until all these problems are solved, private capital will not invest in expensive transportation facilities on the rivers. [Applause].
The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MICHENER). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. By consent of the committee, the opposition time is to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. Mr. GARRETT has requested that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], a member of the committee, be recognized to control the time, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].
Mr. RAINEY. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] yielded the time to me.
The CHAIRMAN. By consent of the House, then, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] for 30 minutes.
Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened with great interest to the explanation of this bill and the necessity for it given by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]. I am an enthusiastic advocate of river transportation. I have for 20 years voted for every river and harbor bill presented to the Congress and for every proposition remotely connected with transportation by water in this country, and I am going to vote for this measure. But I conceive that I can render the best service in this matter at this time by calling attention to the failures of this service and to the reasons for the failures.
I know I can not amend this bill. I know it can not be defeated in this House, and I do not want to defeat it, but I want to put in the RECORD some facts that may lead to a material reformation of the bill when it reaches the Senate.
I agree with everything my colleague has said as to the necessity for developing the rivers and as to the approaching possibilities of river transportation, but this bill in its present form and under the present method of controlling these barges will, I think, result in injury rather than benefit to this service. I want now to call attention to some of the losses which have been sustained through the operation of these barge lines. It is true, as has been stated by my colleague, that nearly every congressional district in the Mississippi River Valley has contributed freight to this barge line.
It is true that a substantial saving has been made, just as he has stated, to the shippers of freight, but I want to tell you how much it has cost the Government to do it. According to the evidence submitted and the report of the committee, the loss of operating these barges on the lower Mississippi River, counting the loss during the war, is $1,320,000. The loss of operating these barges on the Warrior River, including the loss during the war, is $1,783,000, making a total loss of operating the barge lines on these two rivers up to date, according to the testimony of the Secretary of War, $3,103,000. This does not include interest on the amount that the Government has invested in barges, nor on the losses it has sustained. We can add to this total a million dollars, if we compute the interest at the rate of 4½ per cent.
In addition to that the Government has loaned to cities along the route of these barges $887,000 for the purpose of assisting these cities in erecting river terminals. Of course, if the barge service is not a success, the Government will not get any of that money back, although it goes as a loan. That makes $887,000 additional. In other words, estimating now the losses from operating these barge lines, the total loss will be $4,990,000, or, in round numbers, $5,000,000. This does not account for all of it, because they have been buying other equipment as it has been offered them. I do not know how much they own now and the hearings do not disclose, but a careful audit as to the method of conducting these barge lines will disclose that probably the Government's loss up to this time is $7,000,000 or $8,000,000.
Now, this bill authorizes an appropriation of $5,000,000. Unless this amount is appropriated this transportation service must stop, because it has failed. In other words, we will be asked to appropriate in order to continue the lines in service as much as I have shown we have already lost, and this will be necessary in order to continue the barge lines for a certain period in the future—and I do not believe under the present management they will run for five years. If the bill is passed, we are to promote a colonel of the Coast Artillery, who is now in charge of the operations of the barge line, over all other officers and give him the rank of a major general of the Army and his salary.
Mr. SHALLENBERGER. A brigadier general.
Mr. RAINEY. A brigadier general, with a salary of $10,000, ignoring the engineers of the service who have usually been connected with the operation of rivers. I know that we could take an engineer if we wanted to.
Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RAINEY. I will.
Mr. WINSLOW. I am not offering anything in opposition to what the gentleman is saying, but I want to find out if he really had in mind that the bill contemplated the appropriation of $5,000,000 in real money.
Mr. RAINEY. Yes; it does.
Mr. WINSLOW. Hardly.
Mr. RAINEY. What kind of money is it going to be?
Mr. WINSLOW. The proposition is to take the property that is floating around in the assets of the War Department, bring them together and transfer as a matter of bookkeeping to the corporation which will have the keeping of the $5,000,000. Nobody ever expected $5,000,000 new money would be appropriated. It will be an accounting matter, and only a small part of the $5,000,000 will be needed in cash, and then not all at one time. It authorizes the use of that money, the purpose being to make the corporation an institution that can borrow money in time of a shortage and relieve the situation, and not to come to Congress to get money when it needs it, as it might take three months' time.
Mr. RAINEY. It will probably result in a Government appropriation very soon, because no private party is going to loan on a losing proposition any amount of money.
Mr. WINSLOW. I am not going to argue the matter with the gentleman. I am telling him what the bill means.
Mr. RAINEY. I am obliged to the gentleman for his contribution to my speech, and he always makes a valuable contribution whenever he interrupts.
Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RAINEY. I will.
Mr. DENISON. In reference to what the gentleman said about appointing a colonel of the Coast Artillery.
Mr. RAINEY. I said you could appoint an engineer if you wanted to do it.
Mr. DENISON. The promotion of the engineer during the management of this concern only means a nominal increase. It is an increase in quarters, because he has reached the point where his salary would be about the same.
Mr. RAINEY. That is immaterial, I do not care anything about that. It is not important, but there are other matters exceedingly important.
Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RAINEY. I yield.
Mr. WILLIAMSON. The gentleman has mentioned certain leases, including leases during the period of the war. Do I understand from the gentleman that he contends these barge lines on the Mississippi have been running at a loss since the war?

Mr. RAINEY. I think they have; yes—oh, yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I thought it was stated that they have been running at a loss on the Warrior River, but that they were making money on the Mississippi.

Mr. RAINEY. The report makes that statement, but it does not comply with what the Secretary in his testimony has said. Of course, the greatest losses were during the war, and occasionally for a month or two when the river is high they run at a profit when they have made prior arrangements for freight.

Mr. DENISON. Oh, the gentleman is entirely wrong. The only time when they lost money was when the river got so low that a barge was hung up and they sustained a loss, but nearly always when no accident of that kind happened they made a handsome profit for the Government.

Mr. RAINEY. Part of the time they made a profit and part of the time they sustained a loss, and the losses exceeded the profits; and the losses I have stated correctly, according to the testimony of the Secretary of War. This is the reason why they have not succeeded better; we constructed these barges as they construct barges on the slack-water canals and rivers, and lake systems of New York. We had that kind of an engineer. He constructed that kind of barges. These barges were intended to operate and carry full loads in a channel 8 feet deep between St. Louis and Cairo. According to the testimony of Colonel Ashburn, the boats when loaded drew 8 feet 3 inches. In other words, they deliberately designed boats for use on the lower Mississippi between St. Louis and Cairo which could not operate on the lower Mississippi between those cities because they drew too much water. In order to meet this situation—and this was a serious mistake—it has become necessary for this service to run shuttle boats between St. Louis and Cairo during a large portion of the time, according to the testimony of the Secretary, and then transfer the barge to the deeper-draft Government propelling boats, and this involves much additional expense. In addition, these barges are built with what we call a bluff bow or slack-water bow, and when you try to propel a barge of that kind upstream it meets with a tremendous pressure from the current of the river as it flows on down toward the sea. As a result, the operation is slower and it costs more money. The Government steamers which were built—and there are 40 of these barges and 6 of these steamers—the steamers were all built with screw propeller of the tunnel type. On the Mississippi River, as any Mississippi River pilot will tell you, they must follow the channel, either in going up or down the river. That channel winds back and forth. The driftwood on the river also follows the channel, and the driftwood becomes entangled in these propellers, which are on each side and on the end of the boat, and that causes trouble. So these boats were improperly designed and constructed in about every other particular, in addition to the fact that they were constructed so that they drew more water than there was in the river.

The Secretary of War has been endeavoring to make a demonstration as to the possible success of barge service on the Mississippi River with the result I have indcated so far in my remarks.

I call attention to another feature of this problem. In the report submitted with this bill I find the following language:

> During the war the Government entered into a contract with a private individual in St. Louis for the operation of a system of barges on the upper Mississippi above St. Louis. Under the terms of the contract, the Government was to construct the barges and towboats and turn them over to this individual to be operated between St. Louis and St. Paul. It was thought advisable at that time that this service be inaugurated for the purpose of bringing ore from the North to St. Louis and transporting coal from St. Louis to the North.

I do not know where my colleague obtained that information. I can not find it in the hearings, and I ask him now where he obtained the facts on which he bases that statement?

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman mean with reference to what it was used for?

Mr. RAINEY. No; in reference to the contract under which the barges were seized, being entered into during the war.

Mr. DENISON. Does my colleague have reference to the date of the contract?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; in the report it is simply said that during the war the Government entered into a contract with a private individual in St. Louis.

Mr. DENISON. I do not know that I could put my finger on where I got the information, but I understood that he entered into that contract during the war.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It was made with Mr. Goltra during the war. Mr. Goltra appeared before the committee and made his statement.

Mr. RAINEY. But you did not get it from him.

Mr. DENISON. I have the information from other sources; I could not state where.

Mr. McKEOWN. Was that the controversy out of which they were trying to put a man in jail for contempt of court?

Mr. RAINEY. No; I do not think anybody was put in jail. I have here a photostat copy of the contract, and it was made on the 28th of May, 1919, after the war was over. This is the contract under which these boats were being operated at that time, and it was not made during the war. I have a photostat copy of that contract here.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It was made under the war administration by the Secretary of War.

Mr. RAINEY. It was made after the war was over.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Under the war powers given the Director of Railroads.

Mr. RAINEY. It was made on the 28th of May, 1919, and the war ended on the 11th of November, 1918. I want to tell now how this happened and something about the seizure of these boats and something about the boats themselves. During the war the War Department found itself short of 4,000,000 tons of pig iron. We were preparing for a war of long duration. At first we expected it to last 11 years, and they were short 4,000,000 tons of pig iron, and the existing facilities were not sufficient to manufacture 4,000,000 tons additional of pig iron. Therefore they commenced to look about to see how it could be done. They found that the Mississippi Valley Iron Co., operated in St. Louis, was the only company with which they could enter into a contract, and so they called Mr. Goltra, who was at the head of that company, to come here to Washington and talk the matter over. He agreed to produce that amount of pig iron by assembling at St. Louis iron ore from the Mesaba Range and coking coal from West Virginia, using the rivers.

And the Government agreed to build four blast furnaces in St. Louis in addition to the blast-furnace equipment the Mississippi Valley Co. already had. So that this contract the Government entered into required the building of 19 barges and 4 propelling steamers. Then the war ended abruptly, and the Government never built the blast furnaces, but the Government was committed to contracts which involved the completion of these barges and these propelling steamers at an expense of $3,860,000. Mr. Goltra was entirely relieved from his contract; there was nothing else for the Government to do; and so the officials of this Government sent for him. He came and finally, as a result of their solicitation, he agreed to take off their hands these 19 barges and 4 propelling steamers at the time of their completion. That was the occasion of this contract. I have it here. Under this contract he agreed to give bond for $300,000 and to take these barges and operate them as a common carrier on the rivers. Then he agreed to take all the profits from the operation of these barges and deposit them in such banks as the Government might indicate, these banks to be bonded. He was not to get a dollar out of this contract; he took the chances of loss. He was compelled to keep the boats insured against destruction from fire and all kinds of accidents, including collisions, and he was required to keep up this equipment as the Government might dictate and to operate the boats as a common carrier, and to put every dollar of the net profits in such bonded banks as the Government might indicate, to remain there for a period of five years, and at the expiration of that five years, if he earned a profit equal to $3,860,000 and the interest on it—he was to be charged 4 per cent interest during all of that time—that amount would be applied to the payment of the barges, and the barges were to be his if he wanted them. If that much money was not deposited out of the profits at the end of the five years, there was to be an appraisal of these barges to determine their value at the time, and he was to have the option of taking the barges at the appraised value. He entered into a bond of $800,000 to carry out this contract. Now, that looked fair enough. It was not going to cost the Government a dollar.

Mr. Goltra is a successful business man. He has had to do with large enterprises, and he could make this a success if anybody could. If he does not make it any more of a success than the Government in operating these barges, he stands to lose three or four million dollars in the next four or five years. I want to tell you what happened after this contract was made. After this contract was entered into and the barges were completed and delivered to him he went to the Secretary of War and told him he was ready to operate as a common carrier and asked the Secretary of War what rate he could have as a common carrier—and I will print in the RECORD this original contract to show what the terms are—and the Secretary said to him, "I want you to operate these boats on the upper Mississippi River alone." This contract provides he can operate on the Mississippi River or any of its tributaries. He started in to operate on the upper Mississippi River and did operate successfully there. While the Government barges could not be operated successfully on the deeper depths of the lower river he was making a success on the upper river. He was making a success of it because these barges, when they are loaded to carry 1,300 tons, draw 5 feet of water, and when the Government barges are loaded with 1,300 tons they carry 7 feet of water; and, as my colleague has stated, the Government must have different kinds of barges to use on different rivers. These barges will operate on any of the inland rivers. Finally he got the Secretary to agree to let him operate as a common carrier on the lower river at 20 per cent below the rail rate, provided he carries only coal, sand, oil, and one or two other commodities of that kind. The Secretary agreed that he could operate there as a common carrier and carry package freight or anything he wanted to carry, but not at 20 per cent less than the rail rate. He must carry those things at the rail rate; and there is plenty of evidence I can find for this statement—he must operate at the rail rate. The reason for it, of course, is apparent; there can not be any question about what the reason for it was; these Government barges had failed.

They had tried to make it a success by operating the Government barges with a shuttle boat connecting with the barges at the greater depths of the lower river at Cairo. The Goltra boats could run through from Minneapolis or from St. Louis and then on down the lower stretch of the river to New Orleans at all seasons of the year and carry 1,300 tons on each barge each trip. The Goltra barges were built as he wanted them built. He knew something about operating boats on rivers. He had made a demonstration in 1917 for the Government by taking the old barges and running them up to Minneapolis and back again. This was an expensive process. It cost him over $12,000 to do it. So he knew something about building barges for use on the Mississippi River. During the war he suggested these barges be built not with the blunt, bluff bows, but with what is known as spoon-shaped bows. The current strikes that oval part of a barge of this type and then slips off on either side. They built the propelling towboats with stern wheels to keep them from being injured by driftwood. If a successful demonstration were to be made at all with barges on the Mississippi River, it must be made with the Goltra barges. But in spite of all these difficulties placed in his way by the War Department, and this is one objection to operating a utility of this kind by the Government, in spite of all this, he was quite ready to operate these barges, even though he was not permitted to carry at 20 per cent less than the rail rate, but was required to carry the valuable package freight at the rail rate, and the Secretary has testified that is where the profit is. That is part of the record. Now, bear in mind this contract which permitted him to operate as a common carrier on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, gave the Secretary of War the right to fix rates, and the Secretary of War said to him:

> You can not operate as a common carrier unless you operate with these more valuable freights at exactly the rail rates.

I want to read to you an extract from a notice served on Mr. Goltra on the 3d day of March, 1923:

> You are hereby notified that in my judgment you have not complied with the terms and conditions of said contracts in that you have failed to operate the said towboats and barges as a common carrier and in other particulars.

Now, the Secretary states in his testimony that "he was advised that this was the case." Mr. Goltra replied at once to the notice and refused to return the barges. Then they waited, Colonel Ashburn, of the Coast Survey, until the 25th day of March, and that was Sunday. On that day, with revolvers strapped about him, Colonel Ashburn, at the head of 42 armed men, boarded the Goltra barges, drove his captains and men off, and captured the barges, and moved them to the other side of the river, where, he was advised, they would be out of the jurisdiction of the court in St. Louis and where writs could not be served on him. A writ was served on him, however. He refused to accept it, and they threw it down at his feet. The court ordered the barges returned, but he did not bring them back to the jurisdiction of the court until April 20 following. Then he brought them back. He applied for a writ of prohibition, and the case was argued here before the Supreme Court of the United States, and I have here the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States. The opinion was rendered on the 10th day of December last, refusing a writ of prohibition and confirming the jurisdiction of the courts in St. Louis.

These barges and towboats are still held by the Government. We are operating these Government barges for the purpose of making a demonstration that barge service on rivers can be successful—for the purpose of inviting private capital to enter into this service on the rivers and to finally take over these barges. But with armed men the War Department drove from the Goltra barges the captains and the crews employed by Mr. Goltra. Is this the way to get private capital to invest in boats for our rivers?

EXTRACT

1. This lease, made this 28th day of May, 1919, between the United States of America, represented by Major General William M. Black, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, directed by the Secretary of War so to represent the United States, hereinafter designated as the lessor, party of the first part, and Edward F. Goltra, of the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri, hereinafter designated as the lessee, his heirs, executors, and administrators, party of the second part, witnesseth that—

Whereas the party of the second part at the request of certain Government officials as an emergency of war, in order to increase the output of pig iron, made certain arrangements for iron ore and coal properties with a view to producing pig iron at St. Louis, Missouri; and

Whereas the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation allotted to the Chief of Engineers the sum of $3,860,000 for the construction of a fleet of towboats and barges for the primary purpose of transporting the said iron and coal to and from St. Louis, Missouri; and

Whereas on the 1st day of August, 1918, the United States of America entered into contracts for the construction of nineteen barges suitable to use for the transportation of said iron ore and coal; and

Whereas the United States of America is about to construct by contract or otherwise a fleet of towboats for the purpose of towing the said barges, the construction of which in the opinion of the Secretary of War is necessary to enable the Government to dispose of the said barges more advantageously; and

Whereas the said fleet of towboats and barges is especially designed for and adapted to the transportation of iron ore and coal; and

Whereas the said lessee has entered into various engagements and undertakings to increase the pig iron supply as a war measure, which may have created, and according to the contention of the lessee did create, obligations on the part of the United States to the said lessee, but which he entirely releases and discharges in part consideration of this lease, which engagements, undertakings, and lease are in furtherance of the original design for the assembling of coal and iron ore at St. Louis, Missouri, and for the increase of pig iron facilities.

Now, therefore, the said lessor doth hereby charter and lease unto the said lessee for a term of five (5) years, beginning with the date of delivery to the lessee of the first barge or towboat and terminating five (5) years after the delivery of the first barge or towboat the following-described property, viz:

Nineteen barges which are being constructed under contracts dated August 1, 1918, with the Marietta Manufacturing Company, of Point Pleasant, W. Va., the Dravo Contracting Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and the Dubuque Boat & Boiler Works, of Dubuque, Iowa, and three or four towboats about to be constructed and described in accordance with specifications prepared or to be prepared therefor.

It is thereupon covenanted and agreed between the said parties as follows:

2. (a) That the said lessee shall operate as a common carrier the said fleet of three or four towboats and nineteen barges upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries for the period of the lease and of any renewals thereof, transporting iron ore, coal, and other commodities at rates not in excess of the prevailing rail tariffs, and not less than the prevailing rail tariffs without the consent of the Secretary of War; but nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent the most profitable and most advantageous use of said vessels being made provided the Secretary of War consents to such use other than as a common carrier.

(b) That the lessee shall pay all operating expenses of the fleet and maintain, during the continuance of the lease, each towboat and barge of the fleet in good operating condition to the satisfaction of the lessor, and shall hold the United States entirely free from all liabilities and indebtedness of every kind in connection with the operation, care, and maintenance of the entire fleet and all its engines, boilers, outfit, tackle, apparel, furniture, and appurtenances; and the lessee shall, without unnecessary delay, as soon as he acquires any knowledge thereof, discharge any and all maritime liens that may at any time during the continuance of this lease from any cause arise against or become impressed upon any one, any or all of the fleet of nineteen barges and three or four towboats. The lessee shall procure and take out for the benefit of the United States insurance, both fire and marine, in such an amount as in the judgment of the Secretary of War each of the vessels may require and with such underwriters or in such companies as are approved by the lessor, insuring each and every one of the barges and towboats against physical injury to them, or any of them, and against the loss of any or all of the barges and towboats hereby leased. The lessee shall likewise procure and take out fire, marine, and towers liability insurance in such an amount as in the judgment of the Secretary of War each of the vessels may require with such underwriters or in such companies as shall be approved by the lessor, and for the benefit of the United States, insuring each of the vessels against such injury as may be inflicted by such vessel upon other property, such as might result in maritime liens, or in liability or obligation by the lessor and, if the lessor shall require, execute and deliver to the lessor a bond in the penal sum of three hundred thousand ($300,000.00) dollars, conditioned to protect the United States against such liability or obligation and against any and all maritime or other liens against the fleet or any of the vessels of the fleet and against any and all depreciation in value of all or any of said vessels, by reason of maritime or other liens arising or becoming impressed upon them or any of them. Such bonds as in any part of this contract are required to be given by the lessee for the benefit of the United States shall always and at all times during the continuance of this lease be kept good and shall be replaced at any time by other good and sufficient bonds at the request of the lessor, and they shall be kept good not only against the impaired credit or financial responsibility of the obligor or surety, but also against partial depletion or entire exhaustion thereof brought about by the payment of losses or indemnities thereunder.

(b-1) All salvage earned, to which any of the said fleet shall become entitled, shall be for the benefit of the United States, after deducting all expenses incident thereto and the proportion due to the master, officers, and crew.

(c) For the protection of persons furnishing materials, services, and labor in connection with the operation, furnishing, repair, care, and maintenance of the said towboats and barges the lessee shall furnish to the lessor and continue in effect during the period of the lease, and in case of sale until title passes to the purchaser, a good and sufficient bond, approved by the lessor, in the penal sum of two hundred thousand ($200,000) dollars.

3. The net earnings above operating expenses and maintenance for each and every ton of cargo moved and all other net earnings shall be turned over by the lessee to the Secretary of War as soon as practicable after each proper determination of the amount thereof, but at least every ninety days, for deposit with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of the Secretary of War in a special deposit account and shall continue so to be turned over to him and so deposited by him until such time as said net earnings shall equal the full amount of the cost of the several vessels of the fleet plus interest on said cost at 4 per cent per annum computed from the respective dates of delivery of the several vessels of the fleet and that thereafter all net earnings over and above the full amount of the said cost of the several vessels of the fleet, plus interest on said cost at 4 per cent per annum, shall be deposited to the credit of the Secretary of War at least every 90 days by the lessee in one or more national banks in St. Louis, Missouri, to be designated by the lessor, to be held for the fulfillment of the terms of this lease, provided that earnings derived from the transportation of commodities in barges hereby leased, moved by towboats not furnished by the United States, shall until all vessels of the Government fleet are delivered to the lessee be subject to deduction of cost of the hire of the necessary towboats to move said barges, in addition to any other operating expenses and maintenance in connection therewith.

The lessee shall keep accurate detailed accounts of all tonnage moved and of all moneys received and due and of all items of operating costs, and his accounts shall at all times be subject to inspection by the lessor or his representatives. The overhead expenses included in operating costs shall be subject to the approval of the lessor, and any items not approved by him and to which the lessee may object and take exception shall be referred to the Secretary of War, whose decision shall be final.

4. The approved national banks shall be required to furnish good and sufficient bonds, approved by the lessor, in penal sum in amounts at least equal to the sum deposited, conditioned for the safety of the funds held on deposit, as provided in this lease, said bonds to be delivered to the custody of the lessor and to be maintained during the period of deposit. The said banks shall credit to the account interest at the local prevailing rates of nonchecking accounts.

5. Within three months prior to the expiration of the lease, or of any period of renewal, or sooner if so desired by the lessee, a board of three persons shall be appointed, one to be designated by the lessor, one by the lessee, and one by the said two members, unless they shall fail to agree, in which case the third member shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, all of whom shall be familiar with the construction and cost of river vessels of steel and with the current market values thereof, to appraise the value of the said fleet at that time, and the said lessee shall be given the option of purchasing the fleet upon the following terms:

(a) If the funds turned over to the Secretary of War and deposited by him with the Treasurer of the United States, under section 3 of this lease, shall aggregate a sum equal to the full amount of the cost of the several vessels of the fleet, plus interest on said cost at 4 per cent per annum as aforesaid, then in case of the exercise of said option by the lessee said funds shall be applied to payment in full for the fleet, and any net earnings over and above the amount required for such payment on deposit in said bank or banks, provided in section 3 of the lease, or otherwise held on deposit, shall be paid to the lessee.

(b) If the funds turned over to the Secretary of War and by him deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, under section 3 of this lease, shall be less than the full amount of the cost, plus accrued interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum on such cost, but greater than the appraised value, the funds shall in said event be applied to payment of the fleet at the appraised value, and any amount in excess of the appraised value shall be retained by the Secretary of War for the use and benefit of the United States; and the fleet shall thereupon become the property of the lessee.

(c) If the funds turned over to the Secretary of War and by him deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, as provided by section 3 of this lease, shall be less than the appraised value, then in the event aforesaid such funds shall be applied to the payment of the fleet so far as they shall reach, and the lessee shall pay in addition thereto, in the manner specified in section 6 hereof, the amount whereby the aggregate funds so turned over to the Secretary of War fall short of the said appraised value.

6. It is further covenanted and agreed that the method of payment of any amount which the purchaser shall be required to pay, and not provided for out of the sums deposited to the credit of the Secretary of War, shall be as follows:

There shall be sixteen (16) payments. The first shall consist of all moneys on deposit to the credit of the Secretary of War, as indicated above, and shall be so applied at the date of the sale. The lessee shall execute for the balance fifteen (15) promissory notes, in equal amount, payable at the expiration of one year, two years, three years, etc., from date of sale, with interest at 4 per cent per annum. Title to the property shall remain in the United States until the payment of the whole of the purchase price of said property.

7. It is understood and agreed that the lessee assumes full responsibility for the safety of his employees, plant, and materials, and the said nineteen barges and three or four towboats, and for any damage or injury done by or to them and from any source or cause in the operation of the fleet.

8. The lessor reserves the right to inspect the plant, fleet, and work at any time to see that all the said terms and conditions of this lease are fulfilled, and that the crews and other employees are promptly paid, monthly or oftener; and noncompliance, in his judgment, with any of the terms or conditions will justify his terminating the lease and returning the plant and said barges and towboats to the lessor, and all moneys in the Treasury or in bank to the credit of the Secretary of War shall be deemed rentals earned by and due to the lessor for the use of said vessels.

9. In the performance of the conditions of this lease, the employment of persons undergoing sentences of imprisonment at hard labor which have been imposed by courts of the several States, Territories, or municipalities having criminal jurisdiction is prohibited.

10. No Member or Delegate to Congress or Resident Commissioner, nor any person belonging to or employed in the military service of the United States, is or shall be admitted to any share or part of this contract, or to any benefit which may arise herefrom; but under the provisions of section 116 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stats. 1109), this stipulation, so far as it relates to Members of or Delegates to Congress or Resident Commissioners, shall not extend or be construed to extend to any contract made with an incorporated company for its general benefit.

In witness whereof the parties aforesaid have hereunto placed their signatures the date first hereinbefore written.

It is further understood and agreed between the said William M. Black, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and Edward F. Goltra, parties of the first part and of the second part, respectively, of the above contract, that the number of towboats to be supplied under the above contract, denominated "three or four" therein, shall be at least three, and that a fourth shall be supplied only in the event that four suitable towboats of the general type and power described in the request for proposals now being canvassed for four towboats for the upper Mississippi River can be obtained with the funds available as specified in the second whereas of the above contract, and not otherwise.

Whereas on the twenty-eighth day of May, 1919, a contract was entered into between Major General W. M. Black, Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army, who, as well as his legally appointed successor, is hereinafter designated as the lessor, representing the United States of America, of the first part, and Edward F. Goltra, of the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, hereinafter designated as the lessee, of the second part, for chartering and leasing unto the lessee for a term of five years, subject to renewals, nineteen (19) barges and four (4) towboats, belonging to the United States.

And whereas it is found advantageous and in the best interest of the United States to modify the said contract as hereinafter specified, for the following reasons:

To more fully provide for the operation of the said barges and towboats as a common carrier by providing unloading facilities at St. Louis, Mo., by the use of funds remaining from the allotment of $3,860,000.00 from the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, and to provide for the sale of the said unloading facilities to the lessee under certain conditions.

Now, therefore, the said contract is, by this supplemental agreement between Maj. Gen. Lansing H. Beach, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and the said contractor, on this 26th day of May, 1921, hereby modified in the following particulars, but in no others:

The lessee will, at his own expense, within eight months from the date hereof provide the necessary tract of land and runway on which the said unloading facilities are to be erected, stand, and operate, said tract to be selected by the lessor, subject to approval by the lessee, and said runway to be built according to plans submitted by lessee and approved by the lessor.

The lessor will erect on the said tract of land an unloading apparatus or facilities of a kind and character mutually agreed to by lessor and lessee as sufficient and adequate to handle the cargoes to be transported by the said barges and towboats.

The said lessee shall, at his expense, maintain and operate the said unloading facilities in connection with the barges and towboats as a common carrier, subject to such charges for services of loading and unloading as may be approved by the Secretary of War.

The said lessee shall take out and maintain for the benefit of the United States insurance in such amount and with such companies as may be approved by the lessor.

The terms of the original lease as to net earnings (par. 3), appraisement and option to purchase, and conditions of purchase (par. 5), method of payment in the event of purchase (par. 6), inspection (par. 8), shall govern so far as applicable and pertinent to the said unloading facilities.

In case the said lessee, his heirs, administrators, executors, or assigns does not take over and pay for the said unloading facilities according to the aforesaid terms, then and in that case the lessor may, without let or hindrance by the said lessee, his heirs, administrators, executors, or assigns, take said unloading facilities in the same manner as is provided in the original lease as to the barges and towboats; or

In case the lessor does not desire to remove the said unloading facilities under the preceding paragraph the lessor shall have the right to lease the land and runways on which the unloading facilities stand for five years with the privilege of renewals, the terms of such lease, if not mutually agreed to by the lessor and lessee, to be fixed by a board of three persons, one member to be selected by the lessor, one member by the lessee, and one member by agreement between the two aforesaid members.

This supplemental agreement shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

In witness whereof the parties aforesaid have hereunto placed their signatures at the time of execution of this agreement.

Supreme Court of the United States

(No. 23, original—October term, 1923)

In the matter of the petition of the United States of America, as owner of 19 barges and 4 towboats. (December 10, 1923.)

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court.

Motion on part of the United States, as asserted owner of 19 barges and 4 towboats, praying a writ of prohibition to be directed to the Hon. C. B. Faris, a judge of the district court, eastern division of the eastern judicial district of Missouri, and the other judges thereof, to prohibit him and them from asserting and exercising jurisdiction in a certain suit brought March 25, 1923, by Edward F. Goltra against John W. Weeks, Secretary of War, and other officers of the United States, in which it was averred that a contract was made between the United States, represented by Maj. Gen. William M. Black, Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, as lessor, and Goltra, as lessee, whereby the boats and barges (then under construction by the United States) were leased and chartered to Goltra for the period of five years from the date of delivery of the boats and barges to him, Goltra, upon the payment of certain periodical rentals and a compliance by Goltra with other terms and conditions.

The suit by Goltra, the pleadings in which are detailed in the petition, was brought to determine his rights under the contract and a supplement to it.

The contract was preceded by negotiations between Goltra and representatives of the Government, particularly with the War Department and the then Secretary of War, which included, among other things, the construction of a fleet of towboats and barges in the then emergency of war. But after the signing of the armistice and the emergency of war had ceased, other negotiations were had between Goltra and the War Department and the Secretary of War, and a lease was made—the contract above—whereby the boats and barges were leased to Goltra, by him to be operated on the Mississippi River and its tributaries as a common carrier, he to pay all operating expenses, to take out fire and marine insurance, and incur and discharge other obligations.

On May 28, 1919, the supplement to the contract was entered into between Major General Beach, then Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, the successor of Black.

On March 3, 1923, Weeks, as Secretary of War, undertook to cancel the contract for the noncompliance by Goltra, as lessee, with its terms and conditions, and demanded the return of the boats and barges to the United States; and the defendants, on March 25, 1923, unlawfully took possession of some and were about to take possession of the remainder of them.

There was a prayer by Goltra for a temporary restraining order against such action or against any action interfering with his possession. There was also a prayer for a temporary injunction against any act whatsoever looking to the cancellation and termination of the lease or the retaking of the boats and barges taken before the attempted cancellation of the contract. The prayer was that upon final hearing a decree be entered in favor of Goltra to determine his rights under the contract and to perpetually enjoin the defendants from interfering in any way with his rights thereunder.

A mandatory order was issued as prayed, and an order to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be issued.

In response to the order to show cause, the Attorney General filed suggestions against the jurisdiction of the court, and subsequently the other defendants made returns to the order averring that the suit was in purpose and effect one against the United States and its property.

A motion was made in accordance with the representations. It was overruled and the defendants granted time to plead.

It is alleged in the petition that, unless restrained, the district court judge will proceed with the cause and issue an injunction as prayed by Goltra, and that such order will deprive the United States of the possession and use of boats and barges of the value, approximately, of $3,800,000.

Prohibition was prayed as above stated.

The return of Judge Faris to the petition concedes some of its allegations and denies others. It denies the character described to Goltra's suit. It alleges that there is a right of possession of the boats and barges in Goltra, and that while his bill was in course of preparation the defendants in the suit were proceeding with a large force of men to take from him and remove from St. Louis the boats and barges that remained in his possession. And that the suit was not one against the United States, but against individual defendants who were proceeding in violation of law. And it is averred that there is an adequate remedy by appeal.

The answer of Goltra to the petition is presented with elaborate detail of fact and argument. In foundation and essence it is the same as that of the district court. The opinion of the court, which was oral, is attached to it. The opinion cites that of Judge Baker in United States Harness Co. v. Graham et al., in the District Court for the Northern District of Virginia.

The merits of the case present interesting questions. The question of the remedy is, however, the more insistent. Does the case justify it? Prohibition is a remedy of exigency and in exclusion of other process of relief. It is directed against unwarranted assumptions of jurisdiction or excesses of it. In some cases there may be instant judgment that such is the situation and the writ granted. In other cases there may be doubt and the writ denied. (Ex parte Muir, 254 U. S. 522, 534.) And doubt in the instant case would seem to be justified, for two district courts have decided that under the circumstances such as presented in this case it does not involve or constitute a suit against the United States. And also the writ is to be denied if there be remedy against the action complained of by appeal.

Ex parte Oklahoma (220 U. S. 191) and cases cited is a complete exposition of the writ and its uses. The opinion in that case observed the distinctions of prior cases; that is, that the writ is a remedy against unwarranted assumptions of jurisdiction and that, besides, the condition of its issue is that the party attacking the jurisdiction has no other remedy. In other words, the writ can not be made to perform the office of an appeal or writ of error. Are the decisions applicable here?

There was submitted to the court the contracts and their construction and effect—whether under them the United States or its officers retained property in the boats and barges or whether that property was transferred with the right of possession to Goltra. The court so construed them, adjudging Goltra's right to the property and, necessarily, his right to the possession of it, and that he was entitled to an injunction to protect that possession pending the suit. From that decision there was right of review by appeal, and it would be timely and adequate for relief if the decision were erroneous. (Judicial Code, sec. 129; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Bray (225 U. S. 205, 214); Denver v. New York Trust Co. (229 U. S. 123, 136); Ex parte in the Matter of Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co. (255 U. S. 273).)

Clerk, Supreme Court United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of carrying on the operations of the Government-owned inland, canal, and coastwise waterways system to the point where the system can be transferred to private operation to the best advantage of the Government, of carrying out the mandates of Congress prescribed in section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, as amended, and of carrying out the policy enunciated by Congress in the first paragraph of section 500 of such act, there is hereby created a corporation, in the District of Columbia, to be known as the inland waterways corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "corporation"). The Secretary of War shall be deemed to be the incorporator, and the incorporation shall be held effected upon the enactment of this act. The Secretary of War shall govern and direct the corporation in the exercise of the functions vested in it by this act.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to confine my remarks principally to the objections that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] made to this bill. In the first place, he referred to the fact that Colonel Ashburn, who is to be in charge of this corporation, if the bill passes, is to be made a brigadier general with a salary of $10,000. The salary of $10,000 mentioned in the bill is a civilian's salary; it is the salary paid to the director of traffic that manages and controls the traffic of the corporation. That you undersand, is a technical position and requires men who are thoroughly informed on the matter of securing contracts for traffic and the directing of it. It has no reference to Colonel Ashburn.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The present traffic manager is receiving that salary at the present time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. The present traffic manager is receiving that salary. Colonel Ashburn has been in the service of the United States for 30 years as a commissioned officer. He is entitled under the law to retire at any time he asks for retirement. If he continues in the service, as he will under this act, he will be entitled to all the allowances of a colonel because of his 30 years' service. If he is promoted to the rank of brigadier general during his term of service as chairman of the board, the only thing he will get out of this law is promotion to the rank of brigadier general and $400 increase in pay. He has now been practically four years in charge of this work and has acquired, of course, a great amount of valuable information and experience, which the Government would lose if he is permitted to go back to service with troops. Therefore the committee felt they were warranted in recommending his appointment to this position and his advancement to the rank of brigadier general, because it will add very little to the expense of the Government and will reward an officer who has rendered a great service to the Government.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. What salary is it proposed to pay under this bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. To whom?

Mr. McKEOWN. To the chief operator.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. To the director, $10,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is the gentleman from Nebraska in favor of creating positions that pay salaries higher than that of a Member of Congress?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that this is a position to manage the business affairs of a corporation of $5,000,000 capital and to direct a traffic that affects the welfare of the people of half the States of the Union; and we thought, and I think, that $10,000 as the salary at this time is not too much to pay to the man in that position.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know of any private business of this magnitude that could get a man of the requisite business experience and responsibility for as low a salary?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Well, there are men who are receiving twice as much as this in private employment in positions similar to the one provided for in this bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. I can find 20 who will accept $7,500.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. KING. The gentleman is a Democrat in every sense of the word. I wonder if he does not deprecate this new idea of detailing Army officers to fill civilian positions. Right now one is detailed to be the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Every day we are hearing of these officers being detailed to occupy civilian positions. That has been against the policy of this Government for 50 years.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In answer to that I will say to the gentleman that I am a Democrat, as he says, but in this particular position Colonel Ashburn is a man who has been trained by this Government at our military school; he has been given the highest character of education, both as to engineering and to general education, that the Government can give him, and now we are to get the benefit of that man's ability and the benefit of the training the Government has given him at a salary one-half the salary at which we could expect to get the same character of man from civil life. The Army develops men with the single ambition to serve their country, and that is the spirit that Colonel Ashburn has been showing in this matter.

Mr. KING. And if anything should happen to him another military officer would be appointed in his place.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would be apt to agree with the gentleman if we were simply taking a military officer and placing him untried in this position, but that is not the case in this particular instance. Colonel Ashburn has acquired experience and shown ability that are now invaluable to success of this enterprise.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TILSON in the chair). The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Did the committee consider the expediency of placing the services which are mentioned in this bill in charge of the Department of Commerce, transferring them from the War Department?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Well, we did consider that, but the situation with which we are confronted now is that it is in the hands of the War Department and in the hands of men who have been managing it for four years. They therefore are well equipped to go on with it.

Now, I want to say to the committee that instead of the management proving a failure it has proven a success. It is true that during the war and before Colonel Ashburn came into the management of it we did lose the millions of money to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] has referred. But if you will refer to the report, page 13, you will find that Colonel Ashburn took charge of this corporation, or the operation of this Government activity, in 1920. From January 1, 1921, to June 30, 1921, the barge-line service on the lower Mississippi was operated at a net profit to the Government of $67,170 and a saving to the public in freight rates of $280,700; during the period from July 1 to December 31, 1921, it was operated at a net profit to the Government of $85,262 and a saving to the public in freight rates of $363,300; during the period from January 1 to June 30, 1922, it was operated at a net profit to the Government of $31,924 and a saving to the public in freight rates of $486,700; during the period from January 1 to June 30, 1923, it was operated at a net profit to the Government of $159,499 and a saving to the public in freight rates of $482,000; and even during the period ffom July 1 to December 31, 1923, when the Government lost in operating expenses on account of extreme low water the sum of $200,589, the public saved in reduced freight rates during the same period the sum of $441,000.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Does the gentleman know whether in counting up the question of profit they made any allowance for capital investment or for depreciation?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. But a private business would have to make those allowances.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The fact is that the Government at that time took it over as a war measure; they have it on their hands and they can not sell it for anything like what it cost the Government. The purpose now is to demonstrate to the country the practicability of water-borne freight service. We are operating with the kind of boats the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] stated; they are not the best suited for river traffic, but these and other problems connected with it are being worked out.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Then the gentleman's statement would hardly be accurate that the Government has realized a profit when it has not made any depreciation charge or any charge for capital investment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Perhaps not. I realize that if we were to go into the matter of making charge for interest and depreciation, probably we would not be able to show so much profit, but I have made this statement to show that we have not lost the millions of money stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

I want to say another thing to the committee. It was demonstrated before the committee in its hearings by representatives of the great steel interests and coal interests of Pittsburgh, for instance, that water transportation on the Monongahela River was costing one-sixth of the rate that would have to be paid to the railroads, and representatives of one of the great steel companies of Pittsburgh came before our committee and showed that they were moving freight on the Ohio River at one-third the rate charged by the railroads. But, gentlemen, that cheap freight is all moved upon barges owned by these great corporations; they are not open to the general public, and they are not public carriers. This is an attempt to give the public a chance to enjoy the benefits of reduced rates because of water transportation. This is to demonstrate the value and practicability of inland-water transportation.

I want to call the committee's attention to this fact: That railroad freight-rate reduction is a thing which the public attention is fixed upon now. Water competition is going to have a tremendous effect upon the transportation question and is one of the means whereby we hope to secure that reduction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more, because gentlemen, by their questions, do not give me a chance to explain some matters that I believe the House wants information upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to follow the gentleman for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not make any promises as to recognition.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think the effect of water transportation on railroad transportation has already been demonstrated by the requests of the railroads of the Nation to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Requests were made to the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce freight rates upon commodities essential to life—on coal, foodstuffs, and other essentials. Even the President of the United States asked the railroads to reduce the freight rates upon coal, being a necessity, but the railroad managers refused to grant it. But when water competition, through the Panama Canal, came in direct conflict with coast-to-coast rates upon the railroads, then the railroad corporations of this country came to the Interstate Commerce Commission and asked, upon bended knees, to be allowed to cut freight rates 25 per cent from coast to coast because of water competition. It is to develop the practicability of public carrier service upon the rivers and lakes of the country that we are asking to have this proposition tried out.

Now, as to the conflict with Mr. Goltra. I do not care to discuss that more than to say that it was brought before the committee. As you can see from the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] it is evident that the Government entered into a contract during the war with Mr. Goltra because they thought he could help them out of a certain situation, as the gentleman from Illinois has explained to you. It was to assist the movement of ore and other things necessary for war purposes; but it was demonstrated that Mr. Goltra could not successfully operate boats upon the upper Mississippi River. He said in his testimony that one of the reasons the Government vitiated his contract and seized his boats was because he did not operate them upon the upper Mississippi, that he was five months trying to bring one of those barges, which the gentleman from Illinois referred to, from St. Paul down to St. Louis, and he could not return because it drew too much water. His answer to the complaint of the Government was that he could not move the boats over the upper Mississippi because the Government did not provide him a water channel that would enable him to operate them. There is a conflict between the Government and Mr. Goltra as to his contract. It is in the courts, and the courts must settle it.

Now, the only reason for bringing Colonel Ashburn into this and attacking him is because as the agent of the Government authorized by the Secretary of War he was empowered and directed to seize those boats, and he did seize them, and that is the quarrel between Mr. Goltra and Colonel Ashburn.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill provides for a capitalization of $5,000,000. The chairman of the committee called your attention to the fact that it does not require that the Government shall invest $5,000,000 in cash. That is not contemplated. But this barge property was turned over to Colonel Ashburn without any capital with which to operate. The barges were turned over to him and he is not responsible for the character of those barges. The barges were built by engineers and by Government officials before they were turned over to Colonel Ashburn. The War Department and the Railroad Administration lost money until Ashburn got hold of them.

Since he has had control of this system he has been making money, but the corporation must have capital, as any corporation does transacting the amount of business they handle, and in order to get it he had to go to the banks and borrow it. Therefore we hope now if you will pass this bill to give the corporation sufficient capital so that it will not be put to the point of having to go to borrow money every time the corporation falls short of cash, as any corporation may do in certain periods of its operation.

The $5,000,000 includes the value of all the property it now has in its hands. It may be $2,500,000, or it may be $3,000,000. I do not know what the valuation is, but the entire amount of capital stock that may be issued, taking into consideration all the property we have now, is to be $5,000,000. We do not expect the Government will have to advance more than perhaps $1,000,000 of actual cash at any time to carry on the operation of this corporation, and it is only for five years in order that we may try this matter out. Personally I would like to see the corporation made permanent, but a majority of the committee determined otherwise.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield now.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman whether in figuring the amount of money which the gentleman says has been earned as a profit they have figured anything for depreciation or interest on investment?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I answered that question before. That was figured in, as I recall. I do not know certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I want to take five minutes to explain one or two matters. The Secretary of War in the accounting system of the barge line is carrying this equipment on the books at just what it cost the Government. My friend, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], I think, inadvertently made a misstatement, unless he was thinking of a different thing from that which is in my mind now. We are carrying this equipment under the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission at just what it cost the Government during the war, and it cost about three times what you could replace it for now. In other words, we are carrying it at war prices because the Government acquired it then by either taking it over or building the equipment during the war. Since the time that Colonel Ashburn has had charge of it the Government, with the exception of one period of six months, has made a substantial profit over and above the actual cost of operation, including interest on the investment at war prices and depreciation.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman will permit, I stand corrected. I was not aware of that.

Mr. DENISON. I thought the gentleman was mistaken. They have had to figure out depreciation and have had to figure interest on war prices and, notwithstanding all that, during the first half of 1921 the Government made a net profit of $67,000 and saved to the shippers in reduced freight rates $280,000. During the next half of the year the Government made a net profit of $85,000 and saved to the shippers in reduced freight rates $363,000 plus, and during the next half year they made for the Government, net, over $300,000 profit and saved to the shippers $486,700 in reduced freight rates. I will not repeat further the figures that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] gave you. These are net profits over and above operating costs, interest on investment of something over $13,000,000, and depreciation.

Now, during one-half of one year the Government sustained a heavy loss due to the fact that on one of these trips the barges got hung up on a sand bar south of St. Louis and the Government had no equipment there to take it off. The barge-line service has no "trouble boat" to go to a place where they have trouble and take the barges off a sand bar. The result was they had to unload and thereby sustained a heavy loss.

Now, what we want to do is to secure a boat for that purpose. Let this service secure a boat that will be available to help when a barge is hung up on a sand bar, or for some other reason.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Does the gentleman believe that the operation of this barge line will tend to decrease freight rates throughout the country?

Mr. DENISON. Absolutely; freight is being shipped over this barge line to different points of Texas, and it will tend to reduce the freight rates in Texas.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to state that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who lives on the river, made a statement in the Senate the other day that water transportation tended to decrease freight rates adjacent to that territory; but for railroad points that were not reached by water transportation, in order to make a reasonable return upon the investment, they had to raise the rate for those points.

Mr. DENISON. I was speaking of the territory reached by water transportation. If the Interstate Commerce Commission permits the railroads to do that, the charges will be higher.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I know that I am talking against the interests of my own State.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I want to say to the gentleman that that was under the operation of the section 15a, and after we get that repealed it will not be possible.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would not happen unless it was a competitor that was not competing with river traffic, because the road that reduces the rate would get all the business, and the road that did not would not get any.

Mr. DENISON. That is right.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I was interested in the statement of the gentleman from Nebraska when he stated that the Coastal Transcontinental Line had asked for 25 per cent reduction. Is it the practice, if the gentleman can give us the information, for the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit a line paralleling in successful operation to make a lower rate—does the gentleman know what the practice is?

Mr. DENISON. In former years they did, and that is what drove transportation off the rivers. But we are hoping that the Interstate Commerce Commission will not allow that to be done in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more, and then I will quit. I do not want to take up any more time, but I want to make this statement for the information of the committee: One of these barges on the Mississippi River carries as much freight as you could put into 100 freight cars, and one towboat will take eight of these barges to New Orleans in six days. In other words, one trip from St. Louis to New Orleans will take 800 carloads of freight. Think what that will do for the country, how it will relieve the railroads in time of car shortage and supply the shippers of the country with cheaper transportation.

Now, if a barge in a time of long drought, when sand bars may appear, should be hung up suddenly and the Government has no equipment near to pull it off, they sustain a loss. What we want to do is to give some additional equipment to the barge service in order to prevent this loss until the War Department can complete the improvement of the channel.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I want to suggest that General Beach a few weeks ago stated before the Rivers and Harbors Committee that one of these boats on the Mississippi carried the largest cargo ever carried by any vessel in water transportation—56,000 tons of coal.

Mr. DENISON. That is true. Now, gentlemen, the Secretary of War says he would not know how to run a barge service unless he had Colonel Ashburn, who is an expert in transportation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, I started out to oppose this bill, but when I found so many of my friends with whom it is necessary for me to stay, and whose sections it will aid, I am going to support it. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Is not this a sequel to the Cape Cod proposition?

Mr. ABERNETHY. It is in a large measure. I desire seriously to call the attention of this committee to the situation that has operated along the inland coastal waterway under Colonel Ashburn's supervision, and the reason I am calling the attention of the House to it now is because there is pending before the committee that has charge of this bill a resolution that passed the Senate yesterday by Senator WADSWORTH, of New York, in reference to it. There was a boat line operating from Baltimore to Newbern, N. C., Government owned and operated, and it was working well. That boat line was allowed to be sold without any notice to the local people. It was sold for $400,000 on time, with a payment of $25,000, sold to the people who operated a barge line on the State canal in New York. Now, these people to whom these boats were sold have not paid for them, and they can not pay for them. I have been trying to prevail with Colonel Ashburn to put some of these boats back on the inland waterway between Baltimore and the South, which is a part of the link that we voted on the other day when we voted for the Cape Cod Canal, but by the resolution which passed the Senate yesterday it is solemnly proposed to allow the people who bought these boats and others from the War Department to be relieved of half a million dollars of the amount they agreed to pay, and still we have no boats on the inland waterways from whence these boats were taken and sold to irresponsible people, as I contend.

Gentlemen, I am going to vote for this bill, because I think it is a step in the right direction and will aid the great Mississippi Valley section of the country. I am a very small cog in this situation. However, all up and down the Atlantic coast we need waterway transportation right now. In the State of North Carolina now the railroads are undertaking to raise freight rates at this time to a point where it is going to run our business men out of existence. We need boats, and I appeal to this powerful Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to hold up this Wadsworth resolution, and I appeal to you men who are favorable to this proposition to help me hold it up until we can see if it is not possible to have returned the boats which were taken from us and have them placed back into the service on the inland waterways. That is all I want to say, and I am going to vote for this bill.

Mr. BLACK of Texas rose.

Mr. DENISON. Can not the gentleman discuss this matter on the next section?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I want to state some objections I have to the bill. I see no reason why I should not discuss it right now.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman want it on this particular section of the bill? Would he not be just as well satisfied on another section of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. The trouble is that if we pass to the next section, and one of the committee rises, not being on the committee, I would get left.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman feels he is liable to be left, I will amend my request to make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to 15 minutes?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I have five minutes of that?

Mr. DENISON. Can not the gentleman speak on the next section?

Mr. RAINEY. I would like to reply to something said by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from Texas wants five minutes?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from California wants five minutes?

Mr. RAKER. I would like to have 10 minutes.

Mr. DENISON. I can not agree to that just now. Is the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] insisting on some time?

Mr. McKEOWN. If the gentleman do not take too much time, I am going to wait.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I amend my request and make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if a man gets up in the morning and puts his pants on with the seat in front and the front behind, we would say that he was either asleep or crazy. It seems to me that we are undertaking to do that very thing in legislation of the sort we now have before us. There is no man on the floor of this House who has studied the question of river transportation who does not know that the real trouble is the railroad long and short haul practice. There is the trouble. Until Congress forces a correction of that situation you can operate a barge line for 40 years by the Government and pay the cost of it out the taxpayers' pockets, but you are not going to get private individuals to go very much into river transportation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And may I suggest one other thing, and that is the inadequacy of amounts allowed to the boat lines when the division of rates is made?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Of course. They can not possibly survive under competition of that sort. We must first get this basic trouble corrected before we can expect to get very far with development of river transportation.

Mr. CLEARY. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that there are millions of dollars invested by private individuals now in running up Long Island Sound and up the Hudson River, and that they can beat the railroads so much that they get the business and that the railroads do not? And that is being done right now all of the time.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; I have no doubt that in a congested center such as the gentleman mentions you can do that, but I am talking about transportation on rivers like the Mississippi and the Ohio and streams of that sort. You can not possibly have a successfully operated river transportation when you permit the railroads to come in and cut their rates in such localities below the costs of producing the service. In the face of conditions of that kind to try to establish permanent barge service by a law of this kind is like the man who tries to put his breeches on wrong side in front.

Mr. CLEARY. Will the gentleman allow me to say just a word? Take the water rates from Lake Superior clean on along down to Long Island Sound and through there, and there is no more danger of the railroads taking that freight away than there is of its being taken by the man in the moon, because the water can carry it for less than half of what the railroads can.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. My friend surely heard me admit that in these congested centers and waters like the Great Lakes that can be done.

Mr. CLEARY. It is not only in the congested centers.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. It is somewhat different from conditions on the Mississippi or the Ohio.

Mr. CLEARY. Through the Great Lakes it is the same way. There is not as cheap transportation anywhere in the world. Give us lots of water and never mind your boats and individuals will all go into the business.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I hope the gentleman will understand that I am not talking about transportation on the Great Lakes. I am talking about the Mississippi and the Ohio Rivers and other rivers, and why it is that we do not have successful water transportation there. From Portland, Me., to New Orleans is a distance of 1,686 miles, and the freight rate on first-class freight is $2.51. From Dallas, Tex., to New Orleans is 515 miles, which is a third of the distance from Portland to New Orleans, and yet the rate from Dallas to New Orleans on the same class freight is $2.31, nearly as much as it is from Portland to New Orleans. From Seattle to Boston is 3,258 miles, and the rate on 100 pounds of paint is $1.83, while the rate on 100 pounds of paint from St. Louis to Denver, an inland point without water transportation, over a level prairie haul and only a distance of 916 miles, is $1.06. There are many instances of that kind, and the United States Government will never demonstrate to private industry that it can successfully operate river transportation as long as these long-and-short-haul discriminations are permitted to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in answering the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], I stated that I wanted to proceed for five minutes. I now ask unanimous consent that I may speak out of order for those five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DENISON. Upon what subject?

Mr. RAKER. On the subject of an article that appeared in the Washington Post this morning.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAKER. The five minutes that I would ramble along on this river navigation, which I understand perfectly well, might not do the gentleman very much good but surely no harm to his bill. I think my vote would do more good than my talk, and I would like to use the five minutes on a really important subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Is there not somebody that wants my five minutes?

Mr. CLEARY. I will take it.

Mr. RAKER. I will be glad——

Mr. RAINEY. I will take the five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. I will yield the gentleman from New York my five minutes.

Mr. BEGG. I make the point of order the gentleman can not yield time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not yield time, but the Chair can recognize the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the five minutes allowed me be given the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLEARY].

Mr. BEGG. I object to that; that is not in accordance with the rule.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But the Chairman certainly can recognize the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair said that it was not subject to unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. On this water bill it seems strange that other men can take practically all the morning on a subject not directly connected with the bill, and in regard to a statement made this morning relative to legislation that is absolutely untrue a man is unable to explain it to the House that the House Members might know that they have been treated fairly and properly and the matter properly explained to them.

Mr. BEGG. I make the point of order the gentleman is speaking out of order.

Mr. RAKER. I shall get down to the bill.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is entitled to speak if he gets recognition for that purpose, but he ought to speak to the bill.

Mr. RAKER. I do not understand I need any criticism or castigation from the gentleman from Ohio especially, many times he has been in a position that we could have said a good many things, but I do not want to take up any of the time of the committee. However, I will get down to a discussion of this bill in proper shape and proper form. It is a very important bill in regard to waterway transportation. The same committee has under discussion railroad legislation which is coordinate with water transportation and railroad transportation.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman will yield, let me explain to the gentleman from California that several Members on this side have come to me and asked if I would not let them talk on this same subject, and I have said that I should have to object. We desire to hurry through with this bill as there is another bill coming up and——

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has made a statement, let me answer it. When I have presented a matter to the House after giving great consideration to it and a paper comes back in the morning and says the matter was not fairly represented, and at least 24 men have asked me in regard to it here this morning, I felt it to be my duty to present the matter to the membership of this House so that they might understand the situation and know that they were not deceived.

Mr. DENISON. I would be glad to help the gentleman as soon as we get through with this bill. I would be glad to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. RAKER. I know the gentleman has been exceptionally kind, and I appreciate it, and I asked for time in order that I might discuss this important bill in five minutes. I told him I wanted the five minutes. I can see plainly my five minutes are going so fast I am not going to get down to a discussion of this bill. Now, in regard to this legislation, the long and short haul, which means so much to our people. For 30 years we have paid freight from the East to Reno and San Francisco and back. For over 40 years we paid the freight from San Francisco to Reno, 200 miles and more, notwithstanding the railroad people left the cars at Reno and did not haul the freight over the mountain. We have had that situation for over 40 years, and the time has come when the people ought to have an opportunity to pay a fair rate of freight and not be compelled to pay a rate for hauling over a mountain grade, the highest in the United States, and then haul it back when the cars are left 250 miles east of the point of termination. We have had so much talk about the equalization of railroad and water rates.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If you had had an inland waterway, of course, it would not have been so expensive.

Mr. RAKER. But what we ought to have is an equalization of the rates on water and rail, and when there is railroad transportation, freight or passenger, it ought to have a fair, honest compensation for the work it performs, but ought not to be permitted to charge a rate 500 miles from the coast line and make the public pay that extra freight, although I have not gotten very far for what I arose to tell the House. Will do that in due time. I thank you, gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of my friend the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] to the fact that these Goltra barges were operated—and operated successfully—on the upper Mississippi River under the direction of the Secretary of War, and did operate there when they could not operate the Government barges on the lower river; and the statement in the testimony of Mr. Goltra that the gentleman from Nebraska called attention to, on page 132 of the hearings, has reference entirely to equipment which Mr. Goltra got from the War Department in 1917 to make an experimental trip to St. Paul and back again.

I read from the hearings:

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Did you not in 1917 get some equipment from the War Department with a view to making experimental trips on the upper Mississippi?

Mr. GOLTRA. I did.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Did you make those trips?

Mr. GOLTRA. I did.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Did they pay your expenses?

Mr. GOLTRA. No, sir; I paid my own expenses.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Has any organization asked you to come?

Mr. GOLTRA. No organization, sir. I have not attempted any propaganda whatsoever, Mr. HUDDLESTON.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But you appear here voluntarily?

Mr. GOLTRA. As a citizen.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. At your own expense?

Mr. GOLTRA. At my own expense.

That is on pages 133 and 134. Again, on page 135, Mr. Goltra says:

I paid for the trip north to St. Paul, which was done at the urgent request of the Government, all of the expenses and, if my memory serves me correctly, lost some twelve or fifteen thousand dollars in that movement, because of the fact that the steamer furnished—when we tried to return, the water having fallen in the river—was of too deep draft to navigate the river. It was the low season of navigation.

Therefore it was not these steamers at all; and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] will find out his mistake if he examines the hearings.

Now, as to the operation of these Government barges at a loss, I simply want to read from the testimony of Secretary Weeks on page 27 of the hearings. He says:

The financial returns up to this time have not been encouraging on the lower Mississippi and have been very discouraging on the Warrior River. The service seems to go pretty well for a month or two or three months and then something happens. I do not know whether or not this will always be the case; but, for example, a year ago last summer we had the lowest water on the Mississippi I believe has ever been known, and the result was such shallow water that our boats could not navigate. They were on bars a good deal of the time.

Up to this time the net result of the operations have been that we have lost on the lower Mississippi—and this includes the war period when, as I have stated, there was insufficient equipment—we have lost $1,320,000; and we have lost on the Warrior River, which has been almost continuously losing, $1,783,000.

Now, with reference to the Goltra barges, which can operate on all these rivers at all times except perhaps on the Warrior River, I want to read again what the Secretary of War said. Referring to these Goltra barges, he says:

In January, 1919, an authorization was made for the construction of towboats and barges for the purpose of bringing—presumably for the purpose, and the preamble stated "for war reasons"—ores from the Mesaba Range to the iron furnaces at St. Louis, and that equipment was leased to Mr. Goltra, of St. Louis. The construction, I should think, was about two-thirds completed when I went into the War Department in 1921. It was certainly completed to a degree which made it financially advisable to complete its construction, although it seemed to me a very doubtful proposition in view of the purposes for which it was to be leased. When it was completed it was turned over to Mr. Goltra. He did not comply with what I was advised were the terms of the lease, and after a good deal of delay we seized the equipment. He got an injunction in the courts, and the matter is still in the courts, but we have the equipment and are using it. That supplements what we had before and is of real advantage to us now, because it is being used to its full capacity. Before that was done we had to run, because of the depth of the water, a shuttle boat from Cairo to St. Louis, which involved very much additional expense and was not, from a financial standpoint, satisfactory. The Goltra boats can run to St. Louis without any breaking of cargo, which is an advantage.

Then, again, I want to read from his testimony as to the statement that he wants to keep Colonel Ashburn in this service:

The War Department is not equipped to conduct a transportation service. We can do it, and we are doing it to the best of our ability, but my judgment is that this service should have been turned over to the Department of Commerce or to the Shipping Board for operation instead of the War Department.

This is the opinion of the Secretary of War, in spite of what all these gentlemen say as to the qualifications of Colonel Ashburn. The Secretary of War thinks this entire equipment ought to be turned over to the Department of Commerce or to the Shipping Board.

Now, I want to tell you why these Goltra barges operate successfully over all these rivers; and whenever these bills come up I am going to keep on denouncing the seizure of these Goltra barges. It was an act of piracy without a precedent in the history of this country. Operating barges and propelling boats by a private individual does not appeal much to candidates for Congress who are making their campaigns on the strength of the Government service. There is no opportunity to junket up and down the rivers in that service in splendidly appointed Government boats. There are no receptions in cities—no speeches—and therefore a private and a successful operation of boats does not compel much attention and receives no public recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The capital stock of the corporation shall be $5,000,000, all of which is hereby subscribed for by the United States. Such subscription shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, within the appropriations therefor, upon call from time to time by the Secretary of War. Upon any such payment a receipt therefor shall be issued by the corporation to the United States and delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be evidence of the stock ownership of the United States. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000,000 for the purpose of paying such subscription.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY] was very frank when he admitted that this bill was the sequel to the Cape Cod Canal. This bill is designed to put the Government in business all right.

We had a statement from the Secretary of War a few days ago in which he said that he was in favor of disposing of the Panama Railroad and disposing of all the property that is owned as the private property of the United States; and now we find here a bill putting in his department a privately owned and operated barge system. The trouble with the whole matter of water transportation is not only what the gentleman from Texas said as to rates, but it is with the American people, who are not willing to wait upon freight by water. They are in too big a hurry to get the freight; and they will not wait until it comes by water, but insist on its coming by rail.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The transportation manager of the General Electric Co. stated that they had assembled a chance fleet, not adapted to the business, and found they could deliver freight from Schenectady to New York more quickly and more reliably and dependably than by rail.

Mr. McKEOWN. I take it, with a short distance like that, that would be true. But where you have transportation coming in from western points, on through freight, it would be different.

Mr. CLEARY. May I make a point that will help you?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. CLEARY. Take the business over the Great Lakes, down through New York. It is a matter of warehouses. This is the reason they are not in a hurry. The goods are stored in great warehouses in the city of New York.

It is the same way with coal transportation. Coal is accumulated in large stocks. It is not true that the boats can not deliver fast enough. I was in the business 40 years, and I carried coal from New York to Buffalo at 50 cents a ton, and from New York to Chicago at $1.50 a ton.

Mr. McKEOWN. I regret I can not yield further. The gentleman evidently thinks I am criticizing water transportation. I am not criticizing water transportation. But the source of the trouble is the fact that our people have not learned to be patient enough to let the freight come by water transportation, as they ought to do.

Now, there is no question but what we are 100 years behind where we ought to be in the matter of water transportation. We have the finest streams in the world and yet we are not making use of them. But that is far afield from the question before us. The question before us is: Why has the Government of the United States embarked in this business of organizing a corporation to run these barges? The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has changed front since the passage of the transportation act, because the RECORD shows that when the transportation act was under consideration the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] said he hoped the Government would dispose of these boats as soon as possible, and that he would only vote for the transportation act because it was a necessary emergency at that time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does the gentleman know that freight cars are conveyed on ferryboats from the State of Michigan across Lake Michigan to Wisconsin and that in that way the shippers save two weeks' time rather than to allow them to go through the car yards at Chicago?

Mr. McKEOWN. I have been informed that works a miracle, as far as that is concerned, but I want to say to the gentleman that if it comes to transporting freight down the Mississippi River to St. Louis and then that freight has to be reshipped into Oklahoma, our fellows will pay a higher rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Has the gentleman any water transportation in his section?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that when we have water in our streams we have too much and when it it dry we hardly have enough water for fish to swim in. That is the condition in Oklahoma. But that is not the question here. I am talking about the policy of organizing a corporation and embarking in this business. On every hand we hear the statement made that the Government should stay out of business, but we are now asked to have the Government embark in this business.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The proposition is, I will say to the gentleman, that the Government is already in this business, and we only hope to give them sufficient capital to carry it on for five years and try it out.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am in favor of letting it go along like it is, because when you get the corporation organized you will never be able to bring it to an end.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I hope it will never be brought to an end.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am in favor of the Government going along as it is at present; I am in favor of the Government operating these barges and carrying on this industry, with the hope that in a few months or a few years we will be able to develop a great business down there, a great business that will be of real benefit.

Now, when you get these special rates on your waterways, all well and good; but the rest of the country has got to pay the freight. When you have a country like mine, which has no water transportation, and you get specially favored rates from the railroads in competition with the water rates, my people in Oklahoma and in the great State of Kansas have to pay that additional rate, because they have to make good the loss which they stand when they go into competition with the water rates.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The question of long and short hauls comes into the problem and affects you in Oklahoma in the same way as was stated by the gentleman from Texas. But the gentleman must know that is entirely a matter of interpretation on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The law prohibits that now, and unless the Interstate Commerce Commission sees fit to hold hearings and decide that for some special reason in a special case they can do it. The correction of the entire evil is with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not want you to misunderstand me. I am not opposed to the development of water transportation in this country, because, as I say, I think we are 100 years behind where we ought to be in water transportation. But what I do say is this. The country is going broke over the proposition of the high rates we have to pay and we must do something immediately, but that does not mean that we shall go to work and incorporate this company, because I think the Government can pay the money just as well one way as another way. I think this Government should go along like it is until we see what we are doing.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman is anxious about the waterways and he says he does not want the Government to do it. Does he want the railroads to do it?

Mr. McKEOWN. No. But what is the difference between the Government owning a corporation such as this and the Government doing it itself? And we will pay for it no matter whether you have a corporation do it or whether you have the Government to do it as it is now doing it.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And I will state to the gentleman that my State will pay for it and not his.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say to the gentleman that they have plenty of waterways up there and plenty of money.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. And the State developed them.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; that is true.

The rate problem before the people of the United States is one of the greatest problems that confronts them at this time, and I say to you now that the proper way to adjust this is to fix rates so that farm products throughout the country may have special rates to certain groups of places in the far-distant parts of the Nation. Here, on the one hand, you have the cabbage raised down in the district of my friend from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] that is rotting because they can not pay the freight to Chicago, and the people in Chicago are getting hungry because they can not get the cabbage from the district of my friend in Texas. Gentlemen, it is like the situation in the Indian Territory in the old days when we had such high freight rates out there. A fellow shipped four carloads of horses to East St. Louis and got a bill back for $136 additional after they had sold the horses to pay the freight. He was a fellow who could not read and write very well and had not much education, and he wrote them a letter like this: "Dear Frisco: I ain't got no money, but I can ship you some more horses."

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK of Texas: Page 2, line 8, strike out all of section 2.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the concluding language of section 2 is: "There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000,000 for the purpose of paying such subscription."

A few days ago the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported the Cape Cod bill with an authorized appropriation, I believe, of $11,500,000, and to-day we have from the same committee an authorization of $5,000,000 more, and I think this committee will, if it does much more along this line, earn the title of the economy committee of the House. To use a slang expression, this is saving money "over the left." I agree with my good friend, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], that the real fault of this river transportation system—in a sense, the real fault—lies with the Interstate Commerce Commission; but after all, let me call my friend's attention to the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission gets all of its power from the Congress of the United Sates, and we are cognizant of the fact that the commission is not enforcing that section of the interstate commerce act or the Esch-Cummins bill, to be more explicit, which prohibits the long and short haul discriminations which we are talking about, hnd the view I have in mind is that if we want relief from this situation, if we really want to bring about some relief in our freight rate structure, the thing to do is to absolutely prohibit the carriers from indulging in such practices as carrying 100 pounds of first-class freight from Portland, Me., to New Orleans, La., a distance of 1,686 miles, for virtually the same rate as the railroad carries it to Kansas City, practically one-half the distance.

We will never get any relief from that situation by coming in here and trying to set up a little $5,000,000 corporation to demonstrate that the Government can operate a barge sysem so successfully that private enterprise will take hold. Gentlemen will find out they will get no relief from that. The basic difficulty must first be corrected.

I received a letter sometime ago from the Intermediate Rate Association of Spokane, Wash. I think it suggests the only thing that will give us any relief. This letter says:

The only relief we see in sight is the passage of the bill introduced by Senator GOODING, which will amend the fourth section of the interstate commerce act to prohibit fourth section violations for the purpose of meeting water transportation.

First, it will protect the interior West from the continued assaults upon us and permit us to grow and develop as we should. Second, it will put a stop to the cutthroat rate competition on the part of the railroads that has put so many of our boats and steamship lines out of business.

I understand that bill is pending in the Senate and I hope that legislative body will pass it and send it over to the House, and it will certainly receive my unqualified support.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) Until otherwise directed by Congress, the corporation shall continue the operation of the transportation and terminal facilities now being operated by or under the direction of the Secretary of War, under section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, as amended, and shall, as soon as there is an improved channel sufficient to permit the same, initiate the water carriage heretofore authorized by law upon the Mississippi River above St. Louis.

(b) If the Secretary of War deems it advisable to discontinue the operation of any part of the transportation or terminal facilities or to develop and operate new lines in order to give the public the proper service, he shall report thereon to Congress. The operation of any of such facilities shall not be discontinued and new lines shall not be developed or operated until authorized by Congress.

(c) The operation of the transportation and terminal facilities under this act shall be subject to the provisions of the interstate commerce act as amended and to the provisions of the shipping act, 1916, as amended, in the same manner and to the some extent as if such facilities were privately owned and operated; and all vessels of the corporation operated and employed solely as merchant vessels shall be subject to all other laws, regulations, and liabilities governing merchant vessels.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct an error in line 14. The word "some" should be "same."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

In line 7, page 3, after the word "Congress," strike out the balance of line 7 and all of lines 8 and 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 3, line 7, after the word "Congress," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the language I seek to strike out reads as follows:

The operation of any of such facilities shall not be discontinued and new lines shall not be developed or operated until authorized by Congress.

I understand the purpose of the creation of this corporation is to relieve the present United States Government operation of the barge lines from unbusinesslike methods and from bureaucratic control and to allow the corporatioon to operate somewhat in the same manner as a private enterprise would operate, and yet, by this language we would say to this corporation, "Even if you find a line you are operating is unprofitable and losing you money every day, you have got to come here to Congress and get Congress to pass a law permitting you to discontinue its operation, before you can cease your service on that line."

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I will.

Mr. DENISON. We are conducting an important experiment down there, and we do not want to authorize the Secretary of War to stop it unless he puts it up to Congress. On the other hand, we do not want to allow him to extend this to some other river unless Congress gives him the permission. There is a great deal of political influence used one way and another, and the Secretary of War does not want to be subjected to it, but let Congress control it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; it is because I know the inefficiency produced by this political influence that I do not want the Government to continue in this business. Let me call attention to this fact: Suppose we should say to the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which is charged with the responsibility of operating our Government-owned fleet, "You shall not discontinue a line or put another line into operation until you come to Congress and get authority."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I think this is necessary language to remain in the bill. If we had had that language in there, the Secretary of War, through his agent, would not have been allowed to have taken off the inland-waterway boats and sold them to a State barge line.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Oh, no. What the gentleman has stated emphasizes the reason why I expect to vote against this bill. You want to tie, and you will tie, the hands of this corporation so that it can not operate this in a business way. The only way the corporation can operate it is to come to a committee of Congress and let that committee tell its operating officials upon what route you shall operate your boats, and it does not make any difference how much money you are losing, you must not discontinue a single line until Congress allows you to do it. Committees of Congress have their useful functions to perform, but operating steamboats is not one of them.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. I sympathize with the gentleman in his argument based on his point of view, but I fear he has not comprehended the spirit of the bill and its purposes. The central idea in this bill is to try out an inland-waterway service.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. In a businesslike method?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is what I would have said in less elegant language [laughter] if the gentleman had not made his inquiry. We differ as to the essence of the proposition, but that is the central idea. The purpose is to try it without the Government going permanently into the business of inland waterways.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the floor for myself. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to demonstrate whether inland-water transportation is worth encouraging in this country for private enterprise. As the industry stands now it is discredited and no capital is going into it. We have, through the exigencies of war, a considerable amount of money invested in barge lines on the Black Warrior and Mississippi Rivers. They have gone through the preliminary stage of trial, and those who have most to do with them believe there is ample warrant to go on and try it a little further.

The $5,000,000 is a matter of bookkeeping. The waterway property now in the War Department is to be transferred to this proposed corporation so as to make the business efficiently transacted. If we were to go in as does the Emergency Fleet and build up a shipping industry without much regard to time or where it would land, that would be one thing. If the corporation created by this bill does not demonstrate permanently the wisdom of waterway develpoment and operation, building barges and clearing channels of the rivers all over the country, then there is nothing to it. I feel that we ought to look at the problem simply as a trial. Those of us in sympathy with the purpose of this bill believe that the trial will show what value is in the proposition. They feel further that if it proves that inland waterway business can be well done the Government should stop, and that the demonstration of the successful operation will result in the investment of private capital and there will be no need for the Government to go further in such direction. We feel that we should give Congress the opportunity to pass on the principle involved and make all future operations depend on the will of Congress rather than to put the Secretary of War or his agents in a position to reach out and favor this plan or that plan and perhaps one day to be severely criticized by Congress itself.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I have no objection to the provision not allowing the Secretary of War to establish new lines without the consent of Congress, but does the gentleman think that the Secretary's hands should be tied so far as a losing proposition is concerned so that he can not discontinue a line that is losing without the consent of Congress?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think if we are going to give it a trial we should give it a fair trial, and we ought to operate it long enough so that Congress may be satisfied in the interest of the whole people.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. How long does the gentleman think will be required to demonstrate whether it is wise or unwise?

Mr. WINSLOW. The testimony before the committee was that five years would be a reasonable time, beyond which we ought not to go, and further, we do not advise tying their hands by any shorter trial period.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. We were also advised, as I am informed, that it should continue until we felt there was some stability about the service so that the people would be willing to patronize it.

Mr. WINSLOW. Quite so.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And as soon as you create a corporation and give it some life and some hope of continuation then we will take a step in the right direction.

Mr. WINSLOW. That is quite in accordance with the testimony as affecting the development of business.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And is it not true, in order to operate a barge line, that it is necessary for the owner to some extent to build his connection, and if he has a five-year period he can afford to take the risk of building the connection, but if he has no assurance as to how long it will go he is not willing to take the risk of building a connection without that guaranty?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes. And, further, no business man will cut himself from present facilities until he is satisfied that this new corporation, and so forth, are sufficiently well established to warrant his patronage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand from the statement just made, and it was an exceedingly clear statement, that the object of continuing the operation of these barges for another five years is to enable the Government to make a demonstration that barge service can be made successful on the rivers. This section authorizes an appropriation of $5,000,000. I know this committee can not appropriate any money, but it is authorized here in this section just as positively as any committee ever authorized an appropriation. Of course, they will have to go to the Budget Committee before they get it, but they will get the entire $5,000,000 before the five years are out. If the object of this demonstration is to show private citizens that they can operate barge lines successfully, why in the name of God did they take away from a private citizen 19 barges and 4 steamers, barges so constructed as to properly operate on the rivers, upon the alleged charges that he was not operating as a common carrier, when they had refused him permission to operate as a common carrier at the same rate charged by the Government barges? These boats, according to the testimony of the Secretary of War, could go without breaking cargo the entire length of the Mississippi River, all the way from St. Louis clear down to New Orleans, and the Government boats can not do that. Mr. Goltra, who is financially able to make good all of his contracts, and who stood to lose if he could not operate any better than the Government operates barges, two or three million dollars on this contract, was starting to operate under his contract when the Government seized his barges. The Government is operating them now, according to the testimony before the committee. If the object is to encourage private citizens to engage in an enterprise of this kind, are you encouraging private citizens when you seize barges that private citizens want to operate at their own expense without the possibility of a dollar loss to this Government, when they have given a $300,000 bond for the opportunity of operating these barges?

Mr. Chairman, there is politics in this, and I want to tell you what it is. At the time these barges of Mr. Goltra were seized, and we might as well know it, he was the Democratic national committeeman of the State of Missouri, and they did not want a Democratic national committeeman who got his original commission from a Democraic administration to make a success of barge traffic on the river and they seized these barges, although the Government did not stand to lose a dollar and Mr. Goltra stood to lose all of it, if any was lost. They seized them at the moment when he was preparing to operate and make them a success. There is politics in this, and that is the reason why it was done. They can not do anything with the Government barges on that river. They draw too much water, and you can not successfully operate shuttle boats. I propose every time one of these bills comes up to keep exposing that outrage; that act of piracy on the part of the Secretary of War.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I would be glad to have the gentleman advise the House that all of this controversy between Mr. Goltra and the War Department is a matter now in the courts and which will be there disposed of in accordance with law. It is not a matter for us to dispose of here on the floor of the House in connection with this bill. It is not relevant to this bill.

Mr. RAINEY. It is a matter of which this Congress, which makes these appropriations and authorizes their services, ought to be advised, and the country ought to know about it, and I am going to see that the country is advised about it.

Mr. DENISON. My friend has now spent about 40 minutes upon this subject, and I think the House is fairly well advised about it. I would like to proceed with this bill.

Mr. RAINEY. I am only occupying the five minutes allowed to me under the rules, and I have said as much as I want to say now. I may want to say more before we get through with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary of War shall appoint an advisory board of six members (hereinafter referred to as the "board") from individuals prominently identified with commercial or business interests in territory adjacent to the operations of the corporation. No member of the board shall be an officer, director, or employee of, or substantially interested in, any railroad. Two of such members shall continue in office for terms of one year, and the remaining four for terms of two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from the date of appointment, the term of each to be designated by the Secretary of War. Each successor shall be appointed by the Secretary of War for a term of five years from the date of the expiration of the term of the member whom he succeeds, except that any successor appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of a term shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he succeeds. A vacancy in the board shall not impair the powers of the remaining members to execute the functions of the board.

(b) The members shall receive no salary for their services on the board but, under regulations and in amounts prescribed by the Secretary of War, may be paid by the corporation a reasonable per diem compensation for attending meetings of the board and for time spent on special service of the corporation, and their traveling expenses to and from such meetings, or when assigned to such special service.

(c) In addition to the six members, the Secretary of War shall appoint an individual from civil life, or (notwithstanding section 1222 of the Revised Statutes or any other provision of law, or any rules or regulations issued thereunder) detail an officer from the Military Establishment of the United States as chairman of the board. Any officer so detailed shall, during his term of office as chairman, have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier general, United States Army, and shall be exempt from the operation of any provision of law, or any rules or regulations issued thereunder, which limits the length of such detail or compels him to perform duty with troops. Any individual appointed from civil life shall, during his term of office as chairman, receive a salary not to exceed $10,000 a year, to be fixed by the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War may delegate to the chairman any of the functions vested in the Secretary by this act.

(d) The board shall meet for organization purposes when and where called by the Secretary of War, and thereafter at such times and places as the Secretary deems necessary. The board shall consider matters submitted to it by the Secretary of War and make recommendations thereon, and from time to time advise him and make recommendations in respect of the management and operation of existing facilities or the development and operation of new lines.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, there is a typographical error in line 21, page 4. The word "addition" ought to be correctly spelled.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the word "addition" will be correctly spelled.

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DENISON: Page 3, line 25, after the word "railroad," insert the word "corporation."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The people of the section of the South in which I live are strong believers in the development of water transportation. Every encouragement and support has been given to the Federal barge line by our city administration and our business men. We have a commission on water terminals composed of strong, enthusiastic business men who have, together with an active and interested mayor and efficient engineer, cooperated to the fullest extent with the representatives of the Government.

About the time there was such a great congestion of freight, due to the war needs, and the Director General of the Railroads for the Government began activities for an increase in the development of the water lines, our city, cooperating with the Government, invested large sums of money in a warehouse near the bank of the great Mississippi River, thus increasing its terminal facilities and at an expense of $450,000. Great improvements were made to facilitate the handling of the river freight. The equipment was inadequate, but the demand for the release of freight held for want of a means of transportation caused great efforts to be made by the few barges of the Railroad Administration and river fleet which were available. This development brought some relief. It aroused our people to the great need for an efficient and dependable line of boats or barges.

The declaration by the Congress in 1920 in the transportation act stating the future policy of the Government with reference to the transportation on our inland waterways was welcome news. Under the terms of section 500 Army engineers and our engineer and commission had many conferences, and as a result a modern water terminal to cost much over a million dollars was planned. It is now completed and furnishes the most modern machinery for the landing of water freight. It was stated by Colonel Ashburn in the hearings before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that this new terminal built by the citizens of Memphis is perhaps the best of its kind in the world to-day. The results have been gratifying. Many of the industries of our city which have in recent years been built with the thought of convenience of railroad trackage can now utilize the new terminals, for there is every convenience for the switching of cars.

With this heavy expenditure of money and with so bright an outlook for a big business, it is expected that under the policy of the Government, stated in the act of 1920, there should be some assurance that the barge line will be continued till the business is established and conditions of rates and other uncertainties done away with; then it may be private interests may come in to buy and take over the business. It is out of the question to expect private interests to take it over at this time.

In so far as the Federal barge line's operation on the Mississippi River is concerned, even under various handicaps it has proven that the service can make a success, saving the shippers of freight large sums of money. It has already greatly reduced freight rates and has proven that it can render service acceptable to the people. [Applause.]

There are, however, great handicaps to the present management, and it has been recommended that there be created the inland waterways corporation to carry out the policy of the Government as to the development of the waterways system.

The bill provides that the Secretary of War shall be the incorporator and shall govern and direct the corporation in the exercise of the functions vested in it by the law. The capital stock shall be $5,000,000, all of which is subscribed for by the United States. The Secretary of War is authorized to appoint an advisory board of six members from prominent business interests in territory adjacent to the operations of the barge line. It is provided that none of them nor any officer, director, or employee shall be interested in any railroad. The members of the board are to receive no salary and only a reasonable per diem compensation for attendance at meetings of the board and for time spent on special service of the corporation and their traveling expenses to and from the meetings. Provision is made for a chairman of the board at a salary fixed by the Secretary of War, but not to exceed $10,000 a year. There are many provisions in the bill which will make it possible to operate the barge lines efficiently. The bill has had careful study, and has the recommendation of those who have had much experience in the operation of the Federal barge line. The Secretary of War has indorsed it. It is believed that such a corporation is necessary under the present circumstances. If the Federal barge line should not be continued, it would mean the danger of water transportation being given a handicap which would greatly hinder its progress.

The South has great natural waterways upon which the Government has spent millions of dollars. It has great resources in coal fields, iron mines, and a cotton yield which is the greatest in the world. It needs an efficient water transportation to aid in distributing these resources to the markets of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. DENISON. One moment. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have not had an opportunity to speak on this bill; I ask for five minutes on the bill.

Mr. DENISON. I will amend my request and make it 7 minutes; the gentleman from Oklahoma wants 2 minutes and the gentleman from Texas 5.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes, the gentleman from Oklahoma to have 2 minutes and the gentleman from Texas 5. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 20, after the word "service," insert "provided no member of the board will receive in excess of $1,500 in any one year in excess of his expenses."

Mr. DENISON. Please read that again; I did not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman must understand that they do not get anything in excess of their expenses. The gentleman is allowing $1,500.

Mr. McKEOWN. They have a per diem allowance for meetings of the board, which is right, which is fair, and for special services a per diem allowance, but I want to limit the amount of the per diem altogether to $1,500. We have experience in some places with officers who get a per diem, and the per diem runs up sometimes to very large sums. I want to limit it not to exceed $1,500, which is in addition to their actual expenses. I think the gentleman ought to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKEOWN. I offer another amendment while I am on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 10, after the word "exceed," strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500."

Mr. McKEOWN. I am just going to say to the gentleman——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McKEOWN. I ask for a division. I want to see if gentlemen here want to pay this man more than they get themselves.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, I have voted for my last Government corporation. The Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation has convinced me that they are unwise; that they cost too much money before we get through with them and before we can get rid of them. You are by this paragraph creating a new position of $10,000 a year, and I want to say to you that you carry with it——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I know the gentleman wants to be correct. The fact is that the man already receives that salary without it being declared that he is being paid that money and——

Mr. BLANTON. You are now providing this $10,000 position by law, and as the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska knows, when you once create an office of $10,000 you never can get rid of it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. But we could not run this without this man.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but here is what you are doing: This board may appoint, fix the compensation of, and remove such officers and employees, attorneys, and agents as are necessary for the transaction of the business of the corporation.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret to say I only have five minutes, and I want to state my position on this proposition if the gentleman will kindly excuse me. The bill places no limitation on that. It has no restriction on the salaries or the number of employees. They can appoint just as many as they want, and under the provisions of this bill they can fix their salaries just as high as they want and you could without violating the law have another wasteful, extravagant Shipping Board and an Emergency Fleet Corporation in this bill.

Why do we have to create a new Government corporation, anyhow? Have we not enough already. Surely among all the Government institutions that we have now we could find one of them that could attend to this business without creating another.

I just received this morning a telegram from the West Texas Chamber of Commerce. You will imagine that that was a chamber composed only of bankers and business men. It is not. My colleague from El Paso, Senator HUDSPETH, knows that that is one of the biggest institutions of my State and his State.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is one of the biggest chambers of commerce in the United States, so far as membership is concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; it is one of the biggest chambers of commerce in the United States. This telegram came from a convention of 20,000 of them assembled there. They sent a telegram up here demanding that action be taken to stop that Barkley bill from being passed next Monday. They are against it. That chamber of commerce, with 20,000 members assembled there on yesterday, is composed of farmers, if you please; stockmen from all over the country there, and laboring men, if you please; merchants, bankers, preachers, doctors, lawyers, teachers, dentists; men from every avocation and walk in life. If you draw a line north and south through Fort Worth, the district of my colleague, Mr. LANHAM, everything west of that line is the territory of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce; and without equivocation those men sent that direction up here and asked in the name of these people that there be not five boards of 45 members drawing salaries ranging from $7,000 to $10,000 a year, with all the incidental employees that go into that bill, placed as a burden upon the people.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish I had the time, but I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The question was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TILSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8209) to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 4.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. DENISON a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CAREW. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman withhold that for a minute, while I present a rule for printing in the RECORD?

Mr. CAREW. Yes.

WAGES OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a report (Rept. No. 773) from the Committee on Rules on the resolution (H. Res. 315) for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7996) to regulate and fix rates of wages for employees of the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report from the Committee on Rules on the resolution (H. Res. 315) for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7996) to regulate and fix rates of wages for employees of the Government Printing Office.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CAREW] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Davey	Hull, Tenn.	Mooney

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-one Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The doors were reopened.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 1823. An act for the relief of the Long Island Railroad Co.;

H. R. 4161. An act authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to acquire necessary rights of way across private lands, by purchase or condemnation proceedings, needed in constructing a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, in South Dakota;

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7995. An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7962. An act to extend for the period of one year the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, as amended.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

House Resolution 298

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3318) entitled "A bill to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall arise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this rule allows the House to consider House bill 3318. That bill provides for the appointment of two district judges in the southern district of New York. The bill is reported to the House by the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary. It is recommended unanimously by the judiciary, and it is urged by such notable individuals as Chief Justice Taft, of the Supreme Court. In view of the fact that the bill has the unanimous support of your Committee on the Judiciary, I have no desire to discuss before the House the provisions of the rule, which are in accord with the usual rules for the consideration of a bill, and unless some one desires to discuss the matter, I will move the previous question.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman states correctly, as I understand, that there is no minority report?

Mr. SCOTT. That is true.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But as one member of the Judiciary Committee, I voted against agreeing to the bill and served notice within the committee that I would oppose it when it came up for consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I should modify my statement, because I had not the information given me by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Does the gentleman say that Chief Justice Taft has indorsed this bill?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; he has indorsed the bill.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Is it not true that less than two years ago, or about two years ago, the Chief Justice recommended 18 judges and opposed any additional judges?

Mr. SCOTT. It seems to me I have a recollection of something of the kind. The situation in the southern district of New York is this: It has been necessary for some time to have judges from other sections of the country come to the State of New York in order to assist in the trial of their cases. If these two new judges are appointed, the expense to the United States Government will be less than it has actually cost the Government to import foreign judges for the trial of the cases.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Say, 15 minutes?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; I yield the gentleman 15 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am from the very district or, rather, the adjoining district in New York which is supposed to be benefited by the creation of two new judges; that is, two judges for the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

I am opposed to the adoption of this rule and I am opposed to the bill, first, because we do not need the two judges in New York; and second—and I will endeavor to show you if I have time—that if we pass this bill we will be putting the seal of approval upon a most pernicious practice with reference to equity receiverships which we have ever seen in the history of the judiciary of the United States, and when this is known generally I am sure the gentlemen of this House will not want to vote for this bill.

I have taken the trouble to see whether or not it was necessary for the proper procedure in the court there to have these two additional judges. I have read much in the hearings with reference to the large dockets in the southern district of New York. We hear of thousands of cases of a criminal nature; we hear of hundreds of cases of an equitable nature, so many hundreds in admiralty, that there is tremendous delay and that justice delayed is justice denied. But let us examine into the situation and see whether or not those facts square with the truth. I have before me the hearings held by the Judiciary Committee when they had this very bill under consideration. There was inserted in the record some figures with reference to the number of equity cases, the number of law cases, and the number of admiralty cases which remained pending on the docket in that court June 30, 1923. I have tried to get figures with reference to these cases that remained on the docket six months after December 31, 1923. I have those figures and let me compare them with you.

There remained pending June 30, 1923, in the southern district court, where there are now six judges, 1,151 cases in equity, and there remained six months after—and this is after you had already given New York two additional judges—561 cases in equity, so that there had been disposed of in those six months 50 per cent of the entire equity docket in that court. Why do you want two more judges? I say, verily, if you give a little more time and there is a real willingness to work on the part of some of the judges in that court, you will clear the equity docket in that court very quickly. What is the situation with reference to the legal end of it, the law side of that court? On June 30, 1923, I found that there were 2,184 cases left undisposed of on the docket. Six months afterwards there were only 1,647, a reduction of 25 per cent.

With reference to admiralty cases, there were 3,518 cases on the docket June 30, 1923, and six months thereafter, with the work of these two new judges, there were 1,830 cases, a reduction of 45 per cent.

Now, I say, my good friends, if there have been such reductions all along the line in equity, in law, and in admiralty cases, what is the necessity for the additional judges in the district courts for the southern district of New York?

Mr. PERLMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. PERLMAN. The gentleman has said that with the two additional judges we got they disposed of so many cases. Do you know that within the last year 34 judges from outside of New York were sent to the southern district of New York to help the 6 judges?

Mr. CELLER. I will come to that matter in just a moment, and I will say this, that if you get 2 more judges in New York you will still have 34 judges coming in, because you will get into the situation where the more judges you get the more judges will be desired, and you can never get away from that situation.

Mr. PERLMAN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CELLER. I have only 15 minutes, and I want to develop my thought.

Now, what is the situation with reference to the criminal side of the court? We find on that particular day in question, June 30, 1923, there were something like 8,836 cases on the docket, and at the end of the six months' period there were just 269 more cases on the criminal side of the court. The figures that I cite are to be found on pages 6 and 8 of the hearings.

To recapitulate:

Cases pending June 30, 1923:
Equity	1,151
Law	2,184
Admiralty	3,518
Cases pending six months later, December 31, 1923:
Equity	561
Admiralty	1,830

We read in the records given by some of the proponents of the bill that the criminal cases have flooded the court and that they have so many criminal cases as a result of prohibition violations that it is utterly impossible to get any cases disposed of; but I will tell you something, my good friends, about that. The judges in the southern district have only themselves to blame for this condition; and why? They have passed a resolution, the six of them, in concert with one, I believe, of the judges of the circuit court of appeals, that they will not fine first offenders for violation of the prohibition law. What has been the result of that particular position which they have assumed?

Mr. PERLMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CELLER. In just a moment. We find that none of the attorneys who represent these offenders in the prohibition cases will file pleas of guilty when assured of jail sentences only for their clients, and the result is you have the calendar so congested with prohibition cases that you can not get any of the prohibition cases tried, or only a few of them, and then when they find that condition as a result of their own resolution, which is most improvident, they bring in outside judges who are more lenient in such cases. These outside judges come in, and they only fine first offenders, and then they clear the entire docket.

I say, my good friends, they have no right in New York, considering the public opinion of New York's population, to impose imprisonment in cases of first offenders, when in most parts of the country the Federal judges refuse to imprison and only fine, and I say that if they would be more lenient in their attitude concerning prohibition cases perhaps they would not have so many of these prohibition cases congesting the docket.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. KING. What I am interested in is when the gentleman is going to bring out his bill to raise the salary of Members of this House.

Mr. CELLER. I will bring out that bill just as soon as the Judiciary Committee will permit me to do it. [Applause.]

There has been another reason for this congesting of the docket in the southern district of New York. About 20 months ago you gave to the country some 22 new and additional judges and two of them were assigned to New York. It took the Republican Party almost a year and a half to agree upon who should be the designees and who should receive this judicial preferment, and this delay caused considerable trouble. Do not, therefore, say that because Congress gave you the two additional judges and there was this Republican fumbling and delay in the appointing of the judges with the consequent piling up of untried cases, you want two more judges to remove the very court's congestion caused by the said fumbling and delay. I wonder whether the other side, in the event of this bill's passage, will again show its lack of strength of party by being unable to agree upon the recipients of these judicial prizes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Who were the two judges appointed that were authorized by the act approved in 1922?

Mr. CELLER. I think they were Judges Winslow and Goddard.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. When were they appointed?

Mr. CELLER. They were appointed, I think, January 4, 1923.

I have before me a rather interesting letter written to one of my colleagues, Congressman JACOBSTEIN, of the Rochester district of New York. The gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN] has a bill in the House to establish an additional judicial district in the upper regions of New York State, and at the end of a letter written by Attorney General Stone we have this very significant language, after he had indicated disapproval of the bill:

> This report is not in conflict with the financial program of the President of the United States.

Although this language is vague, I presume that the President in strictest economy does not want any more judges in northern New York. At the risk of being accused of using one Republican President's argument of economy, I nevertheless desire to caution the other side to heed the President. He opposes additional judges in northern New York. To be consistent he must oppose additional judges for southern New York.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. CELLER. Gentlemen, we get nowhere whatsoever if we every once in a while answer the plea of certain sections of the country for additional judges. It is a hit-and-miss policy, a mere palliative. It gets us nowhere. We must develop some sort of permanent policy with reference to taking care of the judicial procedure in the United States, a policy along the lines laid down by Chief Justice Taft of the Supreme Court. We must establish something in the nature of a system of rotating judges. We have plenty of judges in this country, and if there is need in New York for additional judges we have enough of them in the North, enough of them in the West, enough of them in the South, and there should be a policy established whereby New York could draft, as it were, those judges who have not as much to do as other judges in New York and let them come to New York and take care of the congested dockets, if any such dockets exist.

And in that way, my friends, we will do away with this calling upon Congress to give us additional and unnecessary—I say unnecessary advisedly—judges. That is the policy that ought to be adopted, a policy that will prevent the ever-recurring plea for additional judges. When the additional 22 judges were given recently it was thought that the two judges for the southern district of New York would be amply sufficient. Why was not the plea made for four judges? That was only 20 months ago. Has the situation so suddenly changed as to require two more judges for New York? The facts are identical in the equity and law sides of the calendar. There is no necessity for additional judges. In New York also we have a remedy—we can refuse to allow the courts to entertain jurisdiction in a great many cases. The testimony before the committee showed by one who represented the Patent Law Association that it is always the desire and avidity of lawyers to bring their litigation in the New York courts.

In patent cases they can go wherever there is a violation of the patent or the patent license. Despite the permission to try the case elsewhere they always bring their cases in the courts of New York. If we adopted suitable legislation we could deny the right of certain litigants to come into the New York courts to flood those courts with their cases. We can also have an additional remedy in the matter of admiralty cases. Many admiralty cases are brought in the New York courts that have no right to be there.

In this connection there is an interesting letter, on page 13 of the hearings, from I. Maurice Wormser, editor of the Law Journal of New York, part of which permit me to quote:

> The amount of business in this district warrants, in my opinion, the addition of two judges, though, in general, I would oppose this creation because of my regard for the pockets of the already overburdened taxpayers. However, in this particular instance there can be no doubt of the necessity, particularly as much litigation is brought in New York which ought to be brought elsewhere.

Much is made of the fact that the judicial council approved this bill, the judicial council being presided over by Chief Justice Taft. That same council recommended an additional judge for a Virginia district not so long ago, and here is what our esteemed friend, Governor MONTAGUE, of the Judiciary Committee, said:

> In my own State you recommended a judge and nobody wanted a judge; even the district judges did not want a judge. You just submitted it to us on a mere mathematical calculation.
> I am not criticizing the merits of the bill. I am just wondering how we are wandering into these judges, and it seems to be the more you appoint the more you need.

One would imagine if there was so much truth in the statement made of the tremendous business in the court that the administration would endeavor to decrease, rather than increase, the burdens of the court. Yet recently all naturalization cases were withdrawn from the New York State courts and forced into the Federal courts. At each final hearing day, I am informed, there are at least 400 naturalization cases. These final hearing days are not infrequent. I presume that the administration realizes that the Federal judges in the southern district court can take on more work, otherwise why would the administration give them these additional naturalization cases.

There probably will be reported out of the Judiciary Committee the arbitration bill. If this bill passes, and there is every indication that it will, it will have the result of relieving the Federal judges of a great deal of civil work. It will be the means of settling many cases out of court. In the face of this innovation we should indeed hesitate to appoint two Federal permanent judges for life.

Furthermore, in the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, on the original bill to provide for 18 new judges—increased later to 22—Chief Justice Taft testified—page 11—" that the Volstead Act only adds 8 per cent to the business of the court." This has been the first authoritative statement I have seen on the question of increase of Federal cases caused by prohibition. The general opinion is that the increase is far more than 8 per cent.

Senator CUMMINS—page 13, those same hearings—quoted Attorney General Daugherty to the effect that—> in the course of a few years the procedure and rules in connection with the Volstead Act will be so simplified or crystallized that it will not take so many judges to enforce it a few years hence as it takes now.

Attorney General Daugherty himself—page 21, Senate hearings—states:

> The Volstead Act—the prohibition act—is much dwelt upon in connection with the reason for this request for increase. * * * I think it is at its peak now, so far as prohibition laws are concerned. * * * My judgment is that it is at its peak. * *, * The prohibition law increases this business not to the percentage that the general public is led to believe or that an effort is made to lead the general public to believe that it has increased.

That being so, I repeat that we must not unduly and hastily increase our number of judges.

Then there is the possibility, or rather the probability, that the Volstead Act might be liberalized to permit light wines and beer, in which event the proportion of Volstead violations will be materially decreased.

We would also do well, in order to decrease the amount of business, particularly in the southern district of New York, to repeal the Overman Act, which permits public utility corporations to test, for example, any State taxing statute or any State transit commission's increase of rates or fare, in the Federal court by having three judges pass upon the facts, the two judges being district judges, and the third a circuit court judge. New York City has suffered immeasurably because of this Overman law. The corporation counsel of the city of New York has pointed out, for instance, that without the permission of a Federal court the city can not bring suit to revoke a franchise with the terms of which the receiver of the bankrupt transit company fails to comply. The hearing of these cases by the three Federal judges usually consumes weeks. This practice is most pernicious and makes for the very congestion that we hear tell of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is not a matter as to which you gentlemen are interested in the personal opinion of individual Members. The question as to whether you should provide for two additional judges in the district of New York is one that can best be determined by the judges and by the lawyers who practice in New York. And their testimony, if you please, is unanimous on that point. I have a letter from the secretary of the New York County Bar Association in which he says that the Hon. James O'Gorman, president, directed him to advise that the board of directors, at a meeting held on February 4, approved of the bill providing for the appointment of two additional judges.

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I will yield.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. O'Gorman was formerly a United States Senator and is a Democrat?

Mr. MILLS. That is quite correct. Mr. O'Gorman is a former Democratic United States Senator. I have also a letter from De Lancey Nicoll, a prominent Democrat.

Mr. CELLER. Has the gentleman a letter from Lindley Garrison, who received half a million dollars in fees, who is also a Democrat?

Mr. MILLS. I have not heard from him. The fact that gentlemen are Democrats or Republicans has nothing to do with this matter. The most unfortunate aspect in the discussion of this bill is apparently that it is going to assume a partisan aspect for reasons which I may find opportunity to cover. Gentlemen, what you want to know is: Do the people of New York need these judges; do the litigants need them; are the calendars crowded? What is the opinion of the bench; what is the opinion of the bar? I say to you that the opinion of the bench and the bar is unanimous to the effect that these two judges are needed.

De Lancey Nicoll, speaking for the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, says, "Our judiciary committee feels very strongly that the bill providing for two additional judges should become a law." He says, "The situation is growing daily worse," and he says that it takes two years for a case to be reached for trial.

That is the opinion of the lawyers as to the necessity for these judges. You will also find in the report of the Judiciary Committee the statement that Chief Justice Taft after careful review of the situation is satisfied that these additional judges are needed.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In the county of New York is it not a fact that we have over 40 judges and it still takes two years to get consideration of a case?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; and I will say that in the State of New York when it was sought to create four additional supreme court judges to be elected last year in the county of New York, in an off year, when the gentleman's party was sure to elect them, the bill was passed in Albany and signed by a Democratic governor providing for the additional supreme court judges. But when the question now comes up to create two new judges, who are to be appointed by a Republican President, we find a united Democratic opposition, irrespective of the opinion of the judges, irrespective of the opinion of the bar, irrespective of the rights of litigants who for all you care will have to wait until by accident you may elect a Democratic President and appoint Democratic judges. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MILLS. I can not yield further. What does the chief judge of the circuit court say?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What was the attitude of the gentleman as to the creation of those new State judgeships?

Mr. MILLS. I was not a member of the State legislature, and never had an opportunity to express any opinion.

Mr. PERLMAN. And is it not a fact that in the State legislature which passed this bill the assembly was Republican and the bill was passed by a Republican assembly?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I can not yield further. That has nothing to do with this matter. What I want to do is to get the facts before this House. What does the chief judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals say? He says:

> The situation in the southern district was one of the matters which came before the judicial conference at its meeting in September. The judicial conference, as you know, is composed of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the senior circuit court judge in each of the nine circuits of the United States. After full consideration the conference voted in favor of the appointment of two additional judges for the southern district of New York.

And this action was taken by unanimous vote, if you please. In other words, the judges decided that the situation demanded the appointment of these extra judges.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I am sorry I can not yield.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. So am I.

Mr. MILLS. If I have time, I shall later. The chief judge then goes on to point out that there are over 25,000 cases pending on the calendars; that it takes two and a half years for a case to be reached for trial, and that far from doing what the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] said a few moments ago, catching up during the last six months of 1923, every calendar saw further congestion—the criminal calendar, the equity calendar, the law calendar, each saw a net increase of cases over cases actually disposed of, and the chief judge of the circuit court then proceeds to say:

> That being the condition, it is evident that in many cases a situation exists which amounts to a denial of justice.

That, Mr. Speaker, is not the expression of the opinion of a politician interested in partisanship. That is not the opinion of a politician who under some conceivable circumstances may be interested in whether a judge shall be a Democrat or a Republican—and I plead guilty to being in that class of politicians—that, Mr. Speaker, is the solemn affirmation of the chief judge of our Circuit Court of Appeals, stating that in our city of New York the calendars are so congested that it amounts to a denial of justice.

I sincerely hope, gentlemen of the Democratic side of the House, that upon further consideration you will decide whether it is wise for you as a party, simply on the partisan suggestion of my Democratic colleagues from New York, to vote for what the chief judge of the circuit court of appeals affirms would be a denial of justice to the people of the State of New York.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I am quite aware that oftentimes in the heat of debate we let slip inadvertently some sentences——

Mr. MILLS. Oh, I yielded to my friend from Nebraska for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I was wanting to ask the gentleman, by way of a preliminary, whether he spoke inadvertently or advisedly when he said that the people of New York City were interested in this matter. As far as I have seen, he has not presented to me anybody from New York under the head of "people" other than judges and the bar. Has the gentleman any other recommendations?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; I will say to the gentleman that I speak for the 25,000 litigants whose cases wait 24 months before they are reached for trial. I call them as my witnesses.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in commenting upon the congestion of these New York dockets, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] should have told you about how the business of those courts is handled. I imagine that if you would investigate you would find that these courts open when they hold business about half past 9 or 10 o'clock in the morning, and then run until about 12 o'clock, then take a noon recess until about 2 or half past 2——

Mr. BLACK of New York. From 1 to 2.

Mr. BLANTON. And then they hold how long, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Oh, I have seen them sit until 6 or 7 o'clock at night.

Mr. BLANTON. But ordinarily?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Five o'clock.

Mr. BLANTON. And is it not the fact that they sometimes do not open until half past 10 o'clock in the morning?

Mr. CELLER. Half past 10 is the usual hour for these courts to open.

Mr. BLANTON. And if these courts would open a little earlier, say at 9 o'clock and run until 1, and then come back at 2 o'clock and run until 5 or 6 o'clock every day, they could clean every docket in the United States, holding court every working day of the week.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman state his hours when he was on the bench?

Mr. BLANTON. I held court, when it was necessary to clean up the docket, from 8 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock in the evening, and then held many night sessions until I cleaned up the docket in all five counties of my district, and I kept those dockets clean; and any judge, State or Federal, can do it if he is willing to work; but the trouble is they do not work enough. May I ask the gentleman from New York this: Does not a judge ordinarily take one or two or three months' vacation in the summer? Is not that the case?

Mr. PERLMAN. No; some do not take any time at all.

Mr. BLANTON. How many months' vacation do the New York judges take?

Mr. PERLMAN. The supreme court or the Federal courts?

Mr. BLANTON. In the trial courts; district judges.

Mr. PERLMAN. Not a day.

Mr. BLANTON. In the summer?

Mr. PERLMAN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I know some who take two or three months' vacation in the summer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. When the gentleman held court——

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about this bill relating to Federal judges.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. When the gentleman held court from 8 o'clock until 6 in the evening and at night, when did he look up his law? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I had plenty of time to look up the law. I had the law briefed by the trial lawyers for me just like your New York judges have it briefed for them by the attorneys. I also had time at night to look after it when I went home, where I had a good library; but the trouble is these Federal judges do not work enough, and you know it as well as I do. If these Federal judges would get busy and work like other men do, they could clean up these dockets. Then you would not have the extra surplus judge in Minnesota, like the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEFALD] says they have now. He says they have got an extra surplus one. I wonder if he is going to vote for these two new ones here. You would not have the extra surplus judge in New Mexico, as now exists there, or extra judges all over the United States, if they would all work.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to tire the House, but I am rather surprised this bill has provoked such controversy. It has risen very suddenly and decidedly, contrary to my expectation. This is the first time I have even seen a ripple of dissent, and this rule has been before us for several weeks. I have not any interest in the world in the selection of judges in the southern district of the State of New York, and I was hopeful in my experience in the House that I would find Mr. BLANTON on the right side of the proposition; but I am afraid I am going to be disappointed. But my interest in this matter is that of a taxpayer and a citizen who has no other interest in it in the world. There is no question of doubt that it costs the taxpayers of the United States to-day and has for several years, perhaps, more than the salaries of two new judges or three new judges or four new judges because the entire bench in the State of New York have insisted upon the importation of judges to clean up the calendar. We sent them in the past and we will send them in the future to clean up the calendars, and it will cost the taxpayers of the United States more money to have these judges come in than to create the two new judges which are asked.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, if we should adjourn now, would it be in order to bring this matter up the first thing after the vote on the veto of the bonus bill to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of nothing of higher privilege.

Mr. SNELL. Would it be better to go into the committee first or take a recess now? The reason I ask is that we have an evening session, and if it were not for the evening session we would clean up this matter to-night, but having the evening session we have to come back at 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees no advantage of going into committee first.

RECESS

Mr. SNELL. I move the House take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] as Speaker pro tempore for to-night. The gentleman from New York moves that the House take a recess until 8 p. m.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by Mr. TILSON as Speaker pro tempore.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, to-night is the night for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that the bills be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.

CLIFFORD W. SEIBEL AND FRANK A. VESTAL

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5448) for the relief of Clifford W. Seibel and Frank A. Vestal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. What is it?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, what bill is taken up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first bill on the calendar.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. It is all right. I have received information from authority now. It is perfectly all right. I do not need any more information.

Mr. BEGG. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is hereby authorized to credit the accounts of Clifford W. Seibel, chemist and special disbursing agent for the Bureau of Mines, in the sum of $1,418.89, and Frank A. Vestal, special disbursing agent for the Bureau of Mines, in the sum of $546.42, with payments made by them for the maintenance, repair, and operation of certain motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

O. H. TITTMANN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1917) for the relief of Dr. O. H. Tittmann, former Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I think the House would be establishing a bad precedent in allowing this bill to pass. I know it would be a fine thing to put every person on the retired list and pay them a salary during their natural life if the Government could afford it. But the taxpayers can not afford to do that. This bill proposes to pay this man $150 a month as long as he lives because he has done 47 years' service for the Government. We have numerous men in this House—that is, several of them—who have served in Congress almost that long.

A MEMBER. Regular order!

Mr. BLANTON. Somebody seems to be anxious to proceed. Therefore I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF LEBANON NATIONAL BANK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3748) for the relief of Lebanon National Bank.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], who introduced this bill, is not here to-night. But since the first time this bill was objected to he has corresponded with and furnished to the Secretary of the Treasury an affidavit to show that these coupons were burned, and I have a copy of a letter from Mr. Mellon, in which he says:

This is the first time the Treasury has seen the affidavit in support of the alleged destruction, and the statements contained therein "that the coupons were burned" and "that upon careful search of the burned papers the ashes of these coupons were found in such condition as to be easily read and recognized, though too delicate to be handled or transmitted in any manner." The evidence of destruction is very strong, and it would seem, therefore, a hardship not to grant relief.

The Secretary of the Treasury also says:

It is to be understood, however, that in making no further objection the Treasury is guided solely by the very conclusive evidence presented, and that its position applies only to the case under consideration and does not bind it to any general policy.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected to this bill the other night on the ground, first, that there was no favorable report from the department, and held that we should not allow claims of this kind without a favorable report, and at that time favorable recommendation of the department had been withheld because there was no evidence that the bonds had been destroyed.

The fact is that this bill was introduced here and considered by the committee and favorably reported to the House without proof—such proof as was available—as to the destruction of the coupons ever having been offered to the department.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In a moment. I want to make this statement.

I do not believe that the time of Congress ought to be taken up in passing upon claims when the parties in interest have not offered the administrative branch of the Government such proof as they have to justify their claim. Now time has passed since the objection was made the other night. At that time there had been no proof offered to the department as to the destruction of these coupons, and if they were in the hands of other parties, the Treasury Department held, they would not be able to protect themselves against payment again. Now, I understand the letter—a copy of which has been furnished to me—indicates that proofs have been offered to the Treasury Department, proofs so clear as to the destruction of the coupons by fire, that the department holds that the proof is conclusive.

In the face of that statement I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill; but I want it understood that, so far as I am concerned, the department must be satisfied that the proof of destruction is conclusive before I think Congress ought to pass any act for relief, and I do not want any favorable action on this bill to be taken as a precedent for any general allowance of bills of that kind. Only in the case of a showing of facts as to the destruction of the coupons that will satisfy the department do I think we ought to allow such a claim.

Mr. BULWINKLE. In justice to the committee I will say that they had this evidence, but for some reason or other it did not get into the report. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who made the recommendation of a favorable report, had this evidence, but for some reason, I say, it did not get into the report.

Mr. CRAMTON. Far be it from me to criticize the subcommittee, but the fact remains that the parties interested in this matter had not gone to the Treasury Department with their proof, but first rushed to Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, in view of the situation, but the Committee on Claims should not assume that the mere filing of a bond in the Treasury Department is going to protect the Treasury. It also requires some careful, watchful action thereafter. Our colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] is present, as he usually is, and he has placed in the RECORD evidence of the fact that the Treasury Department has paid duplicates of $1,000,000 worth of bonds with duplicate numbers; and, if I understand the situation correctly, those bonds were paid without discovery at the time that they were duplicates. Of course, if the Treasury Department is going to do its duty, it should keep a list of these lost bonds and a close check upon same, and then the public will be protected. They ought to do that, and their attention ought to be brought to this matter in a very clear and decisive way. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks by including in the RECORD the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury and the affidavits I have referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the bill. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury and certain affidavits. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter and affidavits referred to follow:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, April 18, 1924.

Hon. G. W. EDMONDS,
Chairman Committee on Claims,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have received your letter of April 4, 1924, with inclosures, relative to H. R. 3748, a bill for the relief of the Lebanon National Bank, Lebanon, Tenn., on account of the alleged destruction of coupons detached from a Liberty bond and from Treasury notes.

This is the first time the Treasury has seen the affidavits in support of the alleged destruction, and the statements contained therein "that the coupons were burned," and "that upon careful search of the burned papers the ashes of these coupons were found in such condition as to be easily read and recognized, though too delicate to be handled or transmitted in any manner." The evidence of destruction is very strong, and it would seem, therefore, a hardship not to grant relief. However, if after considering the facts, as previously stated by me, that a bond of indemnity will not afford the Treasury Department adequate protection against double payment of these coupons, especially in view of the fact, as set forth in my letter to Congressman CRAMTON, dated March 25, 1924, a copy of which is inclosed, that Congress in making appropriations for the expenses of the public debt service for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1924, reduced the Treasury Department's estimates by the amount necessary to pay the expenses of assorting and recording paid coupons, and it will, therefore, be impossible after July 1, 1924, to maintain records from which it may be determined whether or not any particular coupons have been presented and paid, you still feel that relief should be given, the Treasury will interpose no further objection. It is to be understood, however, that in making no further objection the Treasury is guided solely by the very conclusive evidence presented, and that its position applies only to the case under consideration and does not bind it to any general policy.

In accordance with your request the affidavits and letter forwarded by you are returned herewith. A copy of this letter is also inclosed.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, County of Wilson:

Personally appeared before me, E. L. Carson, a notary public in and for the State and county aforesaid, J. A. Pendleton, to me known, who makes oath that he was on June 28, 1923, and is now employed as assistant cashier of the Lebanon National Bank, Lebanon, Tenn., and that on June 28, 1923, he witnessed the clipping of coupons from United States Government bonds as follows:

$5,000 Treasury certificate, series C-1925, No. 7651, coupon No. 1, due June 15, 1923	112.50
$1,000 Treasury certificate, series C-1925, Nos. 41206, 41207, 41208, 41209, 41210, 41212, 41213, 42357, 42358, 42359, 42360, 12 coupons No. 1, at $22.50	270.00
$500 Treasury certificate, series C-1925, No. 12445, coupon No. 1, due June 15, 1923	2.12
Total	508.37

Affiant further states that after the clipping and cashing of these coupons by the Lebanon National Bank they were lost from their lists and burned, and that upon careful search of the burned papers the ashes of these coupons were found in such condition as to be easily read and recognized, though too delicate to be handled or transmitted in any manner.

J. A. PENDLETON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 28th day of December, 1923.
[SEAL.] E. L. CARSON,
Notary Public.

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
County of Wilson:

Personally appeared before me, E. L. Carson, a notary public in and for the State and county aforesaid, Mrs. Ruby McGlothlin, to me known, who makes oath that she was on June 23, 1923, and is now employed by the Lebanon National Bank, of Lebanon, Tenn., as assistant teller and bookkeeper, and that on June 23, 1923, she witnessed the clipping of coupons from the following United States Government bonds:

(Same description.)

Affiant further states that after the clipping and cashing of these coupons by the Lebanon National Bank they were lost from their lists and burned, and that upon careful search of the burned papers the ashes of these coupons were found in such condition as to be easily read and recognized, though too delicate to be handled or transmitted in any manner.

Mrs. RUBY MCGLOTHLIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 28th day of December, 1923.
[SEAL.] E. L. CARSON, Notary Public.

The same affidavit made by G. E. Ashby, auditor of the Lebanon National Bank; Will A. Hale, cashier of the bank; and Hampton A. Moore, bookkeeper of the bank.

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
County of Wilson:

Personally appeared before me, E. L. Carson, a notary public in and for the State and county aforesaid, John B. Scruggs, who makes oath that prior to and after June 23 and 24, 1923, he was employed as a porter at the Lebanon National Bank, Lebanon, Tenn., and that on the morning of June 24, 1923, he was called to the Lebanon National Bank and questioned as to the loss of certain coupons from Government bonds, and when called on to show where he had burned the refuse paper of the evening before, he, with others, made careful search of the burned papers and found the ashes of coupons, which, while delicate, were easily read and recognized as the following:

(Same description.)

JOHN B. SCRUGGS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 28th day of December, 1923.
[SEAL.] E. L. CARSON, Notary Public.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman if the affidavit gives the numbers of these bonds?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment instead of the original bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of the Lebanon National Bank, Lebanon, Tenn., the coupon No. 9, matured April 15, 1923, in the amount of $2.12, from permanent coupon bond No. E-03144745 in the denomination of $100 of the fourth Liberty loan 4¼ per cent bonds of 1933–1938, and the following coupons from 4½ per cent Treasury notes, Series C-1925, issued December 15, 1922, maturing June 15, 1925, payable to bearer; coupons No. 1, maturing June 15, 1923, in the amount of $112.50 each, from notes Nos. 7650 and 7651 in the denomination of $5,000 each, coupons No. 1, matured June 15, 1923, in the amount of $22.50 each from notes Nos. 41206, 41207, 41208, 41209, 41210, 41211, 41212, 41213, 42357, 42358, 42359, and 42360 in the denomination of $1,000 each, and the coupon No. 1, matured June 15, 1923, in the amount of $11.25, from note No. 12445 in the denomination of $500; such redemption to be made without presentation of the said coupons, which have been destroyed: Provided, That the said coupons shall not have been previously presented for payment: Provided further, That the said Lebanon National Bank shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of said coupons, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the coupons herein described.

The SPEAKER pro tempore The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF HENRY M'GUIRE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1306) for the relief of Henry McGuire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc, That there is authorized to be appropriated for payment by the Secretary of the Treasury to Henry McGuire, or his legal representatives, the sum of $225.23, as full compensation for 9,385 feet board measure of lumber which, upon dates between September 22, 1909, and October 11, 1909, and at the specific request and direction of an employee of the Forest Service, United States Department of Agriculture, was furnished to one Hiram Campbell for use in the construction of a house to replace one owned by said Hiram Campbell, which was destroyed on September 19, 1909, by fire originating from brush-burning operations conducted on national-forest land by employees of the Forest Service.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "9,385 feet board."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PENSION TO NELLIE ROCHE M'ANDREW

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2574) granting a pension to Nellie Roche McAndrew.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there obection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KNUTSON. I hope the gentleman from Texas will withhold his objection.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague from Texas [Mr. BLACK] placed upon the war risk insurance bill, with regard to compensation for death, a very fine amendment, which holds to the policy that when a soldier dies he gives his all to the country, whether he is a private or a general, and his life is worth just as much to his widow whether he is a private or whether he is a general. Now, the widow of this distinguished general was entitled to certain privileges under the law and she is now seeking additional privileges by reason of his rank. I object.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. There are so many other bills to be considered and I intend to object, anyway, so I object now.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman from Texas looked at the service rendered by General McAndrew in the late war?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I am willing to admit that it is the very highest that is possible, but we have certain laws that ought to be adhered to with respect to the service men, whether they are privates or generals, and the general law applicable to all of them ought to be carried out. I regret that I must object.

Mr. WATRES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WATRES. I understand it is the rule and has been the custom of the House not to consider bills after one objection, but it seems to me that under the present rules there is room for argument that it should require three objections. There is nothing in the rules of the House as to the Private Calendar which requires that the bill shall not be considered, and that, as I understand, is a matter of custom.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that we are working to-night under a special rule that has no reference whatever to the Consent Calendar. We are working under a special order, which is that we consider bills unobjected to.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, will the bill lose its place on the calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not lose its place on the calendar. The bill holds its place on the calendar, and no bills are stricken off of this calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF THE NEW JERSEY SHIPBUILDING & DREDGING CO., OF BAYONNE, N. J.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1572) for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, when this bill was up several weeks ago I called attention to certain discrepancies in the report, which at that time the committee in charge were not able to explain.

Since then parties interested in the bill have made a full showing of facts that has sufficiently satisfied me, so that I do not propose to continue my objection. The only occasion for my saying anything now is that in my absence the last time it was up the statement was made on the floor that I was sorry for my objection and I was very enthusiastic for this bill, or words to that effect. I have no apologies to make for having objected to the bill until evidence could be furnished that would, to my mind, justify it. I do not say that the evidence that now has been furnished makes me particularly enthusiastic about the bill, but it is sufficiently strong to cause me to withdraw any objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is a bill that involves $152,278.

Mr. KNUTSON. How many cents?

Mr. BLANTON. And some cents. It is too large a bill to be passed by unanimous consent, without any consideration at all. A bill of this size and character ought to go to the Court of Claims, and it ought not to be passed here under unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMONDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to explain to the gentleman that in this case the amount of damage has been settled by the Navy Department. There was also an added charge of $52,000 for demurrage. If you send this to the admiralty court, you will find you will pay not only the $150,000 but will also pay the $52,000 demurrage.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania without any hesitancy at all that if this bill was a proposal to send this case to the Court of Claims I would vote for it without any hesitation and let the court decide, but for us to decide it here under unanimous consent and let it be passed by a simple reading of its title and thereby take $152,278 out of the Public Treasury is out of all reason.

Mr. EDMONDS. And yet you would pay $52,000 more on account of the demurrage and the court cost. I think this is the easiest way to settle it.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the law, they ought to have it.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It is not the law.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are entitled to it, they ought to have it, and they ought to have a day in court.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman misunderstands. After discussing this matter with the parties in interest, they have agreed to accept this $152,000 and waive the claim of $52,000, but not in writing, and if we go to court they will also claim that.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the Secretary of the Navy proposed to pay this amount?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; that is right there in the report.

Mr. BLANTON. They have proposed to pay this?

Mr. EDMONDS. They have recommended the payment of it.

Mr. FISH. They state they are fully responsible for the whole thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the statement of four of my colleagues in whom I have confidence, I am not going to put my judgment up against the four, and therefore I withdraw my objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am glad the gentleman has come to that conclusion, because it will save the Government $52,000.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $152,278.28 to the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J., in full settlement to reimburse said owner of drill boat No. 3 for loss sustained as a result of total destruction of said drill boat No. 3 through collision with the U. S. S. Lykens, in Hell Gate, off Hallets Point, New York Harbor, on September 1, 1921.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN LANDS AT CAMP JACKSON, S. C.

The next business on the private calendar was the bill (H. R. 490) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to trustees to be named by the Chamber of Commerce of Columbia, S. C., certain lands at Camp Jackson, S. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I think I shall have to object, this is a bill that proposes to donate 2,000 acres of land immediately adjacent——

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield? The acreage is 1,192.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; 1,192 acres immediately adjacent to a military post which we intend to continue, and adjacent on the other side to a military reservation which is to be developed as a forest. This military post has developed railroad facilities, paved roads, and so forth.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Not just now, because I do not want to take up too much time. I want to say a word in outline of my position before I get into an argument at all. This bill proposes to turn this land over to a board of trustees. I do not know what kind of an entity that board of trustees will become. They have the right of perpetual succession. They, in effect, become a corporation, and by the bill they are authorized to administer this tract of land, which certainly has industrial possibilities, and administer it for agricultural or industrial or educational purposes, and so forth.

My objections are two: First, I question whether we want to be so quick in giving away this land when we have spent large sums of money in developing the land we own adjacent, and without any real indorsement from the department. The statement you have from the department is a most perfunctory one; and if we do this, I do not think it should be turned over to the sort of a halfway corporation created by this bill.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I will say to the gentleman that I agree with every word he has said and I believe I objected to the bill the other time and suggested to the gentlemen interested that they put in an amendment confining it to agricultural, experimental, charitable and educational purposes. That would make it wholly a philanthropic proposition. If the Government is going to turn over this 1,100 acres to the city for that kind of a purpose I should have no objection on that score. What the gentleman from Michigan says in regard to the board of directors I will say that I agree with him again. I would suggest that if possible it be turned over to the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is very often a temporary institution.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman from South Carolina will accept the other amendment I will not object.

Mr. FULMER. I will be glad to accept that amendment because they want to use that land especially for charitable and educational purposes.

Mr. CRAMTON. If this bill proposed to turn over something to the orphanage, that is one thing; but the bill is so drawn that it can be used for industrial and agricultural purposes; the element of profit enters into it. I think the bill had better go over and see if it can not be redrafted.

Mr. FULMER. I will accept the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. If the gentleman from Michigan will look over the letter written by the Secretary of War——

Mr. CRAMTON. There must be a clear showing as to the propriety of the Government giving away this land. This tract of land we have adjacent to that which it is proposed to give away has been improved with paved highways and street railways.

Mr FULMER. The citizens of Columbia gave the tract of land and now they want this piece of land at one side. The Secretary of War says that they will not have any further use for it. It was all in a large tract of 23,000 acres, and the heart of the camp originally I think they retained.

Mr. CRAMTON. Eleven hundred acres was given to the Government as an inducement to locate the camp. We have developed it; we have put in paved highways and a street railway, and now the camp is to be continued there, and because you can not give back that same land you want to give them some other.

Mr. FULMER. The railway connected with this camp, unless it can be developed, will be taken up. They are holding over on account of the passage of this bill. In the meantime the piece of land is not worth one-tenth of the original tract of land.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to say in justice to other bills on the calendar that I think that we ought not to take undue time on this bill, and I am forced to object.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield for a minute? Last session this bill was introduced in the Senate and passed. It has a unanimous report from the Military Committee. It got caught in the jam of the Sixty-seventh Congress, and now it is reported this time. They are waiting to-day at the orphanage with 300 boys, waiting for this to be settled.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, let us have something definite about that; before this Government gives away land adjacent and connected with the military reservation there ought to be a clear-cut indorsement from the War Department that the land will not be needed hereafter in connection with the Government reservation.

Mr. FULMER. Here is a letter from Secretary of War Weeks.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is only a perfunctory statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM H. NELSON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6972) for the relief of William H. Nelson.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. This bill, Mr. Speaker, should be explained, and I reserve the right to object.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, this man will receive no additional pay or benefits under the provisions of this bill. He is a retired Army officer now, having the status of captain. He also served a time as private during the Civil War and as captain in another regiment than the one shown in the records of the War Department. Out of pride he wants this bill passed to show this additional service.

Mr. BLANTON. He gets a status that will bring him a pension.

Mr. REECE. He does not draw any pension.

Mr. BLANTON. It will give him a larger retired pay than he would get if it did not pass.

Mr. REECE. He has been given the status of a captain during the Civil War, and this bill would only extend his record to include his service as private and captain in particular regiments.

Mr. BLANTON. If we pass this bill it gives him a higher retired pay hereafter than he would have if it did not pass.

Mr. REECE. No; I think not.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman knows that there are 8 or 10 similar bills in the list to-night. I think there ought to be some sort of an understanding as to what we are going to do with all of them. I think there is as much merit in one as in another.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I had in mind in asking the gentleman to explain, so that we could determine what we are to do with them.

As a matter of fact, we must not be blind to the situation. If we pass this bill, we give this officer a higher standing than he would have if we did not pass it.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman is correct in that assumption.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. REECE. Out of pride of service, he merely wants this additional service to show on the records, and if the gentleman will notice, in the letter from The Adjutant General in the report, the third paragraph states that upon evidence furnished by him he was given the rank of captain in Company H of the said regiment in 1865, so that it does not give him any additional rank, but shows the service in these particular regiments in addition to the service with which he is credited in the War Department. I think I am perfectly safe in saying that he has no additional pay status under this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. If the disposition of the House is to pass all of these bills, to treat them all alike, I shall not object to any of them, but if we are to make flesh of some and fowl of others, I shall object.

Mr. REECE. May I add that this is not a desertion case. Captain Nelson has a brilliant record. There is not a blemish on it. He was an exemplar soldier and is now a beloved and valuable citizen. He merely wants to extend the record of his service to include his services in particular regiments, and I hope there may be no objection made to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, William H. Nelson shall hereafter be held and considered to have been a captain in the First Regiment Middle Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, also known as the Tenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, from the 8th day of June, 1862, to the 25th day of July, 1862, and to have been discharged honorably as such on the latter date, and shall be held and considered to have been a private in Company H, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, from the 25th day of July, 1862, to the 6th day of August, 1963, and to have been discharged honorably as such on the latter date by reason of promotion to lieutenant in said regiment.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "regiment" insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no pension, pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT J. CAPRON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 3030, to allow and credit the accounts of Albert J. Capron, formerly captain, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $84.52, disallowed by the Comptroller General, United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The Comptroller General has already allowed this officer a credit of $125.17 on his account, and the Comptroller General, Mr. McCarl, makes this recommendation:

That Captain Capron should promptly remit to the United States the balance of $84.52 due the United States.

That is the recommendation of your Comptroller General, whom this Congress created and made independent of every department in Washington, responsible only to the Congress itself. This is a small amount, and ordinarily I would not object to a bill of this kind, except upon the principle of backing up the Comptroller General. He ought to be backed up. He is doing splendid work down there, and if all of our colleagues will check up all of the work that he has done there since he has been in office every man will gladly back him up.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I agree with the gentleman in what he said; but the thing that changed my mind—and I first marked this bill with a blue pencil—was that this man, Captain Capron, is a disabled war veteran and poor. I certainly do not want to make him pay back money that he never got himself.

Mr. BLANTON. We are going to have numerous bills introduced here during the next two or three years seeking to set aside the authority of the Comptroller General. I am going to object to every one of them coming up under unanimous consent. If this officer, who is disabled and who is trying to get credit for $84, can get his accounts past the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], I shall not object to this one, and I withdraw my reservation.

Mr. BEGG. I desire to say just one thing more. The difference between Comptroller General McCarl and the Congress is that Mr. McCarl must go according to the law while Congress can show a little humanity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Albert J. Capron, formerly captain, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $84.52, disallowed by settlement No. M-76559, dated June 12, 1923, office of the Comptroller General of the United States, and now standing against him on the books of the General Accounting Office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM D. MULLEN CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 129) for the relief of the William D. Mullen Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is a bill where an officers' mess bought goods and refused to pay for them. I objected to this bill once, but I am not going to do so now. The United States was not responsible for it, and in view of the fact that this merchant was misled, in view of the fact that he thought he had a right to sell goods to soldiers of the United States, it would be very unwise, I think, not to pay the bill now.

Mr. BOYCE. He thought he was selling to an agent of the Government.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Delaware a question. I have told him that I would not object, but I find on my bill here a proposed amendment and I ask him now if he will accept it?

The amendment is at the end of the sentence and consists of these words:

And the Navy Department is directed to withdraw the honorable discharge from Lieut. Benjamin A. Buxton, of the United States Naval Reserve Force, if same has been issued.

Here is a man who unquestionably, according to all of the evidence, was dishonest, and yet in the face of his dishonesty, from all the information that is available, he has been granted an honorable discharge.

Then we are asked to come in here and make his dishonesty good. I am willing——

Mr. BOYLAN. I shall not oppose it.

Mr. BEGG. Provided the Navy is directed to withdraw that dishonorable discharge?

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would like to say to the gentleman——

Mr. ROACH. I insist on my right to the floor. This bill was up for consideration during the last time we had up the Unanimous Consent Calendar and objection was made. The parliamentary inquiry I wish to propose to the Chair is whether or not it requires more than one objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; it is not on the Unanimous Consent Calendar at all; it is on the Private Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. If I understand the gentleman from Delaware, he will accept that amendment.

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. ROACH. I reported this.

Mr. BOYLAN. I stated I would not oppose the amendment.

Mr. BEGG. That does not satisfy me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should be too hasty in this matter, and I would like to reserve the right to object. In the first place, I think the point of order could be made against this amendment as not being germane, and in the second place I am not prepared to say what the department should do in taking away an honorable discharge without considering the question. I hope the gentleman will not press this.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment, if passed, would not affect the man. After his discharge was issued the department has no control over him at all.

Mr. SPEAKS. But it puts a mark against the man without any justification at all.

Mr. BLANTON. The Navy Department has no control over him now.

Mr. ROACH. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. BEGG. I yield; yes.

Mr. ROACH. In the first place, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio such an amendment as he proposes would be subject to the point of order, and, in the second place, I want to suggest to the gentleman we would be trying to convict this officer without giving him an opportunity to be heard. This officer has never been called upon for a statement in regard to this matter other than to state that the papers in support of this claim which were in his possession had been lost in transit. Now, it would hardly be fair to this officer to try to convict him without giving him his day in court and giving him an opportunity to explain his responsbility or lack of responsbility.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROACH. I do.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman makes the statement this officer had never been called upon to pay or show cause——

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. BEGG. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. ROACH. I said that the only explanation he has thus far given were that the papers relative to this claim in his possession were lost in transit, and that for that reason he is unable to satisfy or properly explain or submit his case——

Mr. BEGG. Is not the proper course to pursue to indict the man if he has done some wrong?

Mr. ROACH. Oh, no. The thing to do would be to give him an opportunity to defend his position in the matter.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Speaker, I think I can put it in a light so anybody can understand it in this way: Suppose next November the gentleman from Ohio, my distinguished colleague, would be defeated——

Mr. BEGG. That is not improbable.

Mr. SPEAKS. It might happen but it is not probable. Suppose after the new Congress assembles some man gets up and moves that a committee be appointed to look into the record of this distinguished Ohioan and see if he can not find something and bring him back before the committee——

Mr. BEGG. Now, will the gentleman keep his analogy somewhere near accurate. This man is a self-confessed defrauder in that he did not pay with the money he had on hand.

Mr. SPEAKS. Wait a minute.

Mr. ROACH. Let me call your attention to the report.

Mr. SPEAKS. Let me finish my illustration.

Mr. ROACH. If forced to it, I will object to it. I think if the gentleman from Ohio understands this matter he will withdraw his objection.

A MEMBER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. I would like to make one statement, and the statement I want to make is that I am not going to object, not because I believe we ought to pass the bill without some kind of an action or attempt to recover, but the reason I am not going to object is because I gave my promise that I would not, and it would be punishing the wrong party if I were to object to this bill. But I certainly think that when an officer of the Army collected funds for the payment of the mess and then does not pay the mess and refuses to acknowledge the department's letters he is not entitled to an honorable discharge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ROACH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Ohio make a qualified objection?

Mr. BEGG. No.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. For the purpose of asking the gentleman from Ohio a question.

Mr. STEPHENS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the William D. Mullen Co., of Wilmington, Del., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $85.75, said sum being due the William D. Mullen Co. for merchandise furnished to the Reedy Island naval station mess during the months of October, November, and December, 1918.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN H. BARRETT AND ADA H. BARRETT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 912) for the relief of John H. Barrett and wife.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is of course appealing, as would be any bill that meant the payment of money to any of our former service men. But the War Department makes this statement in the report on the bill:

Regardless of the character of the claim involved, it does not appear that the United States should be required or expected to reimburse the heirs or legal representatives of deceased members of the military forces for private property that is not required or necessary in the military service which is voluntarily carried into the field and lost without the fault of any officer, agent, or employee of the Government. If members of the military forces choose to carry valuables or keepsakes with them in the field, reimbursement for the loss thereof hardly seems to be a proper public burden.

For us to pass this bill in the face of that recommendation of the department that statement would overturn that position. I do not think we should create that precedent, and therefore I feel constrained to object.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Has the gentleman read the second statement of the Secretary of War?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is pretty safe to assume that I have.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If so, you will see that he withdraws the statement, because the articles that the soldier had were articles that he was supposed to have, and they were taken possession of, inventoried, and placed in the hands of this captain and by him sent back under guard for the purpose of being forwarded.

Mr. CRAMTON. The department closes that letter with this statement:

You are advised that the War Department has never held that any financial responsibility rested in the Government in cases of this character.

I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. BLANTON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] will withdraw his objection to the consideration of this bill. Several bills of this kind have been passed. This is a bill for less than $250 and for personal property lost in France, belonging to a service man, to be paid to the mother or father. I do not know anything about the parties, but it is the principle of the thing in which I feel concerned. We have passed a number of such bills. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not insist on his objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that if he can show me a number of bills like it, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I rise to ask that when objection is made to bills, the objection shall be confined to one minute, and three minutes only shall be allowed for an explanation of a bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can control that by objecting at the end of a minute. The Clerk will report the next bill.

GEORGE T. TOBIN & SON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 130) for the relief of George T. Tobin & Son.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George T. Tobin & Son, of New Castle, Del., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $248.98, said sum being due George T. Tobin & Son for merchandise furnished to the Reedy Island naval station mess during the year 1918.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

THE MARYLAND CASUALTY CO., ET AL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6383) for the relief of the Maryland Casualty Co., the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., and the National Surety Co.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1924, 6 per cent unregistered Treasury certificate of indebtedness No. 8249, in the denomination of $10,000, series TD-1921, dated December 15, 1920, and maturing December 15, 1921, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from December 15, 1920, to December 15, 1921, in favor of the Maryland Casualty Co., the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., and the National Surety Co., without presentation of the said certificate, the certificate of indebtedness having been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said certificate of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented for payment and that no payment shall be made hereunder for any coupons which shall have been previously presented and paid: And provided further, That the said Maryland Casualty Co., the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., and the National Surety Co. shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said certificate of indebtedness of the Treasury Department of the United States of America in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed certificate of indebtedness herein described.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "redeem," strike out the words "after the 1st day of July, anno Domini 1924, 6 per cent unregistered" and insert "one United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I have read the report of the committee. It does not show what is the interest of the Maryland Casualty Co. in the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore.

Mr. EDMONDS. Does the gentleman mean the interest on the money?

Mr. WINGO. No. What is their interest?

Mr. EDMONDS. They own the bond.

Mr. WINGO. The record discloses that no proof has been offered that they have ever paid the bond to the owner. I presume the owner is the Central Trust Co.?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Did the committee ascertain that they had paid the bond?

Mr. EDMONDS. My understanding was that they paid the bond; yes. They phoned to me and told me they had paid the bond. I thought the gentleman was going to ask about the 6 per cent interest.

Mr. WINGO. No. I was intent on reading the report when objection might have been made. I notice that the Secretary of the Treasury raises the question that there is nothing to show that they have paid this bond.

Mr. EDMONDS. My understanding is from their officials here in Washington and Philadelphia that this bond has been paid; in other words, it was insured and paid for and this reimbursement would go direct to them.

Mr. WINGO. Was the bond lost?

Mr. EDMONDS. It was lost or destroyed. It is presumed to have been lost.

Mr. WINGO. The committee was satisfied it was either lost or destroyed?

Mr. EDMONDS. The committee was satisfied it was either lost or destroyed.

Mr. WINGO. In the mail or while being transported?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think it was in transportation. It was insured, and, of course, we get a bond in double the amount.

Mr. WINGO. But it occurred to me that as to a bill of this kind—with numerous bills of the same character coming on—the record ought to show that the parties in whose behalf the bill is to be passed are the real parties in interest, and the record ought to show that the bond was either lost or destroyed. A hurried reading of the record does not disclose whether the bond was lost or destroyed and just what interest the beneficiaries have in this matter. I assume, though, the committee evidently looked into that, but through an oversight the record did not disclose that fact.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes; there were some disclosures that something happened to the bond; at any rate, it was destroyed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "certificate," strike out the words "the certificate of indebtedness having" and insert the words "or the coupons therefrom, which have."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "said," insert the word "Treasury," and after the word "indebtedness" strike out the words "of the Treasury Department of the United States of America" and insert "and the interest payable thereon."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RECONVEYING TO ELIZABETH MOORE THE CAMP SITE OF CAMP ROBERT E. L. MICHIE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7805) reconveying to Elizabeth Moore the camp site of Camp Robert E. L. Michie.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill which the committee says has the approval of the Secretary of War, and so forth, but there is no presentation of that fact.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to the gentleman from Michigan that I have here a letter from the Secretary of War.

Mr. CRAMTON. That will be interesting, and I will be glad if the gentleman will put it in the RECORD. But this is another case where we propose to give away some of the Government's property.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the gentleman will permit, I think I can explain the matter to his satisfaction.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield, although I am frank to say I shall have to object.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Let me state to the gentleman that during the war the citizens of Del Rio donated $8,000 for the purchase of this camp site from Mrs. Moore. It was the understanding, I will state to the gentleman, and the Secretary of War so states in this letter, that when this camp was abandoned the property should be returned to the donor. The camp has been abandoned, the property was sold last October, and the Government has no further use for the land. There is no expectation of ever reestablishing a camp site there, and the understanding at the time the citizens of Del Rio donated this money was that when the camp was abandoned it was to be returned to the donors. Mrs. Moore is willing to return the money, and I have the deed here.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it is very unfortunate that when a bill is reported by a committee the report should not contain the papers that are vital to its consideration. This comes from the Military Affairs Committee, and my experience with them is that they are very thorough and very considerate. They voted some time ago to report out a bill of mine, but it has not yet appeared on the floor of the House, so I think they take ample time to have their reports contain the vital matter. In this case the paper most vital is not here. I shall have to object.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I trust the gentleman will not object to-night. My colleague from Texas [Mr. WURZBACH] made the report on the bill. He is thoroughly conversant with the facts as I have stated them; he is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and he knows that the Government has no further use for this site. These people, I will state to my friend, happen to be in a section of the country where the drop in the price of livestock has put them in thorough distress regarding financial matters, and they need the money.

Mr. CRAMTON. The letter which the gentleman has handed to me, and which I am going to ask permission to extend in my remarks and have it in the RECORD in full, is a very perfunctory report.

This is not the kind of report that Congress ought to have before we give away a military reservation. We want an explicit statement by the War Department that they do not think they will ever want it again and that it should be disposed of. This letter simply says that inasmuch as an understanding in regard to a refund of the purchase price to the subscribers when the property was resold seems to have been made, and so forth. "I do not feel that the War Department should make any recommendation as to such disposition." That is between the contributors, and there is no express recommendation by the department in this letter indorsing the bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is there anything to show the character or the nature of the agreement under which the reconveyance is to be made?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is nothing to show that there was any agreement that there should be a reconveyance so far as the letter goes; and there is nothing to show what improvements, if any, we have made upon the property, and there is nothing to show whether it is again likely to be needed for military purposes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to the gentleman that the buildings and everything the Government owned on the property were sold at public auction last October.

Mr. CRAMTON. Suppose the gentleman gets a recommendation that will hold the military department of the Government responsible.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to say to the gentleman that if this was a matter originating in his district and the gentleman was personally cognizant of all the facts, I would certainly take the statement of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. I, of course, take any statement the gentleman from Texas makes, but I take the position that these bills should come here with the information a matter of record in the report to bind not the Congressman from that district, but to bind the department that is interested.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Let me state to the gentleman that this very bill was drawn by the Quartermaster General of the Army. It was approved by General Hines, and I will state to the gentleman that I presented the matter in person to Secretary of War Weeks and it has his approval.

Mr. CRAMTON. No doubt the gentleman can get that express indorsement.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But I can not get it in time for the bill to be passed at this session.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, yes; we are going to have another night session very soon.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not think so.

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall have to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WURZBACH. If the gentleman will yield, I just want to state that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] made this same statement to the committee, stating that the War Department had no further use for this property, and it seemed to us under that state of facts it was only right that the property should be returned, because the understanding, as stated by the gentleman from Texas, at the time of the deeding of the property was that when there was no further use for the property it would be returned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I trust I may have one more minute to explain this matter to the gentleman. I want to state that this property did not cost the Government one cent. The people there donated the money and the Government has not a dollar's worth of improvement on that property to-day. This bill was passed upon by the Judge Advocate General of the Army and was drawn in the office of the Quartermaster General after full investigation concerning the matter. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CRAMTON. For the reasons I have stated, I shall have to object, Mr. Speaker.

LIEUT. HENRY N. FALLON, RETIRED

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 946) for the relief of the family of Lieut. Henry N. Fallon, retired.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I may say that I think that objection ought to be made. The last time this bill was up a request was made for information, and I understand the gentleman from Ohio is expecting to get that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I have objected to this bill on three different occasions, but since then I have talked with our colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], who is on the Committee on Claims, and the gentleman asssures me that he has given this bill careful consideration and assures us that it is absolutely a worthy bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is the gentleman trying to emulate the transition from Saul to Paul by becoming an advocate to-night for everything he has previously objected to?

Mr. BLANTON. No; but I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan that every objection I make here is a conscientious objection upon good grounds.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows that men have gone to jail for that.

Mr. BLANTON. And whenever I make an objection, it is one that I believe is good and worthy, and I am not going to stand up here and object to a bill unless I can show it is unworthy. That is my position, and I have accepted my colleague's statement because I am not prepared to show him that he is mistaken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; I object.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman objects. This is a one-man Congress. There are 434 other men elected, but one man seems able, without listening to the statements, to decide these matters. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. I ask permission to speak here for a minute.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the rule under which we are here to-night is for the consideration of private bills unobjected to.

Mr. BUTLER. That is all right, but I will not go home until this bill is passed.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman from Illinois state why he objects?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Here is a patient who escaped from Washington, went to California, and is gone about two weeks. The family put him into a hospital and put in a claim for $2,078.93. The Senate committee recommends $1,500, and says that "while it is difficult to determine just what part of this expense should be refunded your committee is of the opinion that the sum of $1,500 will fully reimburse the family for all expenses."

No doubt $1,500 will fully reimburse the family, but what is there to show that they are entitled to the $1,500?

Mr. BULWINKLE. This man was mentally afflicted. He was in the insane asylum, and the Secretary of the Interior says:

> I am frank to say that it would appear to me that the entire matter as presented, even by resting upon the hospital superintendent's reports alone, evinces extreme carelessness and an entire lack of interest in the case.

Here is a man, a patient, an officer in the war, who escapes and the hospital authorities make no effort to search or hunt for him, and this girl and her mother have to mortgage their property to go out and hunt for him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is seeking for information in this matter. I think it is proper that the House should know of the attempts being made to get information on which the House may act. All that we have is the Senate committee saying that $1,500 is enough to fully reimburse the family.

Mr. BUTLER. The bill is itemized, and here in the report, I will say to my friend, are affidavits for the information of the committee.

Mr. ROACH. The information which the gentleman from Ohio seeks would be purely speculative on the part of the Government out of the very necessities of the case. It is a claim that it is difficult to determine just what amount of expense would have been necessary to have apprehended this Lieutenant Fallon, because neither the Government nor anyone else knew where he was. The Government would have been in exactly the position the family was; it would have sought information from any source, and the expense of that information is purely speculative. Two committees have carefully gone over the items in this matter. The Committee on War Claims, of which I am the chairman of the subcommittee, devoted the greater part of a day to analyzing the testimony in this case and going over the details of the expense, and every dollar that was charged for we believed that the Government, in all honesty, would have charged for if it had paid the expenses.

Mr. BEGG. What does the gentleman have to say to this:

> On the 5th of January Lieutenant Fallon, having conducted himself all right in every respect, so far as his parole privileges were concerned, was brought up again before the staff conference to consider granting him a 30-day leave, with indefinite extension, in the care of his brother. This leave was granted.

We are attempting to get information from the department as to what they thought the Government would have been called upon to expend. In this case they send a high-class man out at so much per day to California to bring the man back, and when he gets there he would not bring him back alone, but brought another man with him.

Mr. ROACH. Because he was discovered on the street running wild, and a menace to society.

Mr. CRAMTON. And is it not a fact that most of the expenditure was incurred after they found the man?

Mr. ROACH. The physician's treatment was incurred after they found him.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection and give me a minute?

Mr. BEGG. I will withhold it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain to my colleagues that this money is owing by our Government. This is one of the most distinguished men that ever sailed the great deep sea in an armed American ship. He is himself responsible for the sinking of two submarines. He lost his reason, I believe, in the undertaking. He served 14 months upon the submarine destroyer O'Brien on the coast of France He escaped from St. Elizabeth Asylum. He was not paroled and never had the liberty extended to him. It is in evidence in the department that recommends the payment of this bill, that the superintendent directed his keeper not to let him out of his cell.

That information never was communicated, and after this officer had his dinner the cell door was open——

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BUTLER. Just wait. I want to put myself right, because I know these people and they live my near neighbors. I desire to say that I am not putting anything in the RECORD here that I do not believe is right. The family of this great sailor can not afford to pay these bills, and they should not be asked to pay them from their own private purse. They are now sustaining this sailor man in an asylum. The man was made mad from military service. After his escape from St. Elizabeths he was found in California. The department did not go in the search to find him. If anybody will read the report he will see that the authorities took no part in the search, but put the responsibility upon the family. They searched for him in New York and Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and finally located him in California, wandering around, half clad, half starved, and they are now maintaining him at private expense in a private hospital. These bills are all right. I have not anything further to say at this time. [Applause.] Let the objection be made. I ask that a majority of this House shall pass upon a claim of this kind. The people of the United States can not afford to treat their soldiers as this man has been treated. This family has paid, and the Government was paying at the time to safely keep him in an asylum. He was permitted to escape, and the Government should have made the search. He was in an asylum where he was supposed to be safe, and was allowed to escape through negligence of his keeper, and for one month wandered unfed and unclothed until found by his family in California. Of course his family sent for him, as I would have done for my son. I would have sent the best man I could. I would have beggared myself to save him. He was worth it. He rendered his country service that few other men have rendered.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. And they sold their home to do it.

Mr. BUTLER. I have heard so. It is said they have disposed of property to keep their beloved son, a brilliant young man who had come from Annapolis with honors and served his country until he had reached the grade of lieutenant, and then as I have said, lost his mind in the service of his country. His family should have these expenses paid at once. He is the same to his kin as though he were sane, and their affection for him is even greater because of his infirmity. I protest against Congress declining to pay the bills incurred honestly in the search for and the recovery of this man. Furthermore, as an evidence of the character of his service he has been decorated by the British Government with its highest medal, as he has been decorated by this country with one of its highest medals for valorous and heroic service in the presence of its armed enemy.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I would have to be pretty stony hearted to withstand the appeal that he has just made. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. In my 28 years of service, I believe, this is the third or fourth bill of the kind that I have introduced. I know these people well, as I have said; they are my neighbors, honorable and honest. Of all men who did masterful service in the Great War, from my congressional district, no one whom I know of outdid Fallon, who as I have said steered his boat alongside two submarines and assisted his crew in sinking them.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I am not going to object—I simply want to say that I think there is nothing that Uncle Tom, as everybody calls the gentleman from Pennsylvania, really wants that will be denied him.

Mr. BUTLER. I do want it, Jim, very badly. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEGG. And I want to add one further statement now, for the sake of the future. This is not a pleasant task that I have been asked to perform and I do not want this to be considered a precedent. So far as my humble effort goes, I think I was entirely fair when I said that I was willing to allow whatever the department said it would have cost the Government, but I am not going to even stand on that after the fine speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. I am grateful to my friend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the family of Lieut. Henry N. Fallon, United States Navy, retired, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 in full satisfaction of all claims for expenses incurred by them or under their direction in the locating and caring for Lieut. Henry N. Fallon after his escape from St. Elizabeths Hospital, District of Columbia.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "the family" and insert "Amy L. Fallon, mother"; and on page 1, line 8, strike out the word "them" and insert the word "her"; and in the same line strike out the word "their" and insert the word "her."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, there is just one statement that I want to make in connection with this bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let the gentleman extend his remarks.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; I will not. I have carefully read the report of Doctor White, the superintendent of St. Elizabeths, whom I know very well and for whom I have a very great admiration. I have also read the report of Secretary Fall, which indulges in very severe criticism of Doctor White. I do not need to discuss Secretary Fall; but I want to say that my action in withholding an objection to this bill is not to be taken in any way as an indorsement of the criticisms of Doctor White by Secretary Fall, because I consider they are absolutely unjustified.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act for the relief of Amy L. Fallon, mother of Lieut. Henry N. Fallon, retired."

PETER C. KEEGAN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 210) for the relief of Peter C. Keegan and others.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The report says that the Government has already paid Commissioner Keegan $5,000; Commissioner Murchie, $5,000; Commissioner Maddigan, $3,876.86; and Counsel Fellows, $6,411.73. They had exceeded the appropriation. The department so notified them. They went ahead, nevertheless, and now they claim this sum. I do not think it is a wise policy to allow a commission to exceed an appropriation without any authority whatever. We have not been paying these claims. We have so many commissions that if we once established a policy, all of them are going to exceed their appropriations. I think there should be some explanation outside of this report that will warrant the payment of this claim. I withhold my objection.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this report is based on a letter from the Secretary of State. Congress passed a law creating this commission. The commission served in conjunction with a commission appointed by Great Britain.

The only information that the committee has is what is contained in the records submitted by the department, and it occurs to me that if we can not take the recommendations made by the Secretary of State on matters that he has under his control, we would not know where to go to get the information. The facts are that this commission served for many days after the appropriation had expired. This commission submitted claims on the basis of $50 per day. The Secretary of State thought that was too high and cut their per diem to $20 per day, and this bill embodies a compromise and an agreement between the Department of State and these gentlemen. It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that this compromise should be approved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Do I understand that these parties have agreed, in accordance with the suggestion made by Secretary Hughes, to accept this in full settlement, and this is the exact amount in the bill to which Secretary Hughes agreed?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Peter C. Keegan, the sum of $1,700; to the estate of John B. Madigan, the sum of $348.14; to the estate of Oscar F. Fellows, the sum of $2,950.77, said sums representing additional compensation for services rendered on the St. John River Commission.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time; was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES MORAN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 589) for the relief of James Moran.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, James Moran, late corporal in the One hundred and ninth Company, United States Coast Artillery Corps, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of Company A, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, what about this amendment that the Adjutant General recommends that ought to be incorporated? The Adjutant General in his recommendation says that if the bill is to be enacted into law it should be amended according to a suggestion that he had made. I took it for granted that the committee, of course, was going so to amend it, and I hope they will amend it. What does the chairman of the Committee on Claims say about it?

Mr. EDMONDS. This is a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLANTON. Who represents that committee?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. McSWAIN reported this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Notwithstanding that it has passed the objection stage here The Adjutant General recommends an amendment to the committee. I have not had time to look up the exact wording of the amendment. It is too late, but I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. That the bill be passed over——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over——

Mr. BOYLAN. I would like to make a statement, Mr. Speaker. In the absence of Mr. McSWAIN, I will say the Committee on Military Affairs considered this bill and whatever recommendations were made by The Adjutant General were included in the bill, and I am pretty sure the bill is in the form now which he desires.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I can say to the gentleman from Texas that the change has been made in the first part of the bill which referred to the United States Coast Artillery Corps. That change has been made in the Senate bill and is in the correct form at present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention to the recommendation from The Adjutant General. Of course, it is a small matter, but the House ought to know this fact. The Adjutant General suggests this:

> The War Department has not authority to amend this record so as to show that this soldier was honorably discharged as a member of Company A, Ninth United States Infantry, as of August 25, 1899, or any other date, he having been, in fact, dishonorably discharged as a member of that organization on that date.

And he suggests that it be amended accordingly. Now, the bill, in the face of that suggestion, says that this man was honorably discharged, which is not in accord with the suggestion made by The Adjutant General; but unless the Committee on Military Affairs sees fit to protect the matter, I am not going to do so.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman overlooked this fact. The object of this bill is to give a pensionable status.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The Adjutant General always objects to correcting the records down there, where often it is contended there is an error, and I think that is the contention possibly in this case; but the War Department takes the position that they do not object to the language used in this bill that in the administration of the pension laws he shall be considered as honorably discharged. I think the form now meets the objection of the War Department. This will not correct the military record but provides that in the administration of the pension laws he shall have the same status as if honorably discharged.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM BROWN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2313) authorizing the issuance of a patent to William Brown.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause a patent to issue to William Brown, a native or Indian, of Ketchikan, Alaska, to a tract or parcel of land situated in the District of Alaska, to be described in said patent as follows, to wit: Beginning at the point near the high-water line on the north shore of Tongass Narrows, now marked by a half-inch copper bolt cemented into a solid rock, said point being 1,708.5 feet south 51 degrees, 34 minutes, and nine-hundredths of a second east, true, from the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey triangulation station "Red," and 3,245.6 feet south, 79 degrees, 45 minutes, and 25 seconds east, true, from the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey triangulation station "Hick," on Pennock Island; thence north 46 degrees and six-hundredths of a minute east, true, 400 feet; thence south 43 degrees and 54 minutes east, true, 250 feet; thence south 46 degrees and six-hundredths of a minute west, true, 400 feet, more or less, to the high-water line; thence northwesterly, following the meanderings of the high water of the shore line, to the point of beginning, containing 2 acres, more or less, upon his payment therefor at the rate of $2.50 per acre: Provided, however, That said patent shall contain an expressed reservation to the United States of a permanent right of way over said land 60 feet in width for a road which has been or may be located and constructed thereon by, or under the supervision of, the Bureau of Public Roads.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "hundredths of a second" and insert in lieu thereof "seconds."

Page 2, line 7, strike out "hundredths of a minute" and insert the word "minutes."

Page 2, line 11, strike out the words "hundredths of a minute" and insert "minutes."

Page 2, line 21, insert a colon and "Provided further, That said William Brown shall apply to the surveyor general for the survey of said tract, at his own proper expense, within six months from and after the passage of this act, and that the patent, when issued, be in accordance with the terms of such survey."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I intended to get some information on this bill before consent was given, but my attention was diverted so I will get that information now.

Did the Committee on Public Lands adopt this policy represented by this bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is a case where the United States Government took up a certain section of land for a lighthouse depot, where they constructed a wharf to keep material for the lighthouse. They found in that section this little plat occupied by this Indian. Now, the Department of Commerce relinquishes it, and the Department of the Interior favors giving the patent to this 2 acres of land.

Mr. WINGO. I am acquainted with the record. I understand an Indian squatted on the land with absolutely no title. He then leased it to a tenant. Then he quit-claimed it to his tenant. His tenant quitclaimed it to a Jap. The Jap, I think, quitclaimed it to this man. Is that the chain of title?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes: but this was land that the Indians occupied at the mouth of this little brook from time immemorial.

Mr. WINGO. Yes. I want to know if the Committee on Public Lands has adopted the policy of granting title or patent to land where the patentee traces his title back to a quitclaim from a squatter? Is that the policy?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. That is not involved in this case at all.

Mr. WINGO. Is the report correct about the chain of title?

Mr. RAKER. Well, there is no chain of title.

Mr. WINGO. Well, is that the policy of the Committee on Public Lands to authorize the issuance of patent to a man who has no chain of title at all?

Mr. RAKER. That is not the case at all.

Mr. WINGO. I know what the case is. The gentleman says that in this case there is no chain of title. He is in error. Is not that true?

Mr. RAKER. There is no legal chain of title.

Mr. WINGO. I notice that the Interior Department recommends it. But I am interested to know why they are willing to grant a patent in a case like this, yet refuse it in other cases. When lands are set aside under proper acts of Congress and selections are made, and the records are filed with the local land office for 50 years, and they show that title deeds passed from the Federal Government, and some thirty-odd years before the land was sold for State taxes, forfeited to the State, and the State issued a deed to citizens, and those citizens, numbers of them, lived on the land and conveyed it; some day the department finds out that its local records show that this land was not alienated by the Government away back yonder, whereas the records at Washington show that the entries were canceled, then they say, "We will not authorize patent to go to the people who have rested on that title all these years. No; you have got to go and buy up scrip," some of which costs $15 an acre. I would like to know about the policy.

Mr. RAKER. As to the very character of case that the gentleman has suggested, I will guarantee that within this and preceding Congresses there have been 25 similar cases which the department has reported favorably from the Southern States, and patents have been issued to the parties in identically like cases.

Mr. WINGO. Well, they will do it for some Members of Congress, but they will not do it for others.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF THE ESTATE OF CHARLES L. FREER, DECEASED

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8100) for the relief of the estate of Charles L. Freer, deceased.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8100) for the relief of the estate of Charles L. Freer, deceased

Whereas Charles L. Freer, deceased, late of Detroit, Mich., presented to the Nation, through the Smithsonian Institution, art collections valued at several million dollars and provided over a million dollars for the erection by the institution of a building to house this collection; and

Whereas the said Smithsonian Institution, in addition to certain specific bequests, was named as the residuary legatee by the will of the said Charles L. Freer; and

Whereas all taxes and other charges found due against the estate of the said Charles L. Freer, having been paid by the executors, the said estate was closed, the residue paid over to the Smithsonian Institution, and the executors discharged on December 27, 1922; and

Whereas since the date of said settlement of the estate the Treasury Department in a reexamination of the income-tax returns have assessed additional taxes amounting to $74,889.56 against said estate; and

Whereas the estate having been closed and the residue of the estate having already been paid into the hands of the Government, the payment of these additional taxes by the Smithsonian Institution, the residuary legatee, would in effect be a serious curtailment of Mr. Freer's munificent bequest to the Nation: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That additional taxes amounting to $74,889.56, together with all penalties and charges thereon assessed by the Treasury Department under date of February 1, 1923, and March 6, 1923, against the estate of Charles L. Freer, deceased, late of Detroit, Mich., which estate has been closed, the executors discharged, and the residue paid over to the Smithsonian Institution as an endowment for the Freer Gallery of Art, presented to the Nation by the said Charles L. Freer, are hereby canceled and the Treasury Department is hereby authorized and directed to remit any further taxes, penalties, or charges which may thereafter be found due from the said estate.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 2, line 14, after the word "from," insert the words "the said residue."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I think we might do well to strike out the preamble. The preamble has a magnificent sound, but the exact facts are stated in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That comes later. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Washington move to strike out the preamble?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. To ask unanimous consent to make just one brief statement about the preamble. I will say that the preamble is not a necessary part of a bill or resolution. The preamble was no doubt put in for the purpose of showing the intent of the bill; but for good form, of course, the preamble is not necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out the preamble.

The question was taken; and on a division (called for by Mr. KING) there were—ayes 27, noes 17.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DENNIS SHEVLIN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1332) for the relief of Dennis Shevlin.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Dennis Shevlin, also known as Daniel Shevlin, shall hereafter be held and considered to be honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company G, Seventy-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, on December 10, 1862: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "pension," insert the words "pay or allowance"; strike out the word "accrue," after the word "shall," and insert the words "to be held to have accrued."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COMMANDER DORR F. TOZIER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1698) granting permission to Commander Dorr F. Tozier, United States Coast Guard, retired, to accept a gift from the King of Great Britain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will withhold his objection.

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not push his objection. The recipient of this gift is a man who entered the United States Cutter Service in 1865. In 1902 he performed a service for the British Government. A vessel was destroyed on Vancouver Island and he was sent to make a search for the remains. He discovered one quarter boat, which was in the possession of an Indian on the island, and the Indian refused to give up this boat except upon the gift of this man's sword.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Would the gentleman mind accepting an amendment to his bill providing also that the King give a gift of the release of that distinguished Irish patriot, Eamon de Valera? [Laughter.]

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I think the gentleman had better introduce that as a separate bill.

Mr. KING. I was waiting until the gentleman had finished his brilliant speech in order to withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman to give us one precedent for this.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Oh, there are many precedents.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman recite one? We have an inhibition of law against it.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Not against gifts of this kind, but we have a constitutional inhibition.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the precedent?

Mr. COLE of Iowa. We have a long line of precedents.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman from Iowa will yield, I will say that during the World War—if the gentleman from Texas wants information—Congress passed a general act——

Mr. BLANTON. About the only things of value——

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to say to the gentleman from Texas that during the World War Congress passed a general act permitting men in the military service to accept decorations, and so forth. Whether it went as far as to include gifts I do not know, but this is about in the same status as decorations.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that we passed at least two bills of the same kind in the last Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. If this gift were anything other than a sword I would object.

Mr. KING. What is the King going to give him?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; I want to find out what the King is going to give him.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. This man gave up his sword and the King of England is going to give it back to him.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Commander Dorr F. Tozier, United States Coast Guard, retired, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a sword tendered to him by the King of Great Britain through the Department of State of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EXCHANGE OF LAND FORMERLY USED AS A SITE FOR THE POINT OF WOODS RANGE LIGHTS, MICHIGAN, FOR OTHER LANDS IN THE VICINITY

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4481) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to exchange land formerly used as a site for the Point of Woods Range Lights, Michigan, for other lands in the vicinity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan what is the necessity for this?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. This involves the transfer of something like four or five acres; it involves giving up the old site used for a range light for a new site, which is badly needed for the same purpose.

Mr. WINGO. It is a question of exchange?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant and convey to Robert P. Hudson, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., all of that certain lot or piece of land acquired by the United States through condemnation proceedings by an order dated January 18, 1909, of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan, northern division, described as follows:

That part of lot 1, section 25, township 45 north, range 2 east, beginning at a point marked by a stone monument bearing south 40 degrees, 42 minutes, 50.07 feet distant from the center of the front range light mast, and running north 46 degrees, 47 minutes, 22.13 seconds west, 408.77 feet; thence north 43 degrees, 12 minutes, 37.87 seconds east, 100 feet; thence south 46 degrees, 47 minutes, 22.13 seconds east, 453 feet, more or less, to the shore of the St. Marys River; thence along said shore in a southwesterly direction to the point of intersection of said shore with a line bearing south 46 degrees, 47 minutes, 22.13 seconds east from the point of beginning; thence along said last line north 46 degrees, 47 minutes, 22.13 seconds west, 54 feet, more or less, to the point of beginning; for and in consideration of the said Robert P. Hudson granting and conveying to the United States in fee simple, free and clear of all mortgages, liens, encumbrances, taxes, or claims of any kind whatsoever, the following-described premises:

That part of lot 1, section 25, township 45 north, range 2 east, beginning at a point 20 feet south 44° 16′ west from the center of the cast-iron mast supporting the Point of Woods Range Front Light, center of said mast being 206 feet north 38° 50′ east from the location of the old front light of the Point of Woods Range; thence north 45° 44′ west 350 feet; thence north 44° 16′ east 60 feet, more or less, to the St. Marys River; thence southeasterly along the shore of the St. Marys River to its intersection with a line through the point of beginning, and bearing south 45° 44′ east; thence north 45° 44′ west along the above line 100 feet, more or less, to the point of beginning, all bearings given being from the true north:

Provided, That the Attorney General shall first examine the title of the said Robert P. Hudson to premises to be conveyed to the United States as aforesaid and shall furnish his written opinion in favor of the validity thereof: Provided further, That the said Robert P. Hudson, within such reasonable time after the passage of this bill as may be determined by the Secretary of Commerce, shall deed to the United States the premises herein described to be conveyed by him: And provided further, That the said Robert P. Hudson shall furnish, free of expense to the United States, requisite abstracts, official certifications, and evidences of title that the Attorney General may deem necessary; and that any expense necessary to be incurred by the United States in affecting this exchange shall be payable from the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," for the fiscal years in which such expenses are incurred.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 5, strike out the word "affecting" and insert in lieu thereof the word "effecting."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF FORREST J. KRAMER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7249) for the relief of Forrest J. Kramer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I object to that bill unless——

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will withhold his objection, I think I can explain it.

Mr. BEGG. I will state my objection; and then if the gentleman thinks he can explain it, all right. I can see no difference between this and if I were to buy a piece of property from some other man, and if I were not careful and were careless in my purchase and paid the man in full for the property and then he could not deliver a clear title, I certainly think the Government would not owe me for the amount of money I lost; hence I am going to object.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will withhold his objection for one minute, I think I can explain it so that the gentleman will not object. Let me say that the purchase of this land was not from this woman Mary Marshall, but the purchase of this land was through the Indian officials. This party Kramer had no dealings whatever with the woman Mary Marshall, who owned this land. The way this is done is this: The supposed owner of this land was a restricted Creek Indian. Under the law and under the rules of the department she could apply, through the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, a Federal official in Oklahoma, for the removal of her restrictions; she did so apply; that was forwarded, through the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, to the Secretary of the Interior for approval, and the Secretary of the Interior approved it. Now, under the rules and regulations this land was offered for sale by Federal officials and not by this woman, the supposed owner of the land. This man paid not only the appraised value, which was $2,400, for the 80 acres of land, but he gave $2,520, and at the time he did it he deposited 10 per cent, under the rules, with the Federal officials, not with the woman. He had no dealings whatever with this woman. Then when the deed was delivered to him through the Federal officials he paid the remainder of the purchase price, making $2,520. The deed was delivered to him by the Indian officials, and when he goes to get possession of the land he finds that this person who had made application to have her restrictions removed, and who had made this deed, was not the owner of the land at all. The Indian officials in the meantime had paid out $104.90 of the money of this innocent purchaser, who had no dealings except with the Federal officials, and then it was discovered that this woman who had made an application for the removal of her restrictions and who made this deed, which was fraudulent, was not the party to whom the land was allotted. It was no fault on earth of the alleged purchaser.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is making a very plausible statement.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is exactly what this report shows.

Mr. BEGG. Now, the report does not show that to me, as I understand the report.

Mr. HASTINGS. I knew the gentleman did not understand it.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question. Why is not the purchaser in the same position to protect himself from fraud in this kind of a sale as he would be if he buys from another individual outright?

Mr. HASTINGS. He did not deal with this woman at all.

Mr. BEGG. That does not make any difference. Why did he pay over the money?

Mr. HASTINGS. He did not pay it to her. He paid it to the officials of the Government and they delivered him the deed.

Mr. BEGG. That does not change the situation to my mind. Would you pay money to the Government for the purchase of a piece of land before you were in a position to know that the Government could deliver a clear title?

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio that in the case of the thousands and thousands of restricted Indians in Oklahoma that is exactly what is done in every single, solitary case where the Indian is restricted or is under the supervision of the Government. You have got to apply through the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes for the right to sell; in other words, for the removal of the restrictions—and every paper goes through that Federal official's office, and this was forwarded here to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior approved it. This man had no dealings whatever directly with this party.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is not answering my question. I understand that all right. The gentleman is simply going over the same thing he has stated twice. If the gentleman can convince me that the purchaser was in no position to protect himself by his own alertness then I will not object, but the gentleman has not given me any reason why that can not be done.

Mr. HASTINGS. This man had to rely upon the Federal officials in believing that they themselves had dealt with the proper party. This purchaser, Kramer, had nothing to do with that.

Mr. BEGG. Did the Federal officials make an error?

Mr. HASTINGS. They took an application from a party that did not own the land, and when he paid over this money—$2,520—to the Federal officials, he did not pay it to this woman, but paid it to the Federal officials, and they paid her out of that money, erroneously, $104.90.

Mr. BEGG. Then the error is an error on the department officials and not the result of the man's own carelessness.

Mr. HASTINGS. There was no carelessness on the part of the man at all. It was found that through error the Federal officials had paid this money to an old darky woman who did not have a penny of money.

Mr. BEGG. Is there anything in the report which shows that the Government officials acknowledge the error?

Mr. HASTINGS. Here is the report of the Secretary.

Mr. BEGG. What is there in the report that says that the Indian Bureau made an error?

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me, this is the report from the Secretary of the Interior, and every one of these Government officials is under the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary has reported the facts just as I have stated them to the House. The report itself shows they made an error and it was through no fault of this man himself.

Mr. BEGG. I did not get that from the report. The report states that six months after the man completed the contract he discovered this.

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, he had nothing to do with this woman, Mary Marshall. He dealt with the Government officials.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman agree to pass this over?

Mr. HASTINGS. There is only $104.90 involved, and the report is plain and states every fact I have stated here to-night. There can not be any possible doubt about it. The report says that Mary Marshall, now Carter, who executed the application for removal of restrictions, is reported to be a negro 80 years of age, absolutely destitute. So it would be absolutely impossible to recover from her the money paid to her from the proceeds of sale.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Forrest J. Kramer, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $104.90, being the amount due him on account of the cancellation of sale to him of land allotted to Mary Marshall, Creek Indian, roll number 3774.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 4 strike out the words "and directed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JEREMIAH O'CONNOR

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5517) authorizing the sale of certain Government property in the District of Columbia to Jeremiah O'Connor.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill?

Mr. WINGO. Let us see about this.

Mr. KELLER. Let me say to the gentleman that this is a small part of a lot, about 20 feet by 30, in the District of Columbia. The person named in the bill owns the lot next to it, but can make no use of this because it is owned by the Government. It faces an alley.

Mr. WINGO. How did the Government happen to own this part of the lot?

Mr. KELLER. I do not know how it came to be owned by the Government.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mean that there are regular-sized lots, and in this particular block the Government owns this one piece?

Mr. KELLER. The Government owns this one piece, 20 by 30 feet. This man wants to put a building on it but can not, because it is owned by the Government.

Mr. WINGO. What is the reason for giving this man priority?

Mr. KELLER. The bill has been amended by striking out the person's name, so it leaves the Secretary of Agriculture authority to sell it to the man who pays the most.

Mr. WINGO. If there is any peculiar reason why this man should be given priority, we ought to protect him. How did the Government get title to it? How did it own this isolated part of a lot?

Mr. KELLER. I do not know.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like to know all that the gentleman has asked and some other things. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell this land, but there is no statement here as to the interest that the Department of Agriculture has in it. I think we should have a report, and while the name of Jeremiah O'Connor is stricken out the bill provides that the sale shall be for cash under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. There is no requirement that it shall be sold at public sale or to the highest bidder. I notice from the report that the property is assessed at $4,500.

Mr. KELLER. That is for the entire lot.

Mr. CRAMTON. I suggest that we ought to have an explanation of what interest the Department of Agriculture has in it, and what other facts there are. I think for the present I will have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

JAMES A. HUGHES

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6737) for the relief of James A. Hughes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. I shall be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. BEGG. Why was not this man honorably discharged?

Mr. BOYLAN. The man originally enlisted for a period of three years, and at the expiration he reenlisted for three years more. During the new enlistment he developed a species of insanity.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman need not go any further; I remember about the case, and I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, James A. Hughes, One hundred and sixty-seventh Company, Coast Artillery Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of said company.

The following committee amendment was read:

Add at the end of the bill the following: "Provided, That no pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS LEAVITT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 88) for the relief of Louis Leavitt.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. I will withhold it, but I am prepared to make a speech against the bill. The hour is late and there are so many Members waiting for their bills to come up that I feel that in the economy of time I should object. This is the notorious bacon bill, which has been hanging around here for six years.

Mr. EDMONDS. Does the gentleman know how the committee has arranged the matter in the bill?

Mr. KING. Yes; I have read it, and it is absolutely throwing away all rights of the Government.

Mr. EDMONDS. No, indeed; that claim is well protected.

Mr. KING. I have been laying for this bill too long, and I can not withdraw the objection at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Speaker, my constituents objected to this bill and I object to it now.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a few minutes?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes; temporarily.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, this claim is one of the claims growing out of war contracts. It is a case in which the Federal Government on one hand said to one of its citizens, "We have a surplus of bacon that we want to sell you," and then another branch of the Federal Government sends up the man who buys the bacon and says, "You can not have that property, you are hoarding it, and we therefore libel the property and indict you."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I did not intend to object to the bill because its form is changed so that it may be sent to the Court of Claims, but I do not want to let statements go unchallenged in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LINDSAY] objected, as I understand it, and he is going to object in any event. He may as well object now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman intend to object?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes. I object.

ARTHUR FROST

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 105) for the relief of Arthur Frost.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur Frost the sum of $960 in full for damages suffered by reason of being negligently shot and seriously injured by a regularly enlisted soldier of the United States while in pursuit of a deserter and in the legal discharge of his duty as a military policeman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN B. WALKER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 365) for the relief of Ellen B. Walker.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do so for the purpose of asking a question, this is a bill for the relief of the widow of a man who was killed. It originally provided for $5,000, and the committee has cut that to $1,560.

Mr. EDMONDS. One year's compensation under the act of 1908.

Mr. BEGG. And nearly every other bill comes in for a good deal more. There is a bill in here to-night for just injuries which carries an amount of over $7,000. Perhaps that is not too high, but certainly I think the widow of a man killed in the service is entitled to more than $1,560 if a man who has a leg cut off is entitled to two or three thousand dollars. I am certainly in favor of raising the committee's recommendation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. I shall not object, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Ellen B. Walker, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., as full compensation for the death of her husband, Thomas A. Walker, who, while in the employ of the United States Government, in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, lost his life by the collapse of a water-tower structure at Paquate, N. Mex., on July 17, 1915.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 5, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,560."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment, and I do it as a pure matter of equity. I call the attention of the House to one thing. On a plea made by Uncle TOM BUTLER a little while ago we allowed $1,500 expenses as a matter of sympathy alone. The actual facts of that bill warranted probably $500, and yet, because one man comes and makes a plea, we allow $1,500. Here is a case of a widow whose husband has been taken away through accident in the discharge of his duties, and because there is nobody here to plead her case we have cut it down to $1,500.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Perhaps my good friend from Pennsylvania will make another appeal.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I am not at all frivolous in my statement, nor am I trying to be unusually generous. I think there ought to be a semblance of equity in allowances of this kind. The fact that this man was killed while an old law was in effect does not have any weight when the widow is getting the benefit at this hour, when, if a man in the Government service to-day is killed, perhaps his beneficiary would get five or ten thousand dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no. I have a half dozen claims for people killed within a year or two in the Forest Service and in other services, and the claims are for no such amount as that.

Mr. BEGG. In the Forest Service there is a bill here to allow, I think, over $7,000 to a man who is alive because his wife had her leg broken and was otherwise badly injured, and if there is any justification in this committee allowing a man who is able to work $7,000 because his automobile was damaged and his wife crippled for life, then I think there is none in their allowing a widow only $1,500 because her husband was killed and her earning power gone. I can not see it, and I shall not vote that way.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. As I understand it, the gentleman makes an investigation of these things?

Mr. BEGG. As best I can.

Mr. TINCHER. And the attitude he takes on this matter is based purely on his investigation?

Mr. BEGG. Purely on equity.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman does not know anything about the parties?

Mr. BEGG. I never heard of the woman.

Mr. TINCHER. I think it commendable if the gentleman thinks the amount ought to be raised.

Mr. BEGG. I never heard of this woman, and it is just a matter of equity to me. If a man's wife wounded is worth $7,000, then a husband dead ought to be worth more than $1,560.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to rise in favor of the committee amendment. I have to oppose, not that I like to do it, the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. In 1908 the Congress of the United States passed a bill giving one year's compensation to any employee of the Government who was killed while in the performance of his proper duties. From 1908 until the passage of the employees' compensation act your committee has paid one year's pay under the law passed by you to those people. There have been thousands of cases where we have settled with those people on the basis of one year's pay. This accident came in 1915, one year before the employees' compensation act was passed. We paid a number of people in 1912, 1913, 1914, all along through different years one year's compensation under the law passed by you, the only law we had to act under; yet you turn around and say, "Let us drop that law," and pay any sum of money contrary to the law what you have passed and which you yourself ordered paid.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. Do I understand that the law or that the committee in its regulations applies one rule in case of death of a person in Government employment and another rule in case of a person killed who is outside of Government employment?

Mr. EDMONDS. The case the gentleman from Ohio speaks of——

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not referring to any particular case; I am asking whether the rule is different?

Mr. EDMONDS. This is not the case of a man employed by the Government. This is the case, I think, the gentleman is talking about——

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; but he was injured before——

Mr. EDMONDS. The passage of the compensation act.

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, the reason for my question is this: I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that the various bills reported from the committee do not seem to be consistent. There is this bill, in which a fellow was killed who was an employee of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and his widow gets the sum of $1,560. In another case the man was a roadmaster, at $140 a month, was not an employee of the Government, but he was killed by an act of a Government employee, and the committee recommended $5,000 in his case.

Mr. EDMONDS. Is that a recent case?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is No. 131 on this calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS. When we treat people outside the limit of damages for which they draw pay is $5,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is just what I asked the gentleman, whether in treating people outside you have a different rule?

Mr. EDMONDS. We have a different rule for those outside.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to make this observation: I do not know of any reason why the Government should treat more liberally a person not in the employ of the Government who is killed by reason of the action of some person in the service than one in the service.

Mr. EDMONDS. The reason is very plain. You pass a law, an act of Congress, which says a man shall receive one year's pay. That is the reason, not because we do not want to pay any more, but because the law says we shall pay that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The only reason this bill is here is this was merely a temporary employee of the Government. If he had been a regular employee, it would have been different, and in addition it has been held that the Indian Service does not come under the act. Is not that it?

Mr. EDMONDS. I am not sure, but I want the gentleman to understand distinctly that when we act there is a law on the statute books and we are trying to follow the law, and if you do not like the law, change it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend the committee amendment by inserting $5,000, and I desire to be heard on that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman presses that, I shall be compelled to make a point of no quorum.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is not necessary for the reason——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Mexico rise?

Mr. MORROW. I rise to be heard on this claim. I represent this claim, and introduced a similar bill in the House. This is a Senate bill, and I would like to explain this bill if I may be permitted.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I want to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Mexico is asking recognition, and under the rule he can proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. His amendment should be reported at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If he has an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. He has offered an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this is perhaps one of the most worthy bills ever presented to you. It is a worthy claim. Now, it is stated here this man was only a temporary employee. That may be true to a certain extent, but he was in the Indian Service. He was a plumber employed to do certain work upon a Government tank. He had done certain work upon this Government tank in January, 1915. Going back the next day to complete his work, having ascended the tank and taking out a wrench to do something to the tank, the tank collapsed and he lost his life. His widow is a tubercular patient at this time, and was at that time. This bill has passed the Senate four times, and is now reported by this Committee on Claims. It has never been reported by this Committee on Claims until now.

It is true that there was a law in 1908 which provided in certain occupations for claims by employees of the Government. It strictly states what occupations are included. The Indian Department is not mentioned in that law of May 30, 1908. This widow is without means.

I want to say to you that the grand jury sitting indicted the engineers who constructed that tank. They were never convicted, because the question of the jurisdiction of the State courts was raised, it being a Federal matter. The woman had no money to follow up the suit. The suit was dismissed. In 1915 this injury occurred. This woman has been from that time to this time without any compensation for the loss of her husband.

I have evidence here which I do not think was ever presented to the committee, because this Claims Committee is one of the most impossible committees to get before I ever met. It is almost impossible to present your case to it. I am not criticizing the committee. One member, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS], did permit me to present certain evidence. But I want to present this to you, that the construction of the tank was defective. The timber that went into the tank was defective. As soon as it was filled with water and this man went up there to complete his work, it collapsed and he lost his life. The United States Government is a just Government, and each one of you is a portion of the Government.

The husband of this poor woman was her sole support. He was a man about 45 years of age. She is to-day a woman beyond the age of 50, tubercular, a patient now in the hospital at Los Angeles, Calif. I think it is a proper claim and should be allowed, with interest from 1915 up to the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, we might as well have it out on this bill as upon others that may follow. This committee may be a hard-boiled committee and it may be hard to get before; but it is as hard-worked a committee as there is in Congress. We can report out only so many bills. Our capacity is limited.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr HUDSPETH The gentleman spoke about this being a hard committee to get before. It is a great deal easier to get before this committee than it is to get the committee to report a bill out.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The committee tried at this session and at the last session to get something scientific on which it could base its findings, and I think it has succeeded thus far, partially at least.

This particular bill, as the chairman has explained, deals with a case where the death occurred in 1915, one year before the workmen's compensation act was passed. But there was a workmen's compensation act passed by Congress in 1908 which covered certain employees of the Government engaged in certain lines of business. If they were killed their widows or heirs could draw one year's salary, or one year's pay, or an amount equivalent to one year's pay. Thousands of cases have been settled upon that basis. If you are going to open this case and deviate one particle from the policy laid down by this committee and established in Congress by law, you are going to open up thousands of cases, including practically all of the Panama Canal cases.

Furthermore, just referring for a moment to this one case, this man was not a regular employee. He had worked only eight days and the job was about completed when this accident happened.

Mr. CRAMTON. If he had not been an employee at all and was a stranger, he would have gotten $5,000.

Mr. UNDERHILL. No. The gentleman is absolutely unfair in that. As a rule, the gentleman is pretty fair. I will withdraw those words, and say the gentleman is mistaken. The proposition is that had this man been a stranger and had been hurt last year or any year subsequent, we will say, to 1916, the committee would have considered the case and given him what the committee thought was right under the table of rates prepared by the Compensation Commission and in force to-day.

Mr. CRAMTON. But in this case the roadmaster on a railroad gets $140 a month, but for his death the committee has recommended $5,000. That does not come in under your table of rates.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It certainly does come under our table of rates. I can not yield further.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No. If the gentleman will get me more time, I will yield.

But here is the proposition: The workmen's compensation law differs in various States, but practically every State allows $5,000 for a death, and the United States Government allows that. Consequently, when a citizen of the country, without fault of his own, is killed by some employee of the Government, this committee has deemed it wise to set that price on a life, of $5,000. I do not believe the committee has deviated $1 from that standard, except in cases where a claim is brought in for a smaller sum, and the committee did not feel justified in raising the sum; that is, in the case of a wage earner.

The committee has tried to get, and I believe has got, a scientific plan for settling these claims. I do not blame the Members of the House for questioning the committee at times; but I can see where it is going to result in a good deal of confusion, at least, and immense injustice if Members of the House who are unfamiliar with the situation, unfamiliar with the law, unfamiliar with the proceedings in the committee, are going to come here and try to raise the amount recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. In 1916 Congress passed the compensation act now in force. Prior to 1916, under the act passed in 1908, one year's pay was paid to an employee of the Government who had been killed in the service. Since 1916 such compensation has been paid upon a different basis, as has been explained by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL]. This death occurred before 1916. If this case were pending in a court of justice, the rule applicable at the time of death would apply. The rule applicable at the time of death in this House in 1915 was the law of 1908, giving one year's compensation. I do not see how this House can avoid being consistent and giving the same compensation in this case as it has given in the thousands of cases which occurred prior to 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I understand this is a committee amendment and I withdraw my point of no quorum.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEGG) there were—ayes 22, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF WILLIAM J. M'GEE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2005) for the relief of William J. McGee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that this bill was introduced on April 12, or was it reported on April 12?

Mr. EDMONDS. It was reported on April 12.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I was on my feet, and was trying to ascertain what bill this is. We can not hear what the Clerk reads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill under consideration is H. R. 2005. Is there objection to its consideration?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the committee amendment in lieu of the original bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller General of the United States be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States the sum of $514.95, now carried in the accounts of the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, Calif., and representing a balance due the United States from William J. McGee, former Assistant Treasurer of the United States, when the subtreasury at San Francisco was discontinued December 20, 1920, due to a loss in current and uncurrent silver dollars amounting to $454.95, and a further loss of $60, due to the payment of a disbursing officer's check on a forged indorsement, these losses having occurred through no fault or negligence on the part of the said Assistant Treasurer; and for this purpose the sum of $514.95 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF CLARA T. BLACK

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1326) for the relief of Clara T. Black.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment in lieu of the original bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Clara T. Black, formerly acting postmaster at Taylorsville, Ky., in the sum of $10,578.28, due the United States on account of postal stamps, war-savings certificate stamps, United States Government thrift stamps, and war-tax revenue stamps which were lost as the result of bank burglary on January 13, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF ROBERT J. KIRK

The next businesss on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3009) for the relief of Robert J. Kirk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert J. Kirk, of Florence, S. C., the sum of $332.50 for service as United States commissioner for the eastern district of South Carolina for the period beginning July 1, 1919, to November 15, 1919.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELEIF OF GESTON P. HUNT

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7052) for the relief of Geston P. Hunt.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask a question. I want to know whether it is not a fact that there was a former adverse report by the Post Office Department on this bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. Not that I know of.

Mr. BLANTON. Was not the first report on this bill unfavorable?

Mr. ELLIOTT. There are no unfavorable reports on it that I ever heard of.

Mr. BLANTON. I mean back in 1922.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I think not.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the case, I shall not object; but my impression was the department held that the regulations had not been complied with in regard to this burglary.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman has in mind another bill.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the case, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Geston P. Hunt, formerly postmaster at Rushville, Ind., in the sum of $10,026.64, due to the United States on account of postage stamps and war-tax revenue stamps which were lost as the result of burglary on March 9, 1921.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Within the last five minutes, Mr. Speaker, this will be the second bill we will have passed crediting postmasters with $10,000 losses in burglaries.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Over $10,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Over $10,000 in each case.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If you gentlemen will examine the records, you will find that there is not a single special-bill day but what we have numerous similar bills. They are having too many losses over the United States in postal funds.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The Post Office Department can settle up to $10,000 in case of burglary.

Mr. BLANTON. I know; but you will find lots of them under $5,000 that the Post Office could not have settled and which the Post Office Department has not settled because the regulations have not been complied with.

Mr. UNDERHILL. You do not find many of those.

Mr. BLANTON. I only want to take up one minute of time to say that our postmasters are getting entirely too careless over the United States with Government funds. They ought to protect them, just like they protect their own property, and then we would not have so many of these losses.

Mr. KING. What has the gentleman to suggest—any difference in the method of appointment?

Mr. BLANTON. The Post Office Department ought to call their attention to it and have stricter regulations and rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FREDERIC K. LONG

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8259) to authorize the President to reconsider the case of Frederic K. Long and to reappoint him a captain in the Regular Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate bill which passed the Senate last night and is now at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to substitute a similar Senate bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the whole proceeding, is the Senate bill identical in terms?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Identical. I will be very glad to explain the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand the bill perfectly, and I was going to suggest that it seems to me the bill would be just as well if it did not put in any directions from Congress as to what sort of evidence should be considered. It is simply a case where the department was considering the matter and promised to hear the gentleman from New York——

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. It is simply to overcome the breach of a promise made to me personally.

Mr. CRAMTON. And having failed to keep faith, the gentleman wants a rehearing. Why would it not be enough if we ordered a rehearing without telling them what kind of evidence they should consider?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I do not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. I suggest striking out in lines 8 to 10 the following:

In connection with the record of service of said Frederic K. Long, including his service during the World War—and just send it back with authority to reconsider, and they will consider such evidence as they want to. I do not think we ought to direct them as to the kind of evidence they should consider.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I will accept the amendment, but I say frankly to my friend from Michigan that I do not want to delay it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the substitution of the Senate bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to reconsider the record of trial of Frederic K. Long, who on March 19, 1924, while a captain of Infantry in the Regular Army, was dismissed the service of the United States pursuant to a sentence adjudged by general court-martial; and if, upon reconsideration of said record of trial in connection with the record of service of said Frederic K. Long, including his service during the World War, the President shall determine that the ends of justice and discipline, and the public interest, would be served better by loss of a certain number of files in military rank and in position on the promotion list than by permanent separation from the military service, the President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to reappoint said Frederic K. Long a captain of Infantry in the Regular Army, to fill the next or any subsequent vacancy in the grade of captain, with such date of rank not earlier than his former date of rank and such place upon the promotion list not above his former place upon that list as to the President may seem just and advisable.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend on page 1, by striking out, in lines 8 to 10, the words "in connection with the record of service of said Frederick K. Long, including his service during the World War."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, of the Senate bill, strike out the words "in connection with the record of service of said Frederick K. Long, including his service during the World War."

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some information as to what that is for.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment is to avoid giving direction to the Secretary of War as to what evidence he shall consider. It simply gives him authority to consider the case, and he will consider such evidence as he thinks advisable.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I suggest that if we had been giving orders to the Cabinet officers heretofore it would have been better. [Laughter.] However, let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the House bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

FRED E. JONES DREDGING CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1078) for the relief of the Fred E. Jones Dredging Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the substitute amendment will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the substitute amendment to the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,457.64, in full settlement against the Government, to the Fred E. Jones Dredging Co., of Norfolk, Va., for damages arising from the sinking of its dredge No. 3 by the United States Army transport Northern Pacific, in the Elizabeth River, Norfolk, Va., on the 25th day of September, 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REUBEN R. HUNTER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 353) for the relief of Reuben R. Hunter.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. UNDERHILL objected.

HEIRS OF AGNES INGELS

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1765) for the relief of the heirs of Agnes Ingels, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of Agnes Ingels, deceased, late of Lexington, Ky., the sum of $5,000 for injuries occasioned to the said Agnes Ingels while a visitor at Hot Springs, Ark., by the negligent operation of United States Government motor truck No. 25967, while said truck was in the care and custody of and being driven by an enlisted man of the United States Army under the orders of his superior officer, and while the use of such truck was dangerous because of its defective condition, such condition being known to the officer responsible for the maintenance of said truck in operation, the injuries occasioned as aforesaid resulting in the death of said Agnes Ingels.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 7, page 1, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000" and the following words, "in full settlement against the Government."

In line 13, page 1, strike out the last six words, and on page 2 strike out lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EMIL L. FLATEN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 2806, for the relief of Emil L. Flaten.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I hate to object to the bill of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEFALD], but this carries an appropriation of $16,000. I think there ought to be some explanation of it.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the report.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to hear from the gentleman who introduced the bill.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Speaker, I can see no other reason for my getting up and explaining this bill, except that it is the first bill I have introduced which comes up for action.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Emil L. Flaten, postmaster at Moorhead, Minn., in the sum of $16,391.99, due to the United States on account of postage stamps, key-deposit funds, war savings and thrift stamp funds, and war-tax revenue stamp funds which were lost as the result of burglary on October 11, 1920.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 9 strike out the figure "11" and insert "27."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TITLE TO CERTAIN LANDS IN HAWAII

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6303) to authorize the governor and commissioner of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii to issue patents to certain persons who purchased government lots in the district of Waiakea, island of Hawaii, in accordance with act 33, session laws of 1915, Legislature of Hawaii.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is too important to act upon without any report from the department, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

J. B. PORTER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3477) for the relief of J. B. Porter.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amended bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $152.73, in full settlement against the Government, to James B. Porter, of Kansas City, Mo., for damage to his property by a United States mail truck."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill for the relief of James B. Porter."

CHARLES SWANSON

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1442) authorizing the issuance of a patent to Charles Swanson.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to Charles Swanson, of Gig Harbor, Wash., patent to lots 3 and 4, section 5, township 20 north, range 2 east, Willamette meridian, the same comprising 9.57 acres, and being part of Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation, No. 23 and 24, in the State of Washington, upon presentation by the said Charles Swanson of proof that he has resided upon the land for a period of eight years, and upon payment by him of a sum of money equal to the appraised value thereof as fixed under authority of the act entitled "An act providing for the sale of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes," approved July 3, 1916 (39 Stat. L. p. 342), but not less than $10 per acre.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

H. E. KUCA AND V. J. KOUPAL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2977) for the relief of H. E. Kuca and V. J. Koupal.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,960 to H. E. Kuca and V. J. Koupal, in settlement of their claim against the Government for land on the Yankton Indian Reservation, S. Dak., purchased by them through the Secretary of the Interior, title to which land now being declared by judicial decree to be in a previous purchaser: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall reimburse the Government, in whole or in part, out of any Indian trust property now or hereafter owned by Amos Henry and Mary Sky Necklace, the grantors, or either of them, the amount appropriated by this act, being the sum received by the said Amos Henry and Mary Sky Necklace, paid by said H. E. Kuca and V. J. Koupal as consideration for the land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it is now 11 o'clock p. m., and the time has arrived for adjournment.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 17, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

481. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, to carry into effect the provisions of an act relative to the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy in Hawaii, $12,079.96 (H. Doc. No. 283); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Fess	McLean	Simmons
Ashurst	Fletcher	McNary	Smith
Bayard	Frazier	Moses	Smoot
Borah	George	Neely	Spencer
Brandegee	Gerry	Norbeck	Stanfield
Brookhart	Gooding	Norris	Stephens
Broussard	Hale	Oddie	Sterling
Bursum	Harris	Overman	Swanson
Cameron	Harrison	Owen	Trammell
Capper	Heflin	Pepper	Wadsworth
Caraway	Johnson, Minn.	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Jones, Wash.	Ralston	Warren
Cummins	Kendrick	Ransdell	Watson
Curtis	Keyes	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Dale	King	Robinson	Wheeler
Dill	Ladd	Sheppard	Willis
Edwards	Lodge	Shields
Fernald	McKellar	Shipstead
Ferris	McKinley	Shortridge

Mr. SMITH. I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. PITTMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIS and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to state that I anticipate several Senators will ask to present some routine matters. I am not going to object to that, and I will yield for that purpose if it does not require any debate or take any time. But we have an understanding that at 1 o'clock to-day the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] will make a point of order against the amendment which I have submitted to the pending bill. There may be other points of order made by others after that time. I take it that no one will offer a point of order prior to 1 o'clock, but there is one question upon which a point of order may be presented and may lie, upon which there can be no debate. Rule III expressly provides that the question as to whether an amendment is germane and relevant shall be submitted to the Senate and determined without debate. It therefore is essential that before the point of order is made I shall attempt to explain why I believe such a point of order would not lie. For that reason I desire to have some time between now and 1 o'clock to discuss the particular question, as I will have no opportunity to discuss it afterwards. I hope, if there are any Senators who have not made up their minds on the matter they will give me their attention.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Nevada if there is any unanimous-consent agreement in regard to the matter?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; there is not. Yesterday there was a unanimous-consent agreement merely for the purpose of recessing, but many Senators not being here there was merely an understanding publicly that this procedure would take place.

ALIEN PROPERTY TRADE INVESTMENT CORPORATION

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want simply to make an announcement. Some time ago the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry reported back to the Senate the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) to create a body corporate by the name of the "Alien Property Trade Investment Corporation." It provides for the use of $150,000,000 of the funds in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian to buy farm products and ship them to Germany and Austria. I simply want to give notice that on Monday, or as soon after that time as I can conveniently be heard, or at least at a very early date and Monday if possible, I shall ask the Senate by motion to take up the joint resolution for consideration. I do not think it will take very long, although it will undoubtedly requre some explanation. I merely wanted to give this notice to the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. ROBINSON presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from Lucy R. Mason, general secretary Young Women's Christian Association, of Richmond, Va.; the board of managers of the Vocational Service for Juniors; Helen Icelin Henderson, president the Women's City Club, of New York; Mary Garrett Hay, president; O. H. Blackman, associate editor Collier's Weekly; the Federal Council of Churches, Worth M. Tippy, Mrs. David Mitchell, Beatrix Budell, Mrs. E. K. Taft, Mary Dreier, Dr. Helen Montague, Mrs. Arthur Slade, Mrs. Augusta S. Page, Grace H. Childs, and Mrs. DeWitt Gutman, all of New York, N. Y., praying for the prompt passage of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 184) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to child labor, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NORBECK presented petitions of sundry citizens of Rutland, Hayti, Madison, Wentworth, Nunda, Hartford, Colton, Dell Rapids, Humbolt, Brookings, Sioux Falls, Sherman, Garretson, Parker, Chester, Harrisburg, Oldman, Ellis, Valley Springs, and Brandon, all in the State of South Dakota, and of sundry citizens of Jasper, Luverne, Beaver Creek, and Hills, in the State of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation for the maintenance, encouragement, and protection of open competitive livestock markets in the United States, and prohibiting the diversion of livestock from the markets at stockyards posted by the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of the packers and stockyards act of 1921, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORBECK. I present a telegram from M. R. Benedict, secretary of the Cooperative Wool Growers of South Dakota, of Brookings, S. Dak., indorsing the McNary-Haugen export corporation bill, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

BROOKINGS, S. DAK., May 10, 1924.

Senator PETER NORBECK,
Washington, D. C.:

Following indorsement may be helpful. That most of the criticisms voiced against the McNary-Haugen agriculture relief measure are without weight, and that the plan should be given a fair trial is the opinion expressed by President Charles W. Pugsley, of South Dakota State College of Agriculture, formerly Assistant Secretary United States Department of Agriculture and one time delegate United States Government to International Institute of Agriculture at Rome. He expresses belief no serious danger as to currency inflation, disorganization of business, etc., as claimed by opponents of bill.

M. R. BENEDICT,
Secretary Cooperative Wool Growers of South Dakota.

Mr. NORBECK. I also present a telegram from E. U. Berdahl, secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of South Dakota, of Aberdeen, S. Dak., indorsing the McNary-Haugen export corporation bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

ABERDEEN, S. DAK., May 15, 1924.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Our association to-day adopted following resolution, which you are urged to pass on to fellow Senators and Members House of Representatives:

Whereas the condition of agriculture at the present time has reached a point where it presents a serious problem not only to the tillers of the soil but to every industry dependent on agriculture for support; and whereas these conditions have prevailed for more than three years and have driven thousands of farmers into bankruptcy, while a great majority of the farmers are merely existing and permitted to operate because of the leniency of their creditors, and whereas we, as retailers and distributers of merchandise in the agriculture communities, come in close touch with farm life and fully realize the deplorable condition in which the farmer has been placed by reason of low prices on agriculture products and the high prices demanded by other industries for commodities the farmer must have, look to Congress for relief in the form of legislation which should be promptly enacted to avert a national calamity, and believing in the practical provisions and economic soundness of the McNary-Haugen bill: Be it therefore

Resolved by the members of the Retail Merchants' Association of South Dakota, in annual convention assembled, That we urge our Representatives in Congress to use all honorable means to secure the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Hon. Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, and to the Secretary of Agriculture and to members of the Committees of Agriculture of the Senate and House of Representatives.

E. U. BERDAHL,
Secretary Retail Merchants' Association of South Dakota.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 2719) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the British Government on account of losses sustained by the owners of the British steamship Baron Berwick as the result of a collision between that vessel and the U. S. S. Iroquois (now Freedom) and a further collision with the U. S. destroyer Truxtun, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 559) thereon.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 2718) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Government of Norway on account of losses sustained by the owners of the Norwegian steamship Hassel, as the result of a collision between that steamship and the American steamship Ausable, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 560) thereon.

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 2458) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Swedish Government for the losses sustained by its nationals in the sinking of the Swedish fishing boat Lilly, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 561) thereon.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1725) for the relief of Rubie M. Mosley, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 562) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 3325) granting an increase of pension to Mary M. Shaeffer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3326) to provide for the establishment of a dairying and livestock experiment station at Dalhart, Tex.; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 3327) to provide for the cooperative marketing of agricultural commodities; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. HOWELL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 126) to limit the compensation that may be paid under the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER RESOURCES

Mr. RANSDELL. I introduce a bill, accompanied by a brief explanation, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The bill (S. 3328) for the development of water resources for electric power, agriculture, flood control, navigation, and other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to attach to my remarks without reading a very brief explanation of the bill—for the development of water resources for electric power, agriculture, flood control, navigation, and other purposes.

This measure authorizes the Federal Power Commission, acting under section 4 of the Federal water power act, to prepare—a comprehensive plan of development of the water resources of the United States for the purpose of providing electric power for farms, rural communities, cities, and industries, of promoting navigation, of controlling floods, and of securing other beneficial public uses of such resources,—

And so forth.

The commission is authorized to bring into coordination the data and work of all branches and bureaus of the Government that relate in any way to waterways. It shall report to Congress from time to time its conclusions with respect as to how the water resources of the Union may best be regulated, controlled, and utilized for the production of electric power in connection with other sources of power for use in agriculture, transportation, and industry, and how such waters may best be controlled so as to prevent floods and promote navigation, and so forth.

In formulating plans, consideration shall be given to cooperative action between the United States and the several States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals, and so forth.

In order to defray the expenses made necessary under this bill, the commission is authorized to use for any of the purposes described in this act, and in the Federal water power act, all charges collected from licenses under said act, and so forth.

It is believed that the funds derived from these licenses will suffice, and that no demand will be made upon the Federal Treasury hereunder.

The bill is hereto attached and made a part of my remarks.

I also attach hereto as part of my remarks a letter received from Mr. O. C. Merrill, executive secretary of the Federal Power Commission, dated the 16th instant:

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1924.

Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR RANSDELL: Answering your request for a brief statement concerning the bill which you are proposing to introduce and which would provide for surveys and investigations of the streams of the United States.

Of all our major national resources we know less about our water-power resources than any other. We have made extensive examinations of our coal, oil, and gas fields, have plotted their location and have estimated the total resources available. We have done similarly with respect to other of our important mineral resources. We have made a fairly careful estimate of our total timber resources, both those upon public lands and those upon private lands, and we can predict fairly closely the extent to which we can use these resources if we are to maintain a continuous supply. With respect to our water resources, the Geological Survey has maintained for many years a series of gauging stations upon our rivers. The records there taken make it possible to estimate the total water supply available at these stations with much the same degree of accuracy as apply to our estimates of minerals and timber, but an estimate of the amount of water flowing in a stream is but one of the factors required in order to know the extent of the power resources of that stream. To make reasonably satisfactory estimates of power we must know the drop in various sections of the stream where dams can be economically located, and in particular the possibilities of storage. On only a few streams in the United States have studies been carried to the point where reasonably complete information is available on which to draw the general plan of river development, not only for purposes of water power but for such other related uses as navigation, irrigation, public water supply, and flood control.

The United States is now conducting on the upper Tennessee River the type of survey which we must have on other streams if we are to get adequate information for planning future development. This survey will cover an area along the river and its tributaries, will locate possible dam sites and particularly storage possibilities. The area of watersheds involved in these surveys is 31,000 square miles, approximately 1 per cent of the total area of the United States. This survey will have taken approximately four years to complete and at an estimated cost of $535,000.

If surveys of similar scope are to be conducted on other streams of the United States, it is apparent that a considerable period of time and a considerable amount of money are involved. The item most likely to delay carrying out comprehensive surveys on the rivers and river systems of the United States is the question of finance, particularly at a time when endeavors are being made to reduce rather than to increase the scope of Federal expenditure.

Section 4 of the Federal water power act authorizes the commission "to make investigation and to collect and record data concerning the utilization of the water resources of any region to be developed, the water-power industry and its relation to other industries, and to interstate or foreign commerce, and concerning the location, capacity, development costs, and relation to market, of power sites." That is, the commission has the authority to conduct adequate investigations on any stream of the United States where the question of water power is involved. The conduct of such surveys is therefore contemplated as one of the items in the administration of the Federal water power act.

Section 10 (e) of the act provides that licensees shall pay to the United States "reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of the administration of the act." It is apparent, therefore, that the funds so collected may be made available for the purpose of conducting surveys of the character described above.

The Federal water power act provides for the collection of charges for reimbursing costs of administration in order that operation under the act shall be self-supporting and that the cost, but only the cost, of such operations shall be collected. If the charges which would be collected under rates prescribed by the commission are in excess of the costs of administration, the commission would be required under the provisions of the law to reduce its rates until the aggregate of charges collected corresponded to the total of expenditures. That point has now been reached with respect to its ordinary expenses of administration. Hereafter there will be funds available in excess of the requirements of ordinary administration to engage in surveys of water resources; and while the margin at the present time is not large, it is likely to equal $200,000 to $300,000 per annum within five years. Those who are paying charges under the Federal water power act will be willing to continue payment on the present schedule if the funds can be used for river surveys, because the information so secured would be of value to them. It is suggested, therefore, that provision be made, either by amendment to the Federal water power act or by a new bill such as that which you have in mind, to place these charges into a special fund in the Treasury, to be subject to use by the commission, not only for its ordinary purposes of administration but for these special surveys. In my opinion no better means is available for securing the necessary investigations and surveys, and they can be had without drawing in any degree upon the Treasury of the United States if the means which I have suggested be employed.

Very truly yours,

O. C. MERRILL, Executive Secretary.

By Mr. RANSDELL: A bill (S. 3328) for the development of water resources for electric power, agriculture, flood control, navigation, and other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That in pursuance of the authority conferred upon it by section 4 of the Federal water power act the Federal Power Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to prepare a comprehensive plan of development of the water resources of the United States for the purpose of providing electric power for farms, rural communities, cities, and industries, of promoting navigation, of controlling floods, and of securing other beneficial public uses of such resources. In the preparation of such a plan the commission shall utilize all data available in the records of the various departments, bureaus, and other agencies of the Federal, State, and municipal governments or obtainable from other sources or by examinations or surveys.

SEC. 2. The commission is authorized to bring into coordination so far as practicable the data and work of the engineering, scientific, and construction services, bureaus, boards, and commissions of the several governmental departments of the United States that relate to the study, development, or control of rivers and their tributaries, and of lakes, swamps, and other bodies of water, and to utilize the personnel of said services, bureaus, boards, and commissions with a view to unity of method and economy of service in the investigation, development, and control of rivers and river systems in the United States in the interest of navigation and protection from floods, and with particular reference to the most complete and efficient development and use of the waters thereof for hydroelectric power and to the coordinated operation of hydroelectric and fuel-electric plants in interconnected systems of the widest scope that may be found physically and economically practicable.

SEC. 3. The commission shall report to Congress from time to time its conclusions with respect to rivers, river systems, and all waters referred to in section 2 aforesaid, of the United States for which it shall have presented plans and shall indicate how, in its opinion, the water resources may best be regulated, controlled, and utilized for the production of electric power in connection with other sources of power for use in agriculture, in transportation, and in the diffusion of industry, and how such rivers, river systems, and other waters may best be controlled to avoid floods and promote navigation and other beneficial uses of their waters.

SEC. 4. In formulating plans consideration shall be given to cooperative action between the United States and the several States, municipalities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, and with a view of assigning to the United States such portion of such development, regulation, and control as should be undertaken by the United States and to the States and others such portions as pertain to their respective rights, duties, and interests; and in furtherance of such action the commission is authorized to receive and use in the performance of its work funds which may be appropriated or donated by such cooperating States, municipalities, corporations, or individuals.

SEC. 5. That in the performance of the duties imposed upon it by this act or otherwise the commission is authorized to employ in the District of Columbia and elsewhere such expert, technical, clerical, and other personnel as may be necessary for the performance of said duties and to make other expenditures requisite and incident thereto. All such expenditures, including rent in the District of Columbia, payment for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, reimbursement within the discretion of the commission of other Government departments or agencies for salaries or expenses incurred in the performance of work for the commission, necessary printing and binding, purchase of equipment, supplies, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and directories, all necessary expenditures for transportation and subsistence, including, in the discretion of the commission, a per diem of not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence incurred by its employees under its orders, or by employees of other Government departments or agencies engaged upon the work of the commission, in making any investigation or conducting field work, or upon official business outside of the District of Columbia, and away from their designated points of duty, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by a member or officer of the commission duly authorized for that purpose.

SEC. 6. In order to defray the expenses made necessary in the performance of the duties placed upon the commission under this act and under the Federal water power act, all charges collected from licenses under said act for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of administration of said act are hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the commission; and the commission is hereby authorized to cause to be transferred on the books of the Treasury from such special fund to "Miscellaneous receipts," or to permanent and indefinite or other departmental appropriations or funds, such amounts as may be required to reimburse salaries or expenses heretofore or hereafter paid or incurred by other Government departments or agencies in the performance of work for the commission.

SEC. 7. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to delay or interfere with the completion of any project or work heretofore or hereafter authorized for the improvement of any of the rivers or harbors of the United States or with legislative action upon reports heretofore or hereafter presented.

TARIFF ON BUTTER

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I submit a resolution which I ask may be printed and lie on the table until Monday next, when I expect to call it up.

The resolution (S. Res. 226) was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas in the general depression from which agriculture has been suffering, particularly in the grain-growing sections of the Nation, some agreeable relief has been experienced from the gradual but marked expansion of the dairy industry; and

Whereas the future of the region hereinabove specifically referred to depends in no small degree upon the growth of that industry to which the soil and climate thereof is peculiarly adapted; and

Whereas with the sanction and approval of the President of the United States, an effort is being made to finance and promote therein the further development of the dairy industry; and

Whereas during the months of January and February, 1924, butter was imported into the United States amounting to 9,500,000 pounds, almost one-half of the total importations for the year 1923, and the highest monthly average ever recorded, resulting in a rapid decline of the price of that commodity on the New York market until it now commands a price little if any above the cost of production: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission be, and it hereby is, requested forthwith to institute an inquiry under the provisions of section 315 of the act approved September 21, 1922, concerning the cost of the production of butter in the United States and in those countries from which our importations thereof come, and to report its findings to the President of the United States with a view to the increase in the duty on imports of butter should such increase be warranted by the facts found.

CLAIM OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 227), which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and audit the claim of the city of New York for expenses incurred by said city in aiding to suppress the insurrection against the United States during the years 1861 to 1865, and in making said audit the provision of the act of Congress of July 27, 1861 (12 Stats. p. 276), as interpreted and applied by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the State of New York v. The United States, decided January 6, 1896 (160 U. S. Repts. p. 598), shall be applied by the said Comptroller General, and report the amount so ascertained to the Senate for consideration.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 1306. An act for the relief of Henry McGuire; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H. R. 8100. An act for the relief of the estate of Charles L. Freer, deceased; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 8209. An act to create the inland waterways corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes; ordered to be placed on the calendar.

H. R. 2977. An act for the relief of H. E. Kuca and V. J. Koupal; and

H. R. 7249. An act for the relief of Forrest J. Kramer; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 1442. An act authorizing issuance of patent to Charles Swanson;

H. R. 2313. An act authorizing the issuance of a patent to William Brown; and

H. R. 4481. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to exchange land formerly used as a site for the Point of Woods Range Lights, Mich., for other lands in the vicinity; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 1332. An act for the relief of Dennis Shevlin;

H. R. 3030. An act to allow and credit the accounts of Albert J. Capron, formerly captain, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $84.52, disallowed by the Comptroller General, United States;

H. R. 6737. An act for the relief of James A. Hughes; and

H. R. 6972. An act for the relief of William H. Nelson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 1078. An act for the relief of the Fred E. Jones Dredging Co.;

H. R. 1326. An act for the relief of Clara T. Black;

H. R. 2005. An act for the relief of William J. McGee;

H. R. 2806. An act for the relief of Emil L. Flaten;

H. R. 3009. An act for the relief of Robert J. Kirk;

H. R. 3477. An act for the relief of James B. Porter;

H. R. 3748. An act for the relief of Lebanon National Bank;

H. R. 5448. An act for the relief of Clifford W. Seibel and Frank A. Vestal;

H. R. 6383. An act for the relief of the Maryland Casualty Co., the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., and the National Surety Co.; and

H. R. 7052. An act for the relief of Geston P. Hunt; to the Committee on Claims.

FREDERIC K. LONG

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2922) to authorize the President to reconsider the case of Frederic K. Long and to reappoint him a captain in the Regular Army, which was, on page 1, line 8, to strike out all after the word "trial" down to and including the word "War," in line 10.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AGNES INGELS, DECEASED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1765) for the relief of the heirs of Agnes Ingels, deceased.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. CARAWAY conferees on the part of the Senate.

ELLEN B. WALKER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 365) for the relief of Ellen B. Walker.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. TRAMMELL conferees on the part of the Senate.

DAM IN THE TALLAHATCHIE RIVER, MISS.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 586, the bill (S. 3272) declaring a part of Tallahatchie River, in the State of Mississippi, to be a nonnavigable stream.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill 3272. Is there objection?

Mr. PITTMAN. If it leads to no debate and requires no explanation, I have no obection. If it does, I must object.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am sure it will lead to no debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Panola-Quitman Drainage District to construct, maintain, and operate a dam in Tallahatchie River, at or near Porters Ferry, Panola County, Miss.: Provided, That the work shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the use of such dam to develop water power or generate hydroelectric energy.

SEC. 2. That the authority granted by this act shall cease and be null and void unless the actual construction of the dam hereby authorized is commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval of this act: Provided, That from and after 30 days' notice from the Federal Power Commission, or other authorized agency of the United States, to said drainage district, or its successor, that desirable water-power development will be interfered with by the existence of said dam, the authority hereby granted to construct, maintain, and operate said dam shall terminate and be at an end; and any grantee or licensee of the United States proposing to develop a power project at or near said dam shall have authority to remove, submerge, or utilize said dam under such conditions as said commission or other agency may determine, but such conditions shall not include compensation for the removal, submergence, or utilization of said dam.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Panola-Quitman Drainage District to construct, maintain, and operate a dam in Tallahatchie River."

ADDRESS BY SENATOR WILLIAM J. HARRIS, OF GEORGIA

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by my colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], which was delivered before the General Assembly of the State of Georgia on Tuesday, July 25, 1922.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The speech referred to is as follows:

It is an honor to address the General Assembly of Georgia, and I am grateful for the privilege. As a member of this body I began my public service and because of the friends among the members, many of whom were lifelong, it was the most agreeable work of my public career.

As this is the first opportunity to address you since I entered the United States Senate on March 4, 1919, I shall speak only of my efforts in behalf of legislation and measures directly and vitally affecting all of the people of Georgia, as you are familiar with my record on national questions. I shall not make excuses for what I have failed to do, because of a Republican Congress, and a Republican administration, but will relate to you what I have in my humble way accomplished in spite of these obstacles. I shall be disappointed if the results of my efforts have not been felt by those who must labor to support their families.

In all matters I have had the active and helpful cooperation of the Senators and Representatives from Georgia with whom I have served. My relations with them have been cordial, which enables us better to serve our people.

In the organization of the Senate, I am a member of the Committees on Appropriations, Immigration, and Territories and Insular Possessions, and the Vice President has this session appointed me on three special committees. Under the present budget law, and a change in the Senate rules, all appropriation bills are now framed by one Appropriations Committee, making it the most important in Congress. Formerly the Appropriations Committee did not handle appropriations for Agriculture, Post Office, Military Affairs, and Commerce. I am assigned to the following appropriation subcommittees, which directly touch our people: Department of Agriculture; Departments of Commerce and Labor; Department of the Interior; Post Office Department, including good roads; War Department, including rivers and harbors, and legislative establishment. These subcommittees handle three-fourths of the billions Congress appropriates. Of the 12 members of the committee, I am on more subcommittees than any other Senator except one, who has the same number.

It has not been many years since a few small New England States dominated Congress. Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, was chairman of the Finance Committee; Senator Frye, of Maine, chairman of the Commerce Committee; Senator Hale, of Maine, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee; Mr. Dingley, of Maine, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in the House. Thomas B. Reed was Speaker, and many other able men from that section were in high positions. These men were not orators and did not make long speeches, but they were the most influential men in Congress. They honestly believed in a high tariff for manufacturers of their section, but they could not understand the great injustice this did to those engaged in agriculture, who had to pay high prices for everything they bought and received no protection on the products of the farm which they sold.

The New England States years ago realized the importance of continuing their Senators and Congressmen until they could become chairmen of committees or ranking Members, as a new Senator starts at the bottom of committees. Senator CARTER GLASS, a very able man, who had been in Congress 20 years and Secretary of the Treasury, came to the Senate shortly after my term began, and had to go to the foot on committees. Although I was a new Member I am senior to Senator GLASS on the Appropriations Committee, and will continue to advance on the committee as other Senators above me retire. A ranking Senator on committees has more influence than others less fortunate, as most of the legislation is framed in committees and relatively few changes in their recommendations are made when the bill is before the Senate.

As Georgia receives more appropriations than any State in the South my position on the committee is very important. Within a year after my term began in the Senate, I visited every place in Georgia which receives special appropriations from the Government, among them the river and harbor work of the coast cities, Savannah, Brunswick, Darien, and St. Marys; Fort Benning at Columbus, Fort McPherson, the Federal prison, and the Public Health Hospital at Atlanta, and the arsenal at Augusta.

Georgia is one of the foremost agricultural States. The wealth of the country is created principally by the farmers. When they can not sell their products at a profit all lines of business suffer. Every section of our country is dependent upon the other. That is the situation which brought into existence the so-called "agricultural bloc" in the United States Senate, with which I have been actively identified since its organization. It is composed of Members of the Senate, Republican and Democratic, who are specially interested in legislation that will help agriculture. Since the boll weevil has seriously interfered with the production of cotton, it has been necessary for our farmers to raise other crops. Our marketing system of agricultural products is obsolete and does not meet present conditions. The trouble is due largely to our lack of storage and marketing facilities, unreasonable freight rates, the high rates of interest and insurance.

Criticism, unless constructive, is worse than useless. Legislation alone will not remedy everything, but in order to overcome some of the difficulties mentioned, I introduced measures amending the Federal warehouse act and the Federal reserve system act that will, in my opinion, be most helpful to the farmers and merchants and do much toward remedying the defects in our system. If all farm products are marketed as soon as harvested, the price invariably goes down below the cost of production. It is essential that part of the surplus crop be held in storage in barns or warehouses. If products are shipped in less than carload lots the freight rates are so high that it takes all the profit. By cooperation the farmers can prevent this loss. A warehouse with Federal license gives them lower insurance and interest rates. These warehouse receipts can be used to borrow money at low rates of interest. The Federal reserve banks give preference in rediscounting paper to loans secured on products in Federal warehouses.

The eight amendments to the Federal warehouse act in a bill offered by me have been agreed to by the Senate, and the legislation is pending in the House. It is proposed to broaden the present law, which only allows cotton and tobacco stored in these warehouses, so as to permit the storage of any agricultural product designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, such as cottonseed, peanuts, pecans, sirup, and other products now excluded.

The Federal reserve banks make loans to small member banks at the same rate of interest as the large city banks. About half the State banks of Georgia are not eligible to join the Federal reserve system, because they have capital of less than $25,000. To remedy this I introduced a bill, and it passed the Senate, which allows the small banks in Georgia to join provided they will increase their capital stock annually an amount equal to 20 per cent of the annual net earnings until the capital meets the present requirements. This will strengthen the system and give the banks more capital to accommodate their customers.

I am a firm supporter of the splendid Federal reserve system. It was created by a Democratic Congress on the recommendation of a Democratic President, who realized that the old banking system, supported by the Republican Party, was a Wall Street system. Except for this change we would have had a panic in this country before and during the war which would have shocked the world's financial foundation. Senator OWEN and I were the first Senators to protest and direct attention to the ruinous deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. That policy destroyed values in agriculture and commerce amounting to billions through their unnecessary advance of discount rates and restriction of credit, making it unprofitable or impossible for banks to extend credit to the legitimate business industries of the country. I introduced bills amending the Federal reserve act in reducing the interest rates, making the rates the same in all reserve banks, allowing loans on agricultural paper for 12 months instead of five under the present law, and requiring the consent of Congress to the erection of reserve bank buildings above $250,000. The Republicans defeated the first three, but the Senate passed the last one. While we were fighting for lower discount rates, the Federal reserve bank building under construction in New York cost over $20,000,000—more than any two Government buildings in Washington. Such extravagance was inexcusable at any time, especially when they were charging high discount rates. The discount rate in the New York bank is 4 per cent to-day, while the bank in Atlanta and other agricultural sections must pay 4½ per cent. There is no reason for this discrimination.

Two bills introduced by me to make more accurate cotton production estimates and reduce speculating and gambling in cotton have passed the Senate, and a third is pending with a favorable committee recommendation. The first would cause the Census Bureau to gather estimates from the ginners of the amount of cotton remaining in the field to be ginned at the same time they collect statistics on the amount actually ginned. The second bill directs the Department of Agriculture to publish their estimates on the current cotton crop at the same time the Census Bureau announces their ginning figures of the amount of cotton actually ginned. All of these reports, announced on the same dates, would provide a better estimate for the total crop for the year than at present. These figures are vital factors in the market price, and their accuracy will deter the Wall Street gamblers from manipulating the market. A third bill, which has the approval of Secretary

Hoover of the Department of Commerce, provides a world census to determine the amount of low-grade cotton on hand, which is supposed to be large and depressing the price. It would include the number of bales of cotton tenderable under the law on September 1, December 1, and March 1 of each year for the whole world instead of reports for only the United States under the present law.

Last year the cotton-crop estimate of the Agricultural Department was 6,500,000 bales. Before the season was half over the Census Bureau's report of cotton ginned was to be issued; and on account of the unusual warm, dry weather most of the cotton was ginned, and the report would show three-fourths of the estimated crop ginned. The gamblers had expected to run down the price of cotton on this report. I presented the matter to the Secretary of Agriculture and urged both departments to issue a statement with the ginner's report, informing the public that more of the cotton crop had been ginned earlier than ever before, showing their first estimate of a small crop was correct. This was the first time either department ever issued a statement of this kind, and it is said it kept the cotton speculators from depressing the price of cotton at the time.

Until I changed the Census Bureau reports of cotton ginned, while director, and separated the linters from cotton, the reports always showed more cotton on hand than was correct.

The Federal farm loan banks, created under the Wilson administration, loan money to farmers at a cheaper rate of interest and for a longer term than the private loan companies. The private companies were anxious to stop these banks and they went into court to test their legality. It was carried to the United States Supreme Court and for more than a year, while the case was pending, the farm loan banks could not sell their bonds to get money to loan. This worked a great hardship on those who had lost so much in the two years following the war. When the Supreme Court upheld the banks many believed and still feel that the Farm Loan Board was not making loans as fast as they should have done. I conferred with them time and again and urged against delay, as our people were suffering. I took the matter up with the agricultural bloc and we passed resolutions urging haste. I was appointed chairman of a committee to confer with the board. The other members of the committee were Senator FLETCHER, of Florida, the author of the act creating these banks, and Senator Kenyon, chairman of the agricultural bloc. Georgia has received more money from these banks than any State in the Southeast, the total to date being $11,999,835.

Last year when the banks in agricultural sections could not get sufficient money to save the farmers from bankruptcy and keep the banks open, I was one of many Senators who urged that the War Finance Corporation be revived to accommodate our people by making loans with agricultural products as collateral, direct to farmers' cooperative associations or to banks holding agricultural and livestock paper. Congress had been in session for months, the Republicans had done nothing to relieve the burden of the farmers, and Senator LODGE, the leader of the Republicans in the Senate, moved that the Senate recess for several weeks. I opposed the motion, insisting that we should remain in session and give relief to our people. It was defeated 24 to 27. I voted against the motion, as did my colleague, Senator WATSON. Had we voted for the motion it would have passed 25 to 26, but the vote of the Georgia Senators kept Congress in session and we passed the Norris bill reviving the War Finance Corporation, giving financial relief to the agricultural sections—millions to Georgia. Since its revival the War Finance Corporation has advanced $6,768,934.88 on agricultural loans to banking and financial institutions in Georgia, and $5,350,000 to cooperative associations composed of farmers. We also passed the Kenyon-Kendrick bill to protect the hog and cattle raisers from the destruction of the Meat Packers' Trust, a monopoly by which five men in Chicago fix the price of meat—hogs and cattle raised in Georgia and all over the United States. I actively supported the farmers' cooperative marketing bill.

Under the high protective tariff policy a comparatively few men are enriched in the manufacturing centers of the East, while the mass of laborers employed in that section are not benefited proportionately. The agricultural and livestock sections of the South and West are taxed heavily by the tariff and receive little in return. The South especially is discriminated against by the high protective duties, because 60 per cent of our cotton is exported, the price fixed in Liverpool, and our farmers must compete with pauper labor of the world. A tariff of a dollar a pound on cotton would not benefit the farmers of Georgia a cent, as short-staple cotton is not shipped here to compete with us. Under the high protective policy of the Republican Party, the South and West pay a dollar for every 10 cents benefit they receive. The tariff bill now before the Senate was written behind closed doors by the Republican members of the Finance Committee, Democratic members were denied admission to the committee rooms, but the millionaire manufacturers of the East were there; many of them had contributed to the Republican campaign fund and were taxing all the people through the tariff so as to get dividends on their campaign contributions. The Republican Party is sectional.

If any benefit comes to the South from the present tariff bill it would be from a duty on peanuts and vegetable oils, which China produces in large quantities and competes with our peanuts and cottonseed oil. The committee gave little protection to these items, but the Senate voted a fair duty, as no one could defend this discrimination. I voted for a duty on peanuts and cottonseed and vegetable oils.

Under the present tariff bill, as passed by the House, a high protective duty was placed on potash, which is controlled by a German trust and would mean a tax of millions yearly on Georgia farmers. All the Georgia Members opposed this high duty. Most of the potash is used in the South in fertilizers and our farmers would have to pay it. The cotton they produce with this fertilizer gets no protection. I offered an amendment to the House bill, placing potash on the free list, and by a hard fight we have succeeded in getting enough Republicans to help the Democrats put potash on the free list, which will save Georgia farmers millions yearly on their fertilizers.

This tariff bill will greatly increase the cost of living by taxing everything that we must eat and wear and all the necessaries of life and place heavier burdens on the poor man and the man with moderate income. When the sixteenth amendment was adopted to authorize an income tax to be collected it was intended to collect taxes only on the large incomes, and those who favored it never dreamed that the Government would take advantage of it so as to thrust the hands of the tax gatherer into the pockets of the farmer, laborer, and small business man, and take from them the necessities of life while it relieved the rich of their fair share of the tax burden which they could carry without hardship and without depriving their families of luxuries to say nothing of necessities. As long as I remain in the Senate I shall oppose collecting any income tax from men of small income. No married man should pay an income tax until his income amounts to $5,000 a year.

As a member of the Immigration Committee I have supported efforts to stop all immigration for five years. The American Legion indorsed that policy, and after my resolution to that effect was defeated, I proposed the amendment to the present law to extend the 3 per cent quota restriction law until June 30, 1924, pending the enactment of permanent restrictive measures. The House passed the bill extending the law only until 1923, when Congress would not be in session, and the steamship companies would have brought over millions before another law could be enacted; but my amendment prevented this.

The Committee on Territories handles all legislation affecting our insular possessions, and in order that I might have information at the source, at my own expense I visited Hawaii and the Philippines. I went from there to China and Japan, where the South exports so much cotton and cotton goods.

Soon after I entered the Senate I learned that the Meat Packers Trust was discriminating against the peanut-fed hog in Georgia and the South. The Senate adopted my resolution to investigate the alleged discrimination, and the Department of Agriculture is continuing an investigation to determine all phases of the relation of the peanut-fed hog to the so-called hard hog. When this investigation first began they were paying from 3 to 7 cents less for peanut-fed hogs than those fed on corn in the North and West, but now the difference is much less. I shall continue until there is no discrimination, and I believe my work has saved the hog raisers of Georgia millions of dollars.

Amendments to the appropriation bills for the Department of Agriculture, which I offered and supported, have made it possible to fight the peach pests by establishing an experiment station at Fort Valley; establish peach, watermelon, and cantaloupe marketing stations at Thomasville and Macon; establish a tobacco experiment station at Tifton; and start pecan experimental work in the Albany section. As a member of the subcommittee framing this legislation, I have supported items to fight the boll weevil, develop the cultivation of peanuts, sweet potatoes, and other crops. The department is now experimenting on Georgia cane sirup to stop the fermentation, which injures the sale and prevents a higher price. At my solicitation the Secretary of Agriculture sent experts to Georgia from the Market Bureau to cooperate with the market bureau of the Georgia Agricultural Department and the State College of Agriculture.

The Esch-Cummins bill, practically guaranteeing the railroads an annual earning of 6 per cent, was passed by a Republican Congress. I voted against the bill. Under that law the Interstate Commerce Commission raised freight rates at a time when agriculture and nearly all industries were at a standstill, and prices so low that the increased rates made shipments prohibitive, which paralyzed all industry. I was the first Senator to protest against the high rates, and I have constantly urged lower freight and passenger rates to help business as well as railroads. When the railroads made a 10 per cent reduction in rates on certain agricultural products some time ago, they did not include watermelons, which, as you know, is a large industry in our State. I took the matter up immediately with the commission and they agreed to include watermelons in the reduction. The railroad rates are still too high. Business and the roads will suffer until the rates are low enough to allow the farmer, lumberman, and manufacturer a fair profit, which will encourage him to make more shipments, thereby benefiting the producer as well as the railroads.

Since the close of the Civil War the South has been discriminated against in many ways by the Federal Government. Take the matter of freight rates from the Middle West to the southwestern ports, including Savannah and Brunswick. The rates were much higher for the same distance than the rates to New York and the eastern ports for years. I joined with other southern Senators and we had this great injustice remedied, but the eastern ports are now at work trying to bring back the old situation.

The South is discriminated against in the matter of ocean freight rates on cotton and other products. For three years I have cooperated with other southern Senators in an effort to stop this injustice. Ocean freight rates from New York and eastern ports to South America and through the Panama Canal to China and Japan are the same as the rates from Savannah and Brunswick, which are 600 miles nearer. But when we ship cotton, naval stores, and other products to Liverpool and other European ports they charge us more than from New York. This discrimination is inexcusable and should be stopped.

When the Muscle Shoals proposition was before the Senate last year I offered an amendment providing that nitrates made at the plant during peace times should be sold to the farmers at cost and that they should be given the preference in purchasing. In our State alone we have used in one year more than $50,000,000 of fertilizers. If this plant should be developed as proposed, it would save the farmers of Georgia more than $12,000,000 a year on the cost of fertilizers, in my judgment, which is equal to the total annual expense of our State government, including Confederate pensions and common schools.

After the Muscle Shoals measure passed the Senate last year it was defeated in the House by a small majority. Every other country has nitrate plants except the United States. Soon after we declared war the German Government protested against Chile furnishing this country with nitrates and tried to prevent her doing so.

The partisan Republicans, because of hatred of a Democratic President, were willing to scrap this great plant and leave the country, in time of war, at the mercy of the Chilean nitrate trust. They were trying to discredit President Wilson by charging that the money spent on Muscle Shoals had been wasted. They did not care about the great saving in getting cheaper fertilizers, and manufacturers in securing cheaper water power, which would develop the South more than anything within a half century. I conferred with the Secretary of War several times and urged that he require all bidders to agree to manufacture fertilizers to sell to the farmers at cost, plus a reasonable interest rate, and that the power should not be leased to power companies in our section controlled by the trusts, which would prevent competition. When the Secretary of War made his report he sent it to the House only. I feared this would delay action until after Congress adjourned, and I immediately urged the Secretary to send his report to the Senate so it could be considered at the same time it was before the House committee. The Secretary granted my request, and when the report was laid before the Senate I made a motion to refer it to the Agricultural Committee, which was friendly to the development of Muscle Shoals, to manufacture fertilizer and sell to the farmers at cost in times of peace. I was a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations which recommended the appropriation of seven and a half million dollars to begin work on October 1. We shall at least begin the great work which has been opposed by the fertilizer and power trusts with a powerful lobby.

Our southern farmers export 60 per cent of their cotton produced and much of their other products. The southern manufacturers must export their surplus goods. The foreign trade of the South has greatly increased in recent years, but the agricultural and manufacturing section of the South has had no branch office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce until recently, when I secured an appropriation for a branch office in Atlanta.

Last year, when all products were reduced, I had complaints from Georgia farmers and ginners that bagging and ties, which are used in covering cotton, were selling at the old high prices, as when controlled by the trusts. I asked the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation, and soon a reduction in prices on bagging and ties came.

Several years ago I received letters from people in my State and others calling attention to the fact that the Standard Oil Co. was selling gasoline in Chicago at 5 cents a gallon less than in Georgia, when the difference in transportation was less than 1 cent a gallon. I asked the Federal Trade Commission, of which I was a member, to make an investigation, and we found the charges were true, but they were different companies of the Standard Oil. There are more than a dozen Standard Oil companies, but most of the stock is owned by practically the same people, 51 per cent of the stock of all the companies being owned by 16 people. There was no competition, but it was contended they were not doing anything illegal.

The commission called the attention of Congress to the discrimination and recommended the enactment of laws to correct the evil, but nothing was done. Soon after I entered the Senate I introduced a measure, which the Senate passed, preventing the Standard Oil Co. from selling gasoline lower in one State than in another.

When the legislation to raise revenue for the support of the Government was before the Senate, it was Republican members of the agricultural bloc, joining with Democrats, who prevented the bill, recommended by the Finance Committee, from becoming a law until they changed many important items intended to relieve the taxes of the wealthy and place the burden on those who toil. Until President Wilson's administration all taxes to support the Government were paid by the consumers of the country through the tariff and other taxes, and the wealth of the country, most able to pay, escaped taxation while receiving the greatest benefits from our Government. During the World War the number of millionaires was more than doubled, and they hoped to escape taxation on their wealth when the Republicans came into power. This would have been done had the Republican members of the bloc not joined with the Democrats and defeated legislation planned by Republican leaders. The Republicans succeeded in repealing the tax imposed upon corporations making excess profits.

While this revenue bill was before the Senate I offered an amendment to the bill cutting in half the tax, after deducting exemptions, on the first few thousand dollars of income earned by those engaged in trades and professions. I took the position that earned income on the first few thousand should not be taxed the same as income from bonds and stocks owned by persons who did not work to earn a livelihood. It was the Republican members of the agricultural bloc and the Democrats who made the surtax on incomes of over $100,000 50 per cent instead of 35 per cent, as it passed the House and was recommended by the Senate Finance Committee.

I have referred a number of times in the Senate to the great debt of gratitude the country owed the southern cotton farmers. Except for the export of cotton, which brings more gold to this country than any other product, more than both wheat and corn, we would not now have 40 per cent of the gold of the world in our Treasury, making us the richest country on earth.

In 1914, after war was declared in Europe, the West could ship wheat to Europe, and the price more than doubled. Cotton was difficult to handle and almost impossible to ship to countries at war who had always purchased our cotton. The price was less than half what it formerly sold for. The South suffered financially in 1914 and 1915 more than some of the countries at war, all because there was no market for our cotton. Many of our farmers and merchants were ruined because of this condition, while the wheat farmers were comfortable in wealth. When the cotton crop was almost gathered in 1918 and the price had advanced there was a demand from both Republicans and Democrats in the North for President Wilson to fix the price. Mr. Cox, a Democratic Congressman from Indiana, introduced a bill fixing the price of cotton at 15 cents per pound, when it had cost the farmers at least 35 cents that year to raise it. Others urged that the price be fixed at about this price. Had Congress or President Wilson fixed the price at anything like the low price provided by Mr. Cox's bill it would have ruined the South. The movement to fix the price in 1918 was shortly after the primary in which I was nominated for the Senate. When I learned of this movement I went to Washington on the first train to confer with President Wilson, calling his attention to the high cost of producing cotton and other facts I have just enumerated.

When you think of the difference in the price of cotton at 15 cents a pound, which the Republicans and northern Democrats urged President Wilson to fix, and the prices, up to 45 cents a pound, it sold for in a few months, the loss to the South would have been staggering. The difference between 15-cent cotton, which brings $75 a bale, and 40-cent cotton, bringing $200 a bale, is $125. This would be a loss of more than $200,000,000 on Georgia's nearly 2,000,000 bales which President Wilson saved the farmers of Georgia alone. Most of this cotton was sold in Europe, and the money was sent here. No President of the United States ever had such an opportunity to help or hurt the South. The North, East, and West were demanding that he do this great injustice. I had confidence in the justice of my side of the argument I made against fixing the price of cotton. While this saved the South financially, the Republicans made a campaign issue of it and charged that President Wilson had favored the South by not fixing the price of cotton after they had fixed the price of wheat and other products. It was on this issue principally that the Democrats lost both Houses of Congress in 1918; and for two years this Republican Congress instead of doing constructive work in readjusting great problems left after the war were trying to embarrass and harass President Wilson, often denouncing him when he was hovering near death's door.

When the armistice was signed hundreds of parents, sisters, and wives of soldiers in France begged me to get their loved ones home, some of them to go to school, others to the farms or factories. I decided it was as little as I could do to take these letters and at my own expense go to General Pershing's headquarters in France and urge him to let these men go home. I am glad to say that I was shown every courtesy, and my request was granted in nearly every instance. I am, so far as I know, the only Senator who went to this expense and performed this service for the soldiers. Except for this work I believe hundreds of Georgia soldiers would have been kept in France many months longer.

As long as I am a Member of the Senate, regardless of criticism, I shall do everything I can to help these young men who served our country. Congress has not done its duty by them. A great injustice was about to be done the veterans of our State and section when a bill passed the House, over the opposition of all the Members from our section, providing for hospitals, and the wording of the bill deprived Georgia and the Southeast from receiving one of these hospitals. When the House bill came to the Senate I started the fight in the Senate to amend the bill, and one of the large hospitals was placed at Augusta, Ga. As the bill came from the House Augusta and the Southeast could not have had one of the large hospitals, and our veterans could not have secured hospital facilities near home and their loved ones.

On account of the high cost of living our Government is now, and has for several years, been paying many thousand civil employees a $240 annual bonus, but we have done little for the boys who gave up their positions and offered their lives for their country. The bonus to civil employees has amounted to $1,080. After the war the Government readjusted the payments to railroads and war contractors. Why not the World War veterans? My office is a clearing bureau for claims of all ex-service men, and their claims are never neglected.

I aided in locating Camp Benning at Columbus, which brings several million dollars a year to Georgia. It is the largest Infantry training school not only in the United States but in the world. The present Congress appropriated $400,000 for buildings alone at Benning. I was with Congressman WISE and the committee when the Secretary of War assured us he would establish Camp Wheeler at Macon. I aided in getting Camp Hancock at Augusta.

The headquarters of the Army for the Southeast were located at Charleston, S. C. One of the first things I did after entering the Senate was to urge the War Department to move the headquarters to Atlanta, Ga., which every Army officer knew was the logical place because of its location and railroad facilities. The headquarters were moved to Atlanta, and I believe they will continue there. This brings a large amount of money to Georgia.

Henry Lincoln Johnson was appointed by President Harding recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia. Serving in that office are many splendid white women and several from Georgia. When the nomination came before the Senate Senator WATSON and I objected, and he was defeated.

Since the war was over there has been a propaganda in this country urging the cancellation of all debts of foreign countries. The greatest amount was due the United States, amounting to $9,000,000,000. Some Senators announced in favor of canceling these debts. I offered a resolution, which was the first, declaring it to be the sense of the Senate that none should be canceled by the United States. When the law was passed providing commissioners to confer with European countries and giving them authority to act, the law stated that no part of these debts should be canceled.

There are two great dangers to our Government, the first the election of men to office by the large expenditures of money who will serve the big interests as against the people, and the second is the danger of the demagogue who plays on the prejudice of the people in order to serve his selfish ambition. Because of the $200,000 spent to elect Senator Newberry I voted to unseat him. When a senatorship can be purchased our Government is in danger.

During the Democratic administration I was consulted in the appointment of all United States judges in Georgia. There is no greater responsibility than the selection of men for these lifetime positions. The names of the men I indorsed need no praise from me; they are known to all of you—Alex C. King, Beverly D. Evans, Wallace Lambdin, Samuel H. Sibley, U. V. Whipple, and William E. Thomas. The last two were nominated, but the Senate refused confirmation because of objections by the Georgia Senators.

When I was made Director of the Census the age limit set by the bureau kept any Confederate soldiers from employment. I immediately raised this age limit and gave preference to Confederate soldiers in my appointments in the South, and I appointed more Confederate soldiers to Federal office than any man in the South.

I am the author of many other bills and resolution in the interest of our people which I shall not have the time to discuss to-day. Among them: Authorizing loan of tents and other equipment to Confederate soldiers; investigation of department handling foreign trade; to build pontoon bridge at West Point after the flood which swept the bridge away; author of bill appropriating $1,000,000 for eradication of malaria in the South; appropriating $25,000 for development of peanut industry; resolution requiring Secretary of the Treasury to give Senate data on excess profits during war so as to tax war profiteers; resolution calling on Civil Service Commission to give preference to soldiers in appointments.

I shall oppose the Dyer antilynching bill, which was introduced to play cheap politics with the negro.

I supported the constitutional amendment for woman suffrage and the legislation to enforce the prohibition amendment. I have always been on the moral side of public questions. I supported the Sheppard-Towner maternity bill and Federal aid to the States for road building, voting for the bill to improve all the roads instead of only the automobile highways. I strongly supported the Borah resolution for naval disarmament by agreement with other governments and voted to ratify the treaties to bring about disarmament.

STATEMENT OF GENERAL SUKHOMLINOFF

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement by General Sukhomlinoff as an addendum to an address which I made in the Senate some time ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

[From the American Monthly]

SUKHOMLINOFF TELLS HOW THE GRAND DUKE AND POINCARÉ STARTED THE WORLD WAR—THE CZAR'S OWN WAR MINISTER GIVES THE FULL HISTORY OF THOSE FIVE DAYS OF AGONY, JULY 25 TO JULY 30, 1914

(By Gen. Vladimir Alexandrovitch Sukhomlinoff, adjutant general to His Majesty, the late Nicholas II, Czar of all the Russias, and formerly Minister of War at St. Petersburg)

PERSONS IN GENERAL SUKHOMLINOFF'S AMAZING REVELATIONS

Paleologue: French ambassador to the Czar's court and a man with a genius for romance in the style of Monte Cristo. This genius ran away with Paleologue and caused him to mistake his own fantastic inventions for matter-of-fact realities.

Januschkevitch: Chief of the general staff of the Russian Army; a tool of the Grand Duke Nicholas, with whom he plotted on the back stairs and behind drawn curtains.

Nicholas Nicholaievitch: The grand duke with the long legs, who was uncle to the Czar and had the Czar under his thumb.

Nicholas II: Czar of all the Russias, but a henpecked husband, a submissive nephew, a smiling and polite and sweet sovereign without a backbone and incapable of distinguishing good advice from bad.

Poincaré: Then President of the French Republic; he is in the background of events like the ghost of Banquo in Macbeth. Poincaré leaves behind him the trace of a fatal visit to the Czar on the eve of the war.

Hohenlohe: A gloomy Austrian prince.

Bark: Russian Finance Minister with a bite.

Sazonoff: Russian Foreign Minister; sly, sleek, slippery. He enjoyed the confidence of the Czar's uncle, and that proves how deep he must have been.

Goremykin: An aged, aged man more like the senile simpleton in Alice in Wonderland than the Prime Minister of a powerful potentate, which last—alas!—he was.

Pourtalès: A count who was German ambassador to Russia. He spent his time in desperate efforts to find out what was transpiring on the back stairs, in the boudoirs, and behind the curtains. When he did learn a thing or two he was assured that he had discovered another mare's nest.

Krivoschein: Minister of Agriculture in the Czar's cabinet; an intense nature, disposed to duels.

Grigorevitch: Minister of Marine; a typical sea dog.

Svwerbieieff: Russian ambassador at Berlin with a touching faith in telegrams and a peculiar ignorance of the true state of affairs. He has since passed away, and of the dead we may say what is good—if we wish and if we can. Poor Svwerbieieff!

Schtscheglovitoff: Russian Minister of Justice, a perfect professor profoundly versed in history and what we would now call a "high brow," although he might as accurately be described as a walking encyclopedia that wouldn't walk, preferring an automobile.

Isvolsky: Russian ambassador at Paris, who pulled Poincaré's strings so that Poincaré might pull the Czar's leg.

Time: July 25 to August 2, 1914.

Place: Summer palace of the Czar, Nicholas II.

I. WAR? NO! NO!

It was July, 1914. With my wife, just returned from Egypt, I made one in a gathering at the beautiful country home of the Countess Kleinmichel.

The Austrian-Serbian clash had then attained the loftiest peak of its fire and fury. It was altogether inevitable that the diplomatic and political situation should afford the theme of the talk. This was the more natural, indeed, since—or so everyone assumed—the countess herself, in all that related to Germany, was an eager diplomat whose functions were not exactly limited within the atmosphere of salon conversations.

Among the guests of the countess happened to be a diplomatist who—if my memory serves me faithfully—was not connected with the embassy of a great power. He was of opinion that no serious prospect of war loomed on the horizon of events; that the conflict must settle itself. The great powers had ample facilities, according to him, for putting out the sparks!

The prevailing view among the members of this gay party took on a hopeful tone. There was faith that the matter would really turn out well.

The countess was otherwise impressed.

She deemed it important to emphasize the fact that fire must not be played with; that the strings of the lyre of diplomacy were not to be stretched too taut.

As soon as we had dined a guest suddenly made his appearance with the news—direct from Vienna—that the Hapsburg monarchy was undeniably bent upon a final settlement with Serbia, a trial of strength, perhaps, upon the material plane.

The countess, accordingly, seemed to be in the right.

II. THE CHEERFUL CZAR

The grand climax of the military maneuvers in each recurring season arrived only with the first coming of the Czar, Nicholas II, to Krassnoie Selo. The ceremonies included a round in state of the whole camp, a sounding of "taps" with many a flourish, and a performance in the local theater.

On the appropriate days of that storm-charged summer of 1914 an incredibly pressing throng of the most fashionable people streamed into town. These people utilized the most varied modes of conveyance. Automobiles, jaunting carts with steeds going tandem, stage coaches, horses—all hurried along the closely trimmed paths bordered with grass plots and flower beds. They all arrived by rail from Peterhof, Oranienbaum, Strelna, Ligovo, Zarskoie Selo, Sergieffskaia, and Gatschina.

What a mood of carnival dominated that throng of men from the diplomatic corps, military attachés, courtiers, officers, exalted officials, their uniforms set off by the elegance of the women who pervaded the scene in effects of color no less varied!

The Czar himself arrived from Peterhof in an automobile.

At the summer palace in Kolomenskaia he reviewed the guard of honor, recruited from some crack regiment or other in the St. Petersburg barracks unless, indeed, it came from some military district boasting even finer troops. When the guard had been duly dismissed the Czar mounted a horse and rode, a glittering suite trailing after him, the full length of the columns of soldiers standing erectly in full formation. At Krassnoie Selo were stationed the cavalry, and just beyond, deployed the length of their great camp, were the infantry and the artillery. At the extreme right of this vast encampment, in the zone of operations of the first infantry division, were the imperial headquarters, established in a palatial tent. There, where more than one regimental band was stationed, the Czar got down from his horse. There was a grand flourish of trumpets.

There, too, thronging the space about headquarters, were the great ones of the land, making up the most fashionable and the most magnificent of "publica." The flattest of floors was afforded by the greenest of grass. Conversation was of the liveliest kind—bits of news, bits of gossip, twaddle more or less piquant because it dealt with personalities as well as with politics. The sauce of this talk was derived from the spice of diplomacy and the note everywhere was one of crisis. It was truly all St. Petersburg that thrilled now with the tingling of the sensation of this year of 1914 and caught the sheer exhilaration of it. Of things to talk about there was enough and to spare. The open challenge in the defiant attitude of the Austrians, the sea trip of President Poincaré to St. Petersburg, the journey of the German Emperor, William II, to Norway, and the agitated comments in the newspapers regarding the possibility of war—these things yielded themes for conjectures of every sort.

Speaking metaphorically, the air reeked with gunpowder. Optimism seemed to have vanished. And yet scarcely one of all those present there and then could have surmised that the very last of all the peaceful "taps"—sounded in those circumstances of pomp and parade—was ringing in the ear of an "all-highest" war lord.

There was a fixing of every eye upon the Czar himself, as if to gather from his deportment some hint of the mood of the man. No one seemed to have penetrated his reserve, to have reached the secret of his soul. His Majesty seemed what he was always—friendly, calm, composed. With those immediately about him His Majesty talked in the friendliest fashion, the smile never leaving his countenance.

The only shadow in that pleasing prospect was afforded by the Austrian military attaché, Prince Hohenlohe. My attention was directed to him particularly by Count Apraxin, a gentleman in waiting upon the Czar, or, rather, just then filling the post of chamberlain. The moody, not to say oppressed, aspect of the Austrian drew attention to him at once. In complete abstraction from all that went on under his eyes, he stood apart, a solitary figure in that press of people. He was resting his head against one hand, or, rather, against a clenched fist, and his elbow rested against a tree. He stepped forward to greet no one. He talked with nobody. His appearance was that of a man taken ill or oppressed by a thought that through its weight of woe had robbed him completely of self-command.

The orchestras meanwhile, undisturbed by the moods or the miseries of their auditors, discoursed the sweetest strains of a magnificent concert program.

Then the captain of the guard on service at that hour made his obeisance to the Czar and besought permission to sound the evening taps. A trumpeter and a bugleman stood forth and gave the signal. There was a moment of breathless silence. The orchestral strains had died away. There was a burst of three great rockets into the heavens. The beating of the "tattoo" proper had begun. The roar of the artillery came across the camp. A rushing din of some hundreds of drummers obliterated every other sound. Then the combined orchestras sent forth the strains of the famous hymn "How Great is the Glory of God Almighty!" Its melody was borne aloft on the waves of sound from the drums. The hurricane symphony lasted several minutes. Then ensued some seconds of absolute silence followed by the abrupt, grim command: "Caps off!" The master of the horns, who had stationed himself in front of the Czar, repated in a voice loud and clear: "Our Father, Who art in Heaven!"

During this recitation of the Lord's prayer and all through the reverential stillness that prevailed I gazed steadfastly at the Czar.

Not for an instant was he conscious—of this I am sure—of being the leader in battle. Never even in a dream did his thought take that turn. Not once did he suspect that this sounding of the retreat to rest and slumber amid such ceremony and with all that careless magnificence was to signify the end of an era.

What invested us then was the calm before the storm.

There was no such thing this time as getting out of the path that led us to war. A whole series of accidents and misunderstandings, explicable in part by the anomalies in the position of the house of Romanoff, brought on a world conflict. The origins of that war lay deeper, indeed, profoundly involved and imbedded in all the given conditions of Europe's political setting.

III. IN THE RUSSIAN WAR MINISTRY

Many able men have beaten their brains in the effort to establish the immediate cause of the outbreak of the war.

After the sincerest efforts on my part to get at the truth regarding the tremendous catastrophe, I must throw up my hands.

Exalted as was my position in the Russia of the Czars, I was able to observe directly and at first hand but a minute and decreasing part of the activity that brought on the war. This part I can outline and this I will describe with no desire to extentuate what is past and with no regard whatever for myself.

In the early months of the year 1914 there was no expectation whatever in the Russian War Ministry of anything in the nature of a clash of arms. In the higher administration of the general staff of the army throughout the winter of 1913–14 all arrangements for the military maneuvers proceeded in the usual way. Some detachments of troops from the remoter districts—among them a few from the western frontier—were to come to the imperial post of Krassnoie Selo. Again, as was quite the usual course, upon the coming of May the troops quitted their barracks and the artillery began gun practice. In July there was a general activity by way of preparation for the maneuvers in contemplation since the previous winter.

In marked contrast with this feeling of peace throughout the army, the newspapers painted the diplomatic horizon in tints ever darker and darker. The slaying of the heir to the Austro-Hungarian throne and the establishment of an Austro-Serbian conflict operated like distant lightning flashes. The trip of the President of the French Republic to St. Petersburg seemed to bring with it a piling of one storm cloud above another over the waters of the Neva. An oppressive, well-nigh intolerable feeling of gloom dominated everyone and prevailed everywhere.

After the departure of Poincaré on the 24th of July—when the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia had become widely known—the military maneuvers at Krassnoie Selo were in full swing. In accordance with plans made in advance, we had, under the command of the Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch, not only the troops of the guard and those of the St. Petersburg district but a number of crack regiments from other military districts and even some from the frontiers.

IV. A MOMENTOUS GATHERING

Not altogether unexpectedly, although there was an element of surprise in it, too, I received in the course of my summer's labors for the army a command to participate in a crown council on the 25th of July at Krassnoie Selo.

I well remember that while on the trip to the meeting of the council I had not even the least premonition of the impending catastrophe. I was aware of the love of peace that was so characteristic of the Czar's personality. I had received no special or particular communication with regard to the occasion or the cause of the conference to be held. Hence it was that I attached so little importance to the trip I made to Krassnoie Selo that I went alone without taking the chief of the general staff with me and without even having the adjutants on duty along. The subject of the gathering must be, I assumed, some matter of routine connected with the military district of St. Petersburg or with the exercises of the troops in the field.

In the little summer palace of the Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch I encountered as soon as I arrived various cabinet ministers who were already on hand, among these the minister for foreign affairs and some exalted personages in the higher ranks of the military establishment.

A goodly number of them seemed to be in total darkness regarding the occasion of the Crown conference soon to be held. The presence of Sazonoff, the minister for foreign affairs, was duly remarked and led to inferences from the diplomatic crisis that some political consideration was responsible for everything.

The Czar entered the hall in which the meeting was to be held, but when he did so he was accompanied by his uncle. Nicholas II wore the white summer uniform of his personal bodyguard, the Hussars. Smiling in the friendly fashion that was habitual with him, manifesting no mood of anxiety, he greeted the persons there assembled in a somewhat general bow, and without further ceremony he took his seat. Goremykin, head of the ministry just then, was on the Czar's right hand and the Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch was on his left.

The apartment in which we were now assembled was a great dining-room furnished somewhat primitively. Great glass doors led across a terrace or veranda into the park. In the center of this imposingly large room was a dining table laid now with a green cloth, and about this table when the Czar had given the signal we proceeded to sit.

Facing the Czar was Sazonoff. I sat several seats away from Sazonoff on the same side, while next me or very near me, if my memory plays me no trick, was Finance Minister Bark. The minister of marine I saw nowhere at that gathering.

Without any sort of introduction the Czar gave the minister of foreign affairs a signal to speak. He used up something like half an hour in painting a word picture of the international scene as it had developed from a Russian point of view through the Austrian-Serbian conflict.

What Sazonoff laid before us as a report or speech was in reality a serious indictment of all Austro-Hungarian diplomacy. His auditors there derived from it all the profound impression that they were concerned now with a deliberate challenge. In the face of this challenge would be found united the powers of the triple alliance—the "entente cordiale"—France and Great Britain standing closely beside Russia if she refused to tolerate any oppression of her Slav brother effected by violence.

Sazonoff achieved a powerful effect in rousing our soldierly sentiments.

He assured us that displays of arrogance, in view of the impotence exhibited by every purely diplomatic agency, could be met only with military measures. He concluded with the suggestion that a case had arisen in which results could be obtained against the powerful and efficient diplomacy of Austria only by means of a partial mobilization. In terms of technical military science this signified that the next step would be to decree the so-called period of preparation for war. Of the probability or even of the possibility of an actual declaration of war nothing at all was said.

The Czar displayed the utmost calmness of demeanor.

It was subsequently established beyond all doubt that on the day preceding this Crown council he had held a long private conference with his uncle, the Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch.

The latter now sat in grim gravity and silence, smoking his cigarette, beside the Czar. Having had opportunities in the course of long years to observe the relations subsisting between this pair, it became obvious to me that the uncle had already influenced the nephew, the grand duke had already brought over the Czar, when no witnesses other than themselves were by. Hence the elder had no occasion to say a word at the meeting. He had the Czar where he wanted him for a long time now.

Although Austria-Hungary had already crossed the Rubicon, many who took part in this gathering cherished still the hope of an auspicious issue from this crisis. The Czar himself, in a concluding word or two, gave expression to that very hope. He did not, for all that, modify his view that a stern admonition to Austria would be in order. Austria, as Sazonoff had declared, was now so far along her fatal path that she would not deign to reply to our diplomatic representations, the one object of which was the maintenance of peace.

V. TRAP SET FOR THE CZAR

Taking all these consideration into account, the Czar explained to us that in accordance with the suggestions of the diplomatists he would adopt the expedient reserved for such occasions—a partial mobilization.

This would show, the Czar declared, too, that so far as concerned ourselves, no hostile demonstration against Germany was planned at all.

The thing was accordingly determined.

For the 26th of July the beginning of the period of preparation for war was ordained.

If, as a consequence of this expedient, negotiation was discernible, there must ensue a second step—partial mobilization against Austria-Hungary.

My own part in these decisions, as I have intimated before, was in reality quite circumscribed.

In my capacity as minister of war faced by such a decision, which was really a move on the chessboard of world politics, I had no right whatever to make any objection, not even if a threat of actual war was being made. Politics was not my business, not my affair. Still less was it my business in my capacity as minister of war to warn the Czar against any war as such. I was a soldier. I had to obey when the army was summoned to the defense of the fatherland. It was not for me to urge considerations one way or the other.

I could have been accused—and with justice—of downright cowardice had I, after enjoying the power and prestige of a minister of war in time of peace, permitted myself to issue warnings against war merely as war. In my opinion, moreover, and according to all human insight, there was no reason whatever why Russian diplomacy should permit itself to be overawed by the proceedings of Austria-Hungary. That had passed in 1909, to be sure.

Besides all these considerations, which did not blind me in the least to the difficulties of the task that lay ahead of us, there was one further impression derived by myself and some of the other ministers from the exposition made us by the competent chief of the European section of the foreign office. According to this there was no other issue from the dilemma but war, and hence any word I spoke against war would have been useless. Through the medium of any protest on the 25th of July I would simply have questioned, or even have rendered difficult the possibility as well as the adoption of, an armed neutrality. In the state of the case as it was put before us the decision of the foreign minister must determine our own.

But he called for a partial mobilization.

In harmony with this idea, the line of procedure was determined. Nevertheless I was an opponent of partial mobilization. My views on this subject had never been withheld from anyone or concealed behind a mask. But it was my business to keep the army in readiness for any move on the chessboard of world politics which to Sazonoff seemed expedient, since he was playing the game. Hence in this matter of detail, too, it was for me to obey. It might have been somewhat different if, to repeat, I found myself in 1914 in the situation in which Roediger, former war minister, was placed in 1909.

In the year 1914 the training and the equipment of the army were so far advanced that Russia seemed justified in contemplating a war with equanimity. Never before was Russia better organized for war than she was in 1914. Moreover, the representations of Sazonoff regarding the position and the attitude of both France and England in the conflict were of a kind to justify no want of ardor in ourselves. Even his communications with reference to Italy and Rumania confirmed the other details he laid before us and worked to the same end.

On the basis of the conference held at Krassnoie Selo and in accordance with the order then issued, the "period of preparation for war" began on the day after the gathering—that is to say, on the 26th of July.

The military maneuvers were interrupted.

The troops returned to their garrisons or to their barracks.

VI. "PRESSING THE BUTTON"

After this gathering I did not see the Czar again on the 25th of July, nor even on the 26th or the 27th. What happened on those days in the ministry of foreign affairs did not come to my knowledge.

From Sazonoff I did not receive the least bit of information.

In consequence of the reports that flew about the city to the effect that our army was to be mobilized, the German ambassador, Count Pourtalès, sent the German military attaché, Major von Eggeling, to interview me. I informed him with sufficient accuracy of the immediate posture of affairs. I assured him that a general mobilization had not been ordered and that on the German frontier no preparations for any march into a field of action were under way.

Throughout all the regiments of the garrison at St. Petersburg there now took place inspections of field equipment, inquisitions into baggage, examinations of weapons. The Pavlowsky Regiment of the Guard had in pursuance of this program transported its entire campaign equipment to the Field of Mars. A report spread at once that the guard was mutinous. I enjoined Januschkevitch to hold a discreet conference with the military staff of the district and to take steps in concert with them to avoid for the future all demonstrations of a kind to precipitate such rumors. He was to give absolute orders for the suppression of whatever procedures might tend to alarming misinterpretations and the spread of false reports that a declaration of war was, in fact, already issued.

Januschkevitch at once expressed to me his anxiety lest the Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch, as supreme commander of the district, might feel himself slighted at such an order or, rather, such interference. He might feel all the more affronted since the measures I was thus objecting to did not exceed the limits of peaceful routine in the usual course of military duty, such as mustering in, inspection of the details of mobilization, and so on. I did not on that account urge him any less eagerly to see to the execution of my order. I have no idea how or in what form it was carried out, for I received no further report respecting it.

Among ourselves the procedure in mobilization was this: The Czar signed the order, which went at once to the senate. With the signatures of the ministers of war, navy, and interior added, telegrams to the various military districts, giving the date of the first mobilization day, were prepared for transmission as soon as the "all-highest" command had been issued. Not until this stage was reached came the so-called pressing of the button.

This whole proceeding was exclusively the function of the supreme administration of the general staff, so far as the technical aspects of the business were involved. It comprised a continuation of policy with military means—a going from words to deeds. The political part of the game was played solely by the minister for foreign affairs. He it was, too, who on the 28th of July transmitted to the chief of the general staff the "all-highest" command to make two orders ready, one of these was for the partial mobilization. The other was for an eventual general mobilization.

All mobilization documents were naturally, as is the case in every army, previously prepared.

According to the development of the diplomatic and "world-political" situation, one or the other of these telegrams or "all-highest" commands, signed by the Czar and countersigned by the war and marine ministers, would, again upon the personal indication of the Czar, be actually issued. This anticipatory order of mobilization was thus by a very special arrangement insured against any evasion by the minister of war.

It was General Januschkevitch who laid these two orders before the Czar for the imperial signature. The orders signed thus by His Majesty had the countersignature of the directing senate by the time they made their way into the portfolio of the general staff. Upon the basis of these orders and in accordance with them were the corresponding telegrams prepared and these were signed likewise by the three ministers.

VII. MOBILIZATION OF ALL THE RUSSIAS

On Tuesday, the 28th of July, I made a final report to the Czar at Peterhof.

From the calmness, or rather from the repose with which the Czar took my exposition of the affairs that were now proceeding, one might have inferred that there was nothing whatever that then threatened the peaceful life of Russia. I was amazed at the reserve and the scant sympathy accorded my report by His Majesty. I could think of no explanation of it all that satisfied me.

After my return to St. Petersburg on this same 28th of July, in the latter portion of the afternoon, Januschkevitch told me that through Sazonoff he had received the "all-highest" command to mobilize the districts of Kieff, Moscow, Kasan, and Odessa—to go forward; that is, to a partial mobilization.

This was the counterstroke to the general mobilization of the Austro-Hungarian forces, already announced to us as complete by our ambassador at Vienna, Schebeko.

This partial mobilization, which we were now to undertake, was in reality unpalatable to the military element. From considerations of a technical nature, it might happen that a partial mobilization would create difficulties and confusions. These must become actually perilous if, immediately after such a step had been taken, it became necessary later to proceed to an actual general mobilization. This was clear to every officer in the ministry of war and to no one was it clearer than to the general staff.

Nevertheless, I was obliged on the 28th of July to press the button for a general mobilization.

VIII. RUSSIA IN THE FRENCH TRAP

On the 30th of July a meeting of the cabinet was held in the palace of Our Lady.

Reflected in our procedure was the agitated mood of the capital. Reflected in it, too, was the tense state of the nerves of the members of that ministry. Upon the turn of a hair seemed to depend whether or not a duel should take place between Maklakoff and Krivoschein.

In the foreground of all discussion at this sitting naturally stood the needs of the armed forces. These had to be met in the event—now apparently highly probable—that diplomacy failed to avoid a war.

From Sazonoff's elucidations at this cabinet conference it grew clear to us all that actual war was now scarcely to be escaped. It certainly could not be avoided if our menace through the medium of armed neutrality by means of our partial mobilization in the southern districts in reply to the challenging course of the dual monarchy remained without effect.

I made reference, naturally, to the dangerous situation in which we found ourselves as a result of the partial mobilization.

By myself as well as by Admiral Grigorovitch certain details connected with measures of preparation for war were now brought forward. These could not be urged with due prominence before. They entailed also energetic attack and the use of ample funds. With the closing of the frontiers immediate measures must be adopted to provide for the manufacture of munitions and weapons at home. These had hitherto been obtained from abroad. The industrial life of Russia based upon private business establishments and enterprises was not equipped for the task. Its development in this direction, in view of the scant resources placed at the disposal of the war ministry during the period of peace, could not be begun even. In this connection I was reminded by the minister of agriculture, Krivoschein, who sat near me, of the talks and dealings we had in 1910 with the finance minister. At that time Kokovtseff had declared that after a declaration of war the thing needful for the actual campaign was money, money, and more money yet. I had replied at the time that we could not even after the actual entrance upon a campaign shoot money at the enemy, and that our accumulations of gold would merely fall into the hands of the enemy if we had at home no industrial plants that could manufacture munitions and weapons.

IX. UNDER UNCLE'S THUMB

Even the incorrigible optimists could now no longer deny that we were on the eve of war.

In the general staff a feverish activity prevailed. Thanks to the interference of the grand duke in a fashion that set precedence and order at defiance, the chief of staff now enjoyed direct access to the Czar. The minister for foreign affairs likewise transacted business unknown to me with the chief of staff. It was no wonder that with such irregularities gross blunders were perpetrated.

In the agitating days immediately preceding the breach with Germany zeal was displayed by the German ambassador, Count Pourtalès, in frustrating the possibility of a mobilization of our forces. He importuned Sazonoff not to rush into military measures that might prove prejudicial to the work of peace proceeding still in diplomatic circles.

With the solution of the diplomatic problem I was not involved. Nicholas Nicholaievitch had known how to spare the Czar the "presence" of all inconvenient advisers and that signified my "presence" conspicuously. The Czar in those days just prior to the war was entirely under the influence of his uncle.

If it now developes that behind my back General Januschkevitch sought to substitute and set in motion instead of the partial mobilization a general mobilization, I can only say this is news to me—an undertaking that at the time was cleverly concealed from me. Januschkevitch was an able and farseeing man. Of his own motion he could not have formed any plan for this criminal deed. There can be no doubt whatever that he was guided throughout by a person whose influence with the Czar was so great that Januschkevitch himself ran not the slightest risk whatever.

We know now that instead of the partial mobilization determined on the 28th of July, almost a complete mobilization was declared on the 29th of July.

Behind my back some one had evidently undertaken to extract from the Czar authority for a general mobilization. Manifestly, Nicholas Nicholaievitch had constrained the assent of the Czar to this. But His Majesty, after the arrival of the letter from Emperor William, had thereupon once more modified his command.

When he transmitted this ultimate decision of the Czar to the general staff, General Januschkevitch added that the Kaiser (thus in the original. The Czar is meant) took full responsibility upon himself for the partial mobilization.

X. TALKS BY TELEPHONE

After the arrival of the letter from Emperor William the subsequent progress of events took a rapid course.

About midnight of the 29th–30th of July the Czar called me on the telephone from Peterhof and communicated to me the contents of a telegram received from Emperor William. The Kaiser therein implored the Czar to suspend our partial mobilization, but said not a word about the suspension of any mobilization in Austria. Nor did he promise that this power, which had been the first to have recourse to such an expedient, would abandon it.

As I had not myself seen the Czar since the 28th day of July, I was, as may readily be understood, somewhat staggered by this telephone talk. The Czar, it became at once clear to me, must be somewhat shaken in the confidence he had reposed in the advice he received behind the curtains or on the back stairs. If the Czar was now firmly resolved to meet the wishes of the German Emperor, a direct order would have to be given to suspend the mobilization. For any such step the Czar did not find sufficient strength of purpose. In my opinion the reason was that such a step would not accord with the point of view of his trusted adviser, from whose influence he would indeed gladly have been freed, but whose influence he could not of himself shake off. In his position, between hammer and anvil, the Czar chose a middle course, whereby responsibility, as he thought, was shifted to other shoulders.

"Is it not possible," he asked me, "to stop the mobilization?"

Over the telephone I replied that the mobilization was not a mechanism that at one's mere will could be halted and then set in motion again, like a wagon. As regards the partial mobilization, I deemed it my duty, if a command on this point were to be issued, to say that subsequently much time would be necessary to restore normal conditions for a fresh mobilization throughout the military districts. I begged the Czar for that reason, in view of the importance of the subject, to ask further advice upon it from the chief of the general staff. With that our talk ended.

After some little time, but on this same night, Januschkevitch called me on the telephone and informed me of a talk with the Czar, in the course of which his answer harmonized with that I had likewise given His Majesty.

Thus it transpires that neither Januschkevitch nor myself received any order for a suspension of the partial mobilization. We had not the right to undertake any arrangements of any kind with reference to it; we were still less justified in such a thing from the additional detail that the partial mobilization against Austria was determined not by the Czar alone but by the crown council of the 25th of July. Under such circumstances Nicholas II did not find strength of purpose to countermand his order without the support of the minister for foreign affairs, who had received the mandate from the crown council. The decision of this matter lay in the hands of those who conducted foreign affairs and with those forces which were effective on the back stairs, the control of which was impossible to me.

XI. SNUBBED

On the morning of the 30th of July I begged an audience of the Czar for the sake of making my report to him.

I received no reply.

Can the Czar have been then so busy that in those critical hours he could not receive the minister of war with his report?

Between the hours of 1 and 2 on that same afternoon Januschkevitch informed me by telephone that he had received from Sazonoff the "all-highest" command to publish a general mobilization order for both army and fleet.

This decision had been reached in consequence of the latest intelligence received from Berlin.

When Januschkevitch informed me of this it was already at the latest 2 o'clock in the afternoon. It was subsequently established that the questionable telegram from Berlin of our Ambassador Svwerbieieff could not have been received until the evening of that 30th of July.

This ambassador died not long ago. It has been granted me to make an examination of some notes left by him. In the course of these records of his he makes mention of the telegram of the 30th of July. It may be of interest to observe what Svwerbieieff himself said of these things on August 28, 1920, in Athens:

> "I was put in a position to inspect some diplomatic documents of the Berlin cabinet (published by M. Kautsky), and among them I found two papers.
> "One was a telegram from Herr Bethmann-Hollweg to the Count Pourtalès. I no longer recall the date. Another was a dispatch from the Bavarian minister to his Government on July 31. In these I am censured for having at least hastened, if not actually helped along, the outbreak of the war because I am alleged to have sent on to St. Petersburg without previous verification the false news of a German mobilization.
> "As for the denial with which I followed up my telegram, that would not, according to the Berlin cabinet, prove sufficient, seeing that I did not decide to confess my error candidly.
> "Now, here is an exact account of what happened.
> "As I have already narrated elsewhere, the Lokalanzeiger, official organ of the Government, had on the day previous, the 29th of July (Sukhomlinoff says the 30th is really meant), through the medium of an extra edition, spread the news that Germany was mobilizing. I was informed of it by telephone by the representative of the St. Petersburg agency at 2.25 p. m. (I remember the hour exactly.) I had barely time to send a telegram when the same agent telephoned me that the editors of the Lokalanzeiger denied the news it had previously published. It accounted for the origin of the error with an explanation only slightly plausible.
> "Without delay I sent a second telegram to Monsieur Sazonoff, in which I begged him to consider the previous one as null, void, and not received.
> "A quarter of an hour later—it was now 2.40 p. m.—the counselor of the embassy, Monsieur Bronevsky, came and told that, besides presenting his apologies, the Secretary of State had asked him over the telephone to tell me the news of the mobilization was false and that all the issues which had been made ready by the publishers for all eventualities and put in circulation at 1 o'clock in the afternoon were already confiscated.
> "Without losing an instant I sent a third telegram giving the purport of the communication from the Secretary of State. Hence all my three telegrams had been sent, and I had every reason to hope that they would reach their destination one after another at short intervals.
> "On reaching St. Petersburg I learned that matters had turned out differently. The first was received at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, while the two others were decidedly delayed. The official denial had not reached its destination until about 9 o'clock in the evening.
> "What may have been the reason of this delay, I do not know. I have been told by competent persons who were involved at Berlin in the events preceding the war that the German Government—eager that the denial above mentioned should not be known too soon in St. Petersburg—had held back my last two telegrams.
> "Not being able to guarantee the authenticity of this information, I have persisted merely in giving the exact details of the episode that brought down upon me the unjust censure of the Berlin cabinet. (Note by G. Cleinow to the German edition of Sukhomlinoff's memoirs: The actual facts of this matter have since been documentarily established without prejudice one way or the other. The suspicion (that the telegrams were delayed by the Berlin Government) is wholly unfounded. The detail is moreover immaterial, since through the revelation of General Sukhomlinoff, as well as that of Ambassador Svwerbieieff, it is clear that Sazonoff had put through the general mobilization with the Czar even before the news of any mobilization came in from Berlin. General Sukhomlinoff says plainly: 'It was at the latest 2 p.m.' when Januschkevitch gave out the Czar's order for a general mobilization, whereas Svwerbieieff's telegram from Berlin 'could have been received only in the evening of July 30.' Svwerbieieff says specifically, 'the first telegram was received in St. Petersburg toward 4 o'clock in the afternoon.')
> "It is due to the editors of the journal (the Lokalanzeiger) to say that the Secretary of State explained the mistake to me in this way: On Wednesday, July 28, was held at Potsdam a council of war and it had been expected that the mobilization would then and there be decreed. The Lokalanzeiger had accordingly prepared copies for the purpose of giving the news to the public—copies which were circulated in the street by office boys."

XII. THE CZAR ASKED TO STAY AT HOME

My next report to the Czar was to be made personally on the 1st of August.

Meanwhile I was informed from Peterhof that the Czar wished to receive the Minister of War with his report on the 2d of August in the Winter Palace after the court ceremonies.

This "court" took place on a Sunday.

After the church ceremonies the Czar delivered an address to the assembled representatives of the army. To more than 4,000 officers were the inspirational words of imperial greeting then addressed.

When later I was received to make my report, His Majesty was most gracious. He thanked me for the brilliant and orderly execution of all mobilization details, employing the warmest words and embracing me as well.

Our Emperor was not so fortunate as to avoid war. As it was decided, apparently, that he would himself take command of the army in the field, the cabinet meeting, in view of the impending departure of His Majesty for the front, was held in Peterhof at the so-called "Ferma."

To this ministry His Majesty meant to give due powers and authority during his absence from the capital and he was now to signify and verify their nature and extent. The "Ferma" was really a pavilion in the park, a hall with small antechambers of the oddest construction, furnished fantastically. In the middle of the great hall stood a table around which some 20 or 25 persons could find seats. The furniture dated from the reign of Catherine. On the walls were equally ancient etchings, pictures of old castles, hunting scenes, representing the life of the seventeenth century. Portraits of individuals in high pompadour wigs, ruffles, frills, and tremendous encircling collars looked down upon the gathering.

To this "Ferma" the Czar came afoot, with no escort whatever and with no sword, just as if he had to do with an ordinary everyday gathering.

Now, as I set down these lines, nearly nine years after those days, when the critical, history-making question of whether the Czar should head the fighting army, was decided—to-day, when facts are at hand permitting a judgment regarding it all—I can indeed absolve the sovereign from the guilt of failing to show strength of will when he gave up his intention on the ground that I had made the necessary preparations for the war and for the conduct of the armed forces.

Better indeed would it have been if clearness had prevailed on this point before. Then the swapping of horses while crossing a stream would not have been necessary.

XII. HE DID NOT GO

Kicking a dead lion is not a sport I ever liked. Our unfortunate Czar has now to answer before the highest throne of all for his doings. Yet I should like to make clear how guilty I must feel in my own eyes had I not protested energetically against the opinion of all others there gathered for the cabinet conference—had I not affirmed that His Majesty ought not—confronted now, as he was, by the actual catastrophe—to abandon the purpose he had previously formed of personally taking the field with his troops.

During the meeting at the "Ferma" there sat on the right of the Czar, who presided, Goremykin in his capacity as prime minister. To the left of His Majesty I myself, as minister of war, was established. The declaration of the Czar was that he, before he took the field with the army, wished to confer certain powers upon the cabinet so that decisions could be taken efficiently during his absence without delay and without bureaucratic interference. Thereupon Goremykin was besought by His Majesty to express an opinion.

The mere framing of this entreaty made it apparent to me that on the part of the civil power nothing whatever had been thought out in justification of the original wish of the Czar. The aged prime minister indeed, almost with tears in his eyes, implored the Czar in view of the political situation not to leave the capital. He dwelt upon the peril to the country involved in the absence from its seat of government in Russia's difficult crisis of the official head of the realm. The address was in truth moving and made a tremendous impression upon the Czar.

These representations were warmly indorsed by the minister of agriculture and lands, Krivoschein, who vehemently affirmed that the Czar ought to stay in the administrative center of the vast state machine. He urged his point with such feeling that a powerful impression was produced upon the mind of the Czar. Then spoke up Schtscheglovitoff, the experienced professor. With his calm and quiet exposition, which he enforced by means of historical parallels, bringing in Peter the Great and conditions in the Prussian camp of those days, he persuaded us all that there was good reason why the Czar should remain at the helm of the administration. After Schtscheglovitoff other participants in this meeting spoke to the same effect.

Then it was my turn to speak.

His Majesty turned to me and remarked:

"Now, let us see what our minister of war has to say to this."

"As minister of war," I declared, "I must say that the army would be delighted to see its all-highest commander in its midst—all the more so since I know this to be also the eager desire of your Majesty. Upon this assumption the general staff laid its plans and it has taken it for granted in its scheme of operations in the field. Yet as a member of the ministry I stand alone now in my opinion. In the face of so united a front on the side of my colleagues I have no moral right to stand alone as the only one in opposition."

"This means," concluded the Czar, "that even the minister of war is against me."

He persisted no further in his contemplated departure to the army.

XIV. BEHIND THE CURTAINS

Whoever wishes to be well grounded in the backstairs history of the war should give particular attention to the days covering the period in which Poincaré's visit to the Czar occurred as well as to the days of that next series—from, say, the 24th to the 28th of July, 1914.

I am firmly persuaded that during this interval the decision regarding peace or war was made in the light of the understanding arrived at by Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholajevitch, Sazonoff, and Poincaré to frustrate every effort at a peaceful solution under all circumstances.

During and after the visit of Poincaré I was cut off from the Czar until the 2d of August when the war machine had already been set in motion by diplomacy. A stop or a halt was possible only through a breach of the pledge given by the Czar to the ally.

During all those days I was systematically hindered from being alone with the Czar. I was likewise systematically prevented from gaining an insight into the existing political situation.

Sazonoff and the Grand Duke, until the departure of the President of the French Republic, acted behind closed doors or on the back stairs. After the crown council of the 25th of July, sustained by the resolution taken therein and by the mandate from the foreign minister, they acted wholly without contact with the minister of war.

The Grand Duke had then chiefly to play the part of the one who inspired the mood of the Czar with a warlike spirit and to retain him in that state of mind. Sazonoff conducted himself in the fashion and worked in the direction suggested from Paris by Isvolsky, whereby, as may be seen from the treatment accorded Swerbieieff's telegram from Berlin, all information likely to leave an open door for peace was held back.

Sazonoff in all these doings was not the dominant personality. He was indebted for his post as foreign minister chiefly to his family connections and to the harmony between his conceptions of eastern policy with those of Isvolsky, the Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholajevitch, and the two Montenegrin princesses. Without having any fundamental experience in the field of diplomacy, Sazonoff was a man of culture and cleverness above the average, although very dependent upon such of his fellow workers as, like Count Tatistcheff, were more experienced politically than himself. In the sessions of the cabinet he defended the propositions brought forth by his department with energy. In the discussion of questions that concerned only other ministers he took no part.

I never had any difference with the foreign minister. Our rigidly correct intercourse was determined chiefly by the relations established for us through our official posts. The nature of our official intercourse was reflected even in unofficial ways. There were between us no enduring points of contact, since I had little concern with diplomacy, and Sazonoff did not interest himself in military affairs. His plan for the landing on the shores of the Bosphorus showed me how little he understood military matters.

Januschkevitch, the pliant creature of the grand duke, acted under his direct guidance. The extent to which this took place I had no means of controlling. As a result I knew nothing of the fact that the general subordinate to myself was daily with the Czar and reported behind my back. I thought I had arranged with the Czar that the chief of the general staff was to be asked to make reports only in the presence of the minister of war. It seems, however, that the Czar as early as the 25th of July, felt himself to be acting in the capacity of commander in chief, and for that reason believed—quite in the manner of the precedent set by his talks with Kuropatkin during the Japanese War—he could deal directly with the chief of staff by going over the head of the war minister and still not affront the latter. * * *

The grand duke, as well as Sazonoff, knew that I could advance powerful considerations in favor of the maintenance of peace in that summer of 1914. For that very reason they prevented me from advancing them at the most timely moment.

They were only too successful.

XV. A MASTER OF MENDACITY

No worthy representative of his government in St. Petersburg was the French ambassador—Paleologue.

Instead of working earnestly, he gave himself up to teas and empty chatter; he was influenced by gossip, and he did not disdain the acquaintance of even Gregory Rasputin. In his volume of recollections dealing with his stay amongst us, he contrives to tell many a fable. Anyone with even a casual acquaintance with the character of the Czar Nicholas II and his mode of speech would not believe a word of Paleologue's.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate No. 19 to the bill (H. R. 8350) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, which was, in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, to insert the following:

expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence (and the Secretary of State may allow per diem in lieu of subsistence for foreign travel at not to exceed $8).

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to make a request which I think will take but a minute. In agreeing to the conference report on the appropriation bill for the Departments of State and Justice and Commerce and Labor the House agreed to one amendment with an amendment. I desire to move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington moves that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

SETTLEMENT OF INDEBTEDNESS OF HUNGARY

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me? I desire to report a bill from the Committee on Finance and to ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will yield, reserving the right, if debate occurs on the bill, to object.

Mr. SMOOT. If the bill leads to any debate at all, I will withdraw it.

From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8905) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Hungary to the United States of America. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senate that the settlement that is made with Hungary is exactly the same as the settlement which we have made with England and with Finland.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then I shall have to object, because I can not consent, in view of the circumstances, to have the time taken up now.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill is to settle the debt to us from Hungary in the sum of $1,939,000.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sorry that I can not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made by the Senator from Nevada to the consideration of the bill.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, the pending question being on Mr. PITTMAN's amendment, on page 96, after line 6, to insert:

That paragraph (1) of section 4 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(1) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, or of like kind of property, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act, but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, That upon application to the commission a common carrier may, after public hearing, be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property only in a case where the route via the applicant carrier or carriers is longer than via the route of some rail carrier or rail carriers between the same points; but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from the more distant point that is not reasonably compensatory for the service performed; and if a circuitous rail line or route is granted authority to meet the charges of a more direct rail line or rail route to or from competitive points and to maintain higher charges to or from intermediate points on its line, the authority shall not include intermediate points as to which the haul of the petitioning line or route is not longer than that of the direct line or route between competitive points: Provided further, That the commission may, with or without hearing, upon its own motion or upon application of carrier or shippers, in cases of emergency, such as drought or disaster, authorize during the continuance of said emergency any common carrier or carriers to charge or receive a greater compensation for a shorter than for a longer distance.

"Where any common carrier has, or common carriers have, in effect any rate, fare, or charge which is less for the longer than for the shorter distance between two points (the shorter being included within the longer distance), and which has been authorized by the commission or as to which application was filed with the commission on or before February 17, 1911, and not yet acted upon by it, such rate, fare, or charge shall not become unlawful (except by order of the commission) until after 12 months following the passage of this amendatory act; nor shall such rate, fare, or charge in effect via circuitous rail carrier or rail carriers become unlawful if it shall have been authorized by order of the commission, after public hearings based on no less a showing than that upon which the commission is herein authorized to grant relief: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall prevent the commission from authorizing or approving departures from the provisions of this section in so far as applicable to import or export rates, including rates applicable to traffic coming from or destined to a possession or dependency of the United States, or to a block system of express rates established by order or with the approval of the commission, or permitted by it to be filed."

Paragraph 2 of section 4 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, is hereby repealed.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, under the rules there may be presented at 1 o'clock—and that is the understanding—two points of order against my amendment. One of those points of order is on the ground that the amendment is not germane and relevant to the subject matter of the bill under consideration. If that point of order be made at 1 o'clock, then it will be the duty of the Chair, under paragraph 3, Rule XVI, to submit the question without debate. It is therefore very material, in order to have an understanding as to how we are going to vote on the matter, to consider the question whether or not the amendment is germane.

There is another point of order that may be made under the rules, and that is that the amendment is general legislation to a general appropriation bill. I desire to discuss those two questions.

In determining whether the amendment is germane it is necessary, in the first place, to ascertain the purpose of the bill; and, in the second place, to ascertain the purpose of the amendment. The object of the bill—at least, of that portion of it which I seek to amend—is to appropriate money for the improvement of and making navigable our inland waterways and for the improvement of the Panama Canal. The amendment which I offer has for its purpose the prevention of acts by the Interstate Commerce Commission that will make futile those appropriations.

The purpose of the appropriation for harbors and inland waterways and for the Panama Canal is to place them in a condition where they will encourage and make possible transportation by water. If one of the departments of this Government is conducting its affairs contrary to law and in a manner that will make navigation on the inland waterways impossible, then it is certainly germane and relevant to place some safeguards around the appropriation.

At the start I charge that there is no water transportation on inland waterways, and I charge that the evidence discloses that there never can be any transportation on the inland waterways if the construction now given to the law and the practices being followed by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall continue. In other words, unless there is some qualification placed in this bill with regard to the manner of the use of these appropriations, they will be wasted and useless. That is the whole situation.

Now what is the existing law, which I contend that the Interstate Commerce Commission are violating to the destruction of water transportation? It will be found in the transportation act of 1920, commonly known as the Esch-Cummins law.

Section 4 of that act, which has been on the statute books since 1887, provides that no common carrier shall charge more for a short haul than a long haul, or, reversing the language, that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall not grant authority to a railroad to charge less for the long haul than for the short haul. They may charge exactly the same amount; they may charge as much, if they please, under the policy of Congress, to haul freight from New York to St. Louis as they do from New York to San Francisco; that is permissible under the fixed law of this country; but they can not charge more for hauling freight from New York to St. Louis than they charge for hauling it from New York to San Francisco.

Mind you, Mr. President, Congress attempted to relieve from that stringent rule, and how did they attempt to do so? They put a proviso in that act. It was not the first proviso; there have been several of them; but in the act of 1920, when we were trying permanently to regulate the commerce of this country, when Congress desired to treat transportation as a national system, they put in this proviso:

Provided, That upon application to the commission such common carrier may in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved of the operation of this section; but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from the more distant point that is not reasonably compensatory for the service performed.

Now, let us see what the construction is that is placed upon the act. I will first read the construction which Congress itself placed upon the act. By turning to page 141 of the interstate commerce act we find this language:

SEC. 500. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation, service, and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation.

Congress so declared again in the transportation act of 1920, where the provision is included which I have just read.

When the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce presented to the Senate the transportation act of 1920 he explained to the Congress the meaning of this new provision in section 4 of the interstate commerce act. What did he say? Remember, Mr. President, he was speaking for the committee and he was speaking as the author of the bill. This is what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] had to say at that time:

We have said in this bill that the Interstate Commerce Commission can give the authority to charge more for the shorter than the longer haul, but in giving the authority it must find that the rate which is charged by the railway company for the longer distance is a compensatory rate as distinguished from an out-of-pocket cost rate. There is a great difference between those two things.

The Senator from Iowa continued as follows:

A compensatory rate, I assume, means a rate which will enable the railway company charging it to defray the cost of maintenance and operation and that will also bear its just share of the return upon capital.

I wish to say that I am not presenting this question here purely as a perfunctory matter. I consider it one of the most important questions that we have had before the Senate, and I know that a good majority of Senators recognize the outrage that is being perpetrated by the action taken by the Interstate Commerce Commission and desire to change it. There are many Senators here, however, who do not believe that they have a right to consider this amendment by reason of it being offered to an appropriation bill, and that is the question which I am now discussing.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying. I am inclined very much to agree with him, but I should like to ask whether, before he concludes, he intends to discuss the statement he has just made, for it is in that regard that I have my greatest doubt?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is exactly what I am moving to now. I wish to read again what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] said in presenting the bill which became the transportation act of 1920:

A compensatory rate, I assume, means a rate which will enable the railway company charging it to defray the cost of maintenance and operation and that will also bear its just share of the return upon capital. I take it that the word "compensatory" is used in that sense. Therefore, in the case put by the Senator from North Carolina, if the charge for the longer distance was not a compensatory charge, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have no authority to grant the right to charge more for transporting the sugar, or whatever it may have been, over the shorter distance than it charged for transporting it over the longer distance. I think this amendment will go very far toward correcting the manifest abuses which have crept into the law. I think that the Interstate Commerce Commission could have prevented very many of those abuses by proper and correct rulings upon the law as it is, although I do not criticize it in that respect, for its work has been very difficult.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not understand what the Senator is reading from.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am reading from the speech of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, at the time he presented to the Senate the transportation act of 1920, and when he was explaining the meaning of the proviso to section 4, which required that where the charge to the more distant point was less than to the intermediate point it, at least, had to be compensatory, and in which he stated that it was different from an out-of-pocket cost; that it had to earn more than that.

Now, let us see, for instance, what Mr. Justice Brewer's opinion was on this very matter. I refer to page 9 of the hearings, in the statement made by Mr. Campbell, of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Here is what Mr. Justice Brewer had to say in the case of the Morgan Grain Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. (19 I. C. C. 460, p. 470):

Compensation implies three things: Payment of cost of service, interest on bonds, and then some dividend.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. North Dakota (236 U. S. p. 585), quotes that definition of compensation as correct.

Now, let us see what the definition is that is given to this by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Here is the criterion laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and notice how different it is from that laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States and laid down by the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of that great committee, when he presented this amendment. Here is the criterion laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon which they decide these applications for departure:

A rate properly so described must (1) cover and more than cover the extra or additional expenses incurred in handling the traffic to which it applies.

There is quite a difference in that; but, mind you, if that language is not sufficiently definite, I want to turn to the testimony of Mr. Hall, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who testified before our committee on this very act a few weeks ago. He is speaking for the majority of the commission. He is speaking, in fact, for every member of it except one member, and that is Mr. Campbell, who dissented. Now, remember, it was only a week or two ago that the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission gave his construction of "reasonably compensatory"; and what did he say? Here is what he said:

Senator PITTMAN. But right now you are not prepared to say on a shipment of steel, for instance, what part of the compensation is a fair return on those roads, are you?

Commissioner HALL. No; I don't know how you could get at it. Perhaps some of the gentlemen representing the carriers can, but I don't know.

Now, listen to this, Senators:

Senator PITTMAN. How do you get at the question as to whether the charges at the distant point are reasonably compensatory?

Commissioner HALL. I have said to you, sir, that while I am not satisfied with the answer, the nearest I have gotten to an answer in my own mind is that if, as the net result of getting the additional traffic at the lower rate, the carrier has an increased net revenue, then it may be said that that additional traffic has been reasonably compensatory under the circumstances.

Look at the difference between those things. If it pays anything over and above the cost, it is reasonably compensatory; and yet the Supreme Court of the United States says "compensation" means sufficient not only to pay costs and maintenance but to pay interest on bonds and some dividends. That is the same attitude that was taken by the Senator from Iowa when, as chairman of the committee, he presented this very provision. Mind you, it had the construction of Congress before the act was passed, while it was being considered; and in spite of that the Interstate Commerce Commission up until this very hour is refusing to accept that interpretation of it, and continuing to construe "compensation" to mean "out of pocket costs."

Now, let us see what the railroad construction is of this provision.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. This great contest has been going on here for 15 years. We had a debate on it for two weeks 10 years ago and thought we were arranging this matter so that the people would be protected against unjust discriminations. Then we had it again later on. The Interstate Commerce Commission differed with the intention of Congress, it seemed, and we passed another amendment, and still the law is construed against the will of Congress so as to permit discriminations. If the Senator's amendment should be adopted, what assurance have we that the Interstate Commerce Commission will not construe the law so that the relief the Senator asks for will not be obtained? That has been my experience for 15 years.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is entirely right; and the only way we can possibly remedy the situation is to state that they shall have no discretion whatever in varying from section 4 to meet water competition.

Now let me read to you what the railroad construction of this proviso of section 4 is. I take it from the hearings recently had before our committee at page 426:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Spence, in asking for relief, what are the main reasons that prompt that request?

Mr. SPENCE. The sole reason, Mr. Chairman, is that the rail carriers may obtain, or recover, I might say, a share of the traffic that is going by sea or by water.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that tonnage that you desire to recover profitable to your carrying by rails?

Mr. SPENCE. It is profitable in the sense that it yields a return of about what it costs to handle the extra traffic.

The CHAIRMAN. It yields a return above the cost?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes, sir.

That is the railroad construction of it; that is the Interstate Commerce Commission construction of it; and that is diametrically opposed to the construction placed upon the provision by Congress when they were debating it here and by the Supreme Court of the United States in defining what "compensation" means.

Now, let us see. What do the water shippers of the country have to say about this proposition?

Here is a statement by Mr. Lyon, representing a great number of water shippers, in the hearings before the committee a few weeks ago, when we were discussing this matter. At page 626 he says this:

The granting of the application would practically destroy the water lines, or at least certainly reduce their ships to one-half the number they now have.

Senator GOODING. The granting of this application?

Mr. LYON. Yes; and there is no reason why they should not take all the business if they can do it on a rate which is something over their 40-cent rate, using that to illustrate; if they can get 50 per cent of our business, I see no reason why they should not get 99 per cent of it.

Now, let us see. What hope is there that the Interstate Commerce Commission will change their attitude on this subject? Is there any? As the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] says, have we not tried it out for 30 years? Has not the chairman of the commission come before the Interstate Commerce Committee in the last few weeks and given his testimony as to how he will continue to construe it? Even though his attention was called to the speech of the Senator from Iowa, he still maintains his position.

Now, I want to see what chance there is to change this matter. I want to read from the testimony of Mr. Campbell, of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He testified before us a few days ago. He is in favor of the construction given by the Senator from Iowa and by the Supreme Court of the United States, and when a case came up on departure he so voted; but he was the only one of the whole commission who voted for that construction. The others voted for the construction given it by Mr. Hall, the chairman of the commission.

Now, listen to what took place:

Senator PITTMAN. I also understand from your statement that it is your opinion, or your view as a commissioner, that the commission has not carried out the intent of Congress in the administration of this act.

Commissioner CAMPBELL. Well, I would not put it that broad. I would say that they have not carried out what I think Congress intended. Of course, the majority think they have, and they may be right.

Senator PITTMAN. But that is your opinion?

Commissioner CAMPBELL. Yes; that is my opinion.

Senator PITTMAN. You have referred to a particular dissenting opinion there. How many members of the commission joined you in that dissenting opinion?

Commissioner CAMPBELL. Which one was that?

Senator PITTMAN. It was in regard to 1922.

Commissioner CAMPBELL. About the reasonably compensatory rates?

Senator PITTMAN. Yes.

Commissioner CAMPBELL. I think none.

Senator PITTMAN. How many of the commissioners were there then and participated in that?

Commissioner CAMPBELL. I think all of the commissioners participated in that.

Senator PITTMAN. That is, there were 11 commissioners, were there not?

Commissioner CAMPBELL. Yes.

Senator PITTMAN. And there were 10 against it?

Commissioner CAMPBELL. I think so.

Senator PITTMAN. Is there any way of changing that policy of those 10 men, in your opinion, if Congress thinks that policy should be changed, except by direct legislation?

Commissioner CAMPBELL. No; I tried my persuasive powers, and I was not successful; so I think it is up to Congress.

Senator PITTMAN. And if Congress should agree with you, then, in your opinion, there is but one way of enforcing that policy on the part of the commission, and that is by mandatory legislation?

Commissioner CAMPBELL. I think so.

So, Mr. President, we have come down to the position where we know definitely what the attitude of the Interstate Commerce Commission is, and will continue to be if we do not enforce the construction of this proviso as intended by Congress what will be the result? The Interstate Commerce Commission must grant the applications now pending by the western roads for an out-of-pocket cost rate in competition with intercoastal water transportation, and subsequent applications to meet water competition on our inland waterways. Is not that true? How can they refuse an application to meet water competition when they have said to the rail carriers: "If it is essential to meet water competition, we will let you haul goods in competition at cost." That is their rule; that is their interpretation of "reasonably compensatory," so they will continue to do it.

What would be the result of such action? Now, mind you, every western road has made application for departures from the fourth section.

Every western road is asking to have put into effect rates at the seaboard towns that are out-of-pocket cost. What will be the result? We have established a Shipping Board here in this country for the purpose of trying to encourage shipping, and what is said by the Shipping Board? We ought to take the advice of the Shipping Board on some matters, at least, or we ought to abolish it. I have already read the whole resolution adopted by the board, and I will not read it all again, but just a part of it. It is as follows:

Whereas it is believed by the United States Shipping Board that the application of the rail carriers is made in contemplation that it will drive the ocean carriers from this competitive trade through diversion of the commerce now being so carried in fair competition; and

Whereas any destruction of the favorable and economical competitive transportation of commerce from the Pacific to the Atlantic seaboards through the Panama Canal would be injurious to the public interest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board convey to the Interstate Commerce Commission the protest of the United States Shipping Board against granting the application designated as fourth section application No. 12436.

What good does that protest do? They have been making that kind of protest for years. You can not protest against a court administering a law under the construction which it has already given to the law. The commission are simply violating the instructions of Congress; and, as Mr. Campbell said, there is no remedy except to take away from them the discretion to allow railroads to charge just the cost of transportation so as to put water carriers out of business.

Let us see what the Merchants' Association of New York has to say about this thing, and I am sorry the junior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is not here. He was very much interested in the matter the other day. This is what they said:

We believe the rates proposed by the applicants are lower than are necessary to meet legitimate water competition, and if they are permitted to become effective, will eliminate legitimate competition by the water lines. This situation will be most detrimental to New York and shippers in Atlantic seaboard territory, in that they will be deprived of rates, service, and markets to which, by reason of their geographical location, they are lawfully entitled.

To extend this territory of origin and to reduce the rates therefrom so materially as the carrier proposes in this application will create so great a disadvantage to the producers in Atlantic seaboard territory as to preclude their entering the Pacific coast markets in competition with middle western shippers.

For these reasons, therefore, the Merchants' Association of New York protests against granting the rail carriers' application, and respectfully requests that authority to establish the prposed rates be denied.

So this commercial body is opposing these rates, and they have always opposed them. But what good does it do? They know that under the rule established by the Interstate Commerce Commission they must grant them. They should know there is only one way to stop them from granting them, and that is to divest them of their authority to allow railroads to charge these confiscatory rates to put the water competition out of business. That is all this amendment does. This amendment has nothing to do with the regulating of railroads. It has nothing on earth to do with the long-and-short-haul departures as between direct and circuitous rail rates. It does not affect anything of that kind. It affects only these rates which these men are protesting against.

I see the junior Senator from New York has just entered the Chamber. I will say to him that I have just read a protest by the Merchants' Association of New York against this application of the western roads for relief under this provision of section 4. They say that it will destroy coastwise trade. They say that it will be unfair to New York, with its natural location on the water.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I would like to say to the Senator from Nevada that I am not only a Senator of the United States but I am a Senator from the State of New York, and live in the city. I have had protests that the passage of this amendment would militate against the business of the city of New York; that under the present arrangement we can get rapid railroad transportation from New York to the Pacific coast, but if this amendment were to be enacted it would mean that the only way the New York merchant could send his stuff to the coast at the low rate would be actually by shipping it by the long water routes, which would involve weeks of time; that if the direct route were to be taken the price would be materially increased. I would like to ask the Senator from Nevada what the answer is to that criticism?

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sorry I have only 10 minutes and can not go over the argument I have just made. I have read what your merchants' association says, that the rates are too low from Chicago west, because they are cost rates; and yet that is in accordance with the rule laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and they will follow it. If they give cost rates from Chicago to the Pacific coast and give cost rates from New York to the Pacific coast, the rates from Chicago will be lower. There is no question about that, because it costs less. If they give cost rates to the coast on all lines, the actual cost of the transportation, which is what their application asks for, Chicago, Toledo, and all points west of New York will have a lower rate to San Francisco, because the cost will be lower for hauling any commodity 2,000 miles than for hauling it 3,000 miles. Your commercial bodies oppose the granting of this relief, and yet they do not understand that it is going to be granted if the power is not taken away from the Interstate Commerce Commission. They think we are dealing with circuitous and direct rail routes. We have nothing to do with them. We deal only with water competition.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from New York that there is no violation between New York and Chicago at the present time, and never has been. So your people, as far as that is concerned, are not interested in that feature. The great interests between New York and Chicago would not permit violations. Pittsburgh would not permit a violation. No point in the State of Ohio or any other point, where there are great industries strong enough, would permit violations. The railroads would not ask for them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada has only a few minutes left, as I understand the agreement, and I wish he would dwell somewhat upon the question of the point of order more directly, because that is troubling some more than the other question is troubling them.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well; I will do that now. I have only gone so far into this matter for the purpose of showing that at least this amendment is germane to the legislation providing these appropriations. There is no question about that. That is why I went into it. It is germane, because the appropriations are futile unless there is some such provision in the law. I wanted to show that there must be a law to change the attitude of these people or they would not change it.

This amendment simply reaffirms existing law, and denies the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to violate it.

It simply restates every power the Interstate Commerce Commission was intended to have under section 4.

It simply adds provisions to protect the appropriation and insure the accomplishment of its purpose under existing law.

It is to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission not to obstruct or interfere with the encouragement and development of water transportation, which is provided for in section 500 of the interstate commerce act.

Similar provisions in the Panama Canal act were not only deemed germane but relevant and necessary. I refer to the provisions of that act which prevented the railroad companies from operating ships through the Panama Canal in competition with other ships. It was known that you had to do that or the railroad companies would not permit any privately owned ships to operate through the Panama Canal.

This is just as important to the Panama Canal as was the provision that railroad companies should not operate ships through the canal. It is just as germane, it is just as relevant, it is just as necessary. That shows, beyond question, the germaneness of the matter.

As to the other proposition, that it is general legislation, when there was pending in the Senate recently the celebrated Howard University dispute the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] presented the following amendment to an appropriation bill:

> For additional medical school, $370,000.

A point of order was made against that on the ground that it was general legislation. What was the result? I read from the RECORD:

> The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Chair overrules the point of order so far as it relates to general legislation, because the Chair is of the opinion that it is not general legislation. In accordance with the rule, the Chair submits to the Senate the question of whether or not the amendment is germane.

The Senator from Wisconsin, in trying to avoid the argument made by different Senators that it was general legislation, said:

> The question often came up whether a given item or given language was general legislation or special legislation, and so the word "new" was used to cover them both, not items of appropriation, necessarily, but whether it was general or special legislation.

In the Howard University matter the amendment authorized the erection of a building for the benefit of a private institution, not a public institution, because the Howard University is not a public institution. If the authorizing of a building not provided for in general existing law was not new legislation, then certainly a reaffirmation of the existing law can not be held to be new legislation. This is nothing but a reaffirmation of existing law. It does not change a single thing in the law as understood by the Senator from Iowa, and as the Supreme Court held it to be. There is not a change in it. It is a reaffirmation of existing law.

If that is any different in principle from legislation authorizing the erection of a building, I do not understand it. As a matter of fact, I took the ground on the floor at that time that the Lenroot amendment was general legislation. I stated at that time that if the Senate sustained the Chair in that proposition, I would accept it as a rule, as I accept the construction of a law by the Supreme Court of the United States, although I may differ from it.

This is the situation: We made a rule. The amendment before us was subject to two constructions. The Senate of the United States construed it in that case. I stand on that construction, that the legislation authorizing the erection of a new building was not, in the interpretation of the rule, general legislation. Why was that ruling made? Because in the past there had been appropriations made for that purpose, and because those appropriation bills were existing law, or something of that kind.

This appropriation bill which comes before us to-day has new legislation in it. The committee amendments have legislation in them. The House has provided in an appropriation bill for the building of a new power plant at the Panama Canal. If it is understood that an appropriation bill is nothing but a supply bill, that it will do nothing but furnish money to carry out existing law, I stand by it, but if an appropriation bill is to be used as the medium of the legislative ideas of appropriation committees, and then the Senate, when it gets the bill before it, can not amend it to protect the appropriations in it, I am against it.

But I say now that the situation as it stands is simply that the Senate has held that it is only a question as to whether the amendment offered is germane and material. They have wiped out that provision of the rule requiring that no legislation shall be offered to an appropriation bill by the ruling in the Howard University case. They passed through this body an appropriation for the erection of a building for a private institution with regard to which there was no former legislation. We can not have a rule that applies to one case and does not apply to another similar case.

There is only one point involved in the proposition. Here is an appropriation to accomplish navigation by water. Here is an amendment that is admittedly essential to make that appropriation available. If we can put a limitation on an appropriation, at the same time we ought to be allowed to put safeguards on the appropriation. If we can not, then the appropriation is perfectly futile. That is my position in the matter. I contend that under the ruling in the Howard University case they wiped out the provision with regard to general legislation and narrowed it down solely to the question of whether or not it was in aid of carrying out a policy contained in a bill, and whether or not, having appropriated money for the university in the past, we could continue where it was necessary to make the formal appropriations available. That is the rule we have come down to, and if we are not going to enforce that rule then we are going to give to appropriation committees the right to use their great power of appropriation not for the purpose of supplying money to carry out existing laws, but for the purpose of using that committee for the purpose of initiating bills that will develop into law.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the case is on all fours with the Howard University case. It seems to me the supreme court of this body, which is the Senate itself, has given its construction to a rule and it can not go back on the construction. It certainly should not go back on the construction in a case that is as vital as this case.

I have gone into the evidence during the last 15 or 20 minutes to show the absolute necessity for this kind of legislation, and to show that the appropriations are wasted, that they will be unavailing and useless without this kind of legislation. It is not general legislation in the sense that the Senate had in mind. It is not new legislation in the sense that the Senate had in mind. It is legislation which reaffirms existing law, which says to the Interstate Commerce Commission, "We will rewrite this law, although we do not change it from what we originally intended, but we do want to say to you that we grant this appropriation through the rivers and harbors act with the understanding that you shall not make futile these appropriations by a violation of the law." If that can not be done, then we have no method of adequately preventing a constant misconstruction of the law by one of our agents. This is not misconstruction by the courts. It is a misconstruction by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is an agent of this body. This is special legislation with regard to rivers and harbors and intercoastal waterways. The amendment is not general legislation. It is special in that we are throwing a protection around this particular special subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH obtained the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think there should be a quorum present before the point of order is made and discussed. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead
Ashurst	Frazier	McKinley	Shortridge
Bayard	George	McLean	Simmons
Borah	Gerry	McNary	Smith
Brandegee	Gooding	Moses	Smoot
Brookhart	Hale	Neely	Spencer
Broussard	Harreld	Norbeck	Stanfield
Bursum	Harris	Norris	Stephens
Cameron	Harrison	Oddie	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Overman	Swanson
Caraway	Howell	Owen	Trammell
Colt	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Wadsworth
Copeland	Johnson, Minn.	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Ralston	Warren
Dale	Kendrick	Ransdell	Watson
Dill	Keyes	Reed, Pa.	Wheeler
Edwards	King	Robinson	Willis
Ferris	Ladd	Sheppard
Fess	Lodge	Shields

Mr. SMITH. I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to enable me to have something inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. I have a communication from Mr. J. F. Shaughnessy, of Nevada. I do not know whether it has been put in the RECORD or not. May I ask the Senator from Nevada if it has been put in the RECORD?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think not.

Mr. BORAH. I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a statement by Mr. J. F. Shaughnessy, chairman of the Nevada Railroad and Public Service Commission, being a discussion of the merits of the pending amendment.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 16, 1924.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to express appreciation for your kindness in allowing me a few moments out of your busy day and also your consideration in granting me the privilege of confirming by letter the few thoughts I am anxious to leave with you in support of the amendment for the correction of long and short haul rate abuses, which Senator PITTMAN has given notice he will offer to the rivers and harbors appropriation bill.

I am here in the interest of the people of Nevada, as one of their State officers, being the chairman of the Public Service Commission of Nevada, and we, with other Intermountain States, are petitioning the Congress for the aforesaid relief in order that we may have at least an equal opportunity from a transportation standpoint with the heretofore more favored Pacific coast terminal points.

As illustrative of the long and short haul rate situation which I brought to your attention, I beg to set forth the following examples, which you will note are in contravention of the declaration of Congress set forth in section 500 of the transportation act that—

> "It is the policy of Congress to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation, service, and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation."

WOOL RATES

For a haul of 3,300 miles from San Francisco to Boston the rate is $30 per ton, whereas for a haul of 2,800 miles from Battle Mountain, Nev., to Boston (directly intermediate) "the shorter being included within the longer haul," the rate is $60 per ton.

HIDES

For an average haul of approximately 3,200 miles from San Francisco to New York and Boston the Pacific coast jobber or broker may ship at a rate of $30 per ton, whereas the actual producer, 800 miles inland, say, from Ogden or Salt Lake City, Utah, to New York City and Boston, the rate is $40 per ton.

At the present time the transcontinental carriers have an application pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission for authority to establish long-and-short-haul rates on 43 commodities from Chicago to the Pacific coast terminals—San Francisco, San Diego, Los Angeles, Portland, Tacoma, and Seattle—while maintaining higher rates intermediate throughout Western and intermountain States, and the railroads operating south from Chicago likewise have an application before the Interstate Commerce Commission seeking authority to establish long-and-short-haul rates from Chicago to New Orleans, while maintaining higher rates at intermediate points. These discriminations I will illustrate by dry goods on the west bound application and by iron and steel articles on the southbound application.

DRY GOODS

For a haul of 2,300 miles from Chicago to San Francisco, for example, and intermediate Mountain-State points 800 miles inland, the rate is $31.60 per ton. The railroads propose to maintain this rate at intermountain-State points and reduce the rate to $22 per ton at the aforesaid Pacific coast terminals.

In this connection it is interesting to note that for a haul of 375 miles from Chicago to Scranton, Iowa, the rate is $22.20 per ton. This rate the carriers propose to maintain and graduate the rates upward to a peak of $31.68 per ton at all intermountain-State points, and then abruptly dropping the rate down to $22 per ton to Pacific coast terminals on the plea of meeting water competition. In this behalf it may be stated, for your information, that the commercial tonnage handled by the intercoastal-water lines from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast terminals during the year 1923 was 3,277,000 tons, and the total commercial tonnage both east and west bound, exclusive of oil, was but 5,600,000, compared with which the all-rail tonnage handled by the transcontinental lines reaching the Pacific coast aggregated 248,000,000 tons for the year 1923, which was an increase of 25,600,000 tons over the previous year. In other words, of this all-rail tonnage the westbound intercoastal tonnage through the canal was but 1.3 per cent, and if the total coast to coast tonnage, including Gulf ports, amounting to 5,600,000 tons aforesaid, is contrasted with the all-rail tonnage of 248,000,000 tons, it will be noted that it is less than 2 per cent. There is about 5,500,000 or 6,000,000 tons of domestic traffic which the traffic managers of the transcontinental railroads estimate they can compete for and which if long-and-short-haul rates are granted on the basis of the application aforesaid, will enable them to take half of the tonnage away from the intercoastal transportation lines operating through the canal.

These traffic managers estimate there will be moving through the canal 6,000,000 tons, and that they should therefore secure 3,000,000 tons, but, of course, do not undertake to show, because it can not be done, how much more or less than this amount they may secure. It is admitted by some of them in testimony that they will take it all if they can get it. Others recognize that the reduction of their rail rates to the Pacific coast terminals may precipitate a rate war between the rail and intercoastal carriers which would require very much lower rail rates if they are to get any considerable amount of traffic. (Note how small the water traffic is, relatively.)

In any event the question is not only beset with great and unjustifiable selfishness, but the startling fact remains that the carriers are now attempting to voluntarily throw off a large amount of revenue for the purpose of taking a substantial volume of traffic away from the intercoastal lines, or of destroying them if then can. There are 141 ocean vessels in the canal trade from coast to coast with an investment of $75,000,000, and the general counsel, Mr. Frank Lyons, of these intercoastal lines, testifying before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, confirms the railroad traffic manager's estimate that the granting of the long-and-short haul rates will take away one-half the traffic and cut down their boats and investment one-half.

IRON AND STEEL ARTICLES

For a haul of 912 miles from Chicago to New Orleans the present rate is $11.40 per ton, while to Meridian, Miss., for a haul of 712 miles, the rate is $10.60 per ton, or graduated in proportion to distance. The railroads now propose to reverse this and to maintain said rate of $10.60 at Meridian for the short haul and reduce the long haul rate at New Orleans to $8.60 per ton.

As illustrative of their underlying motive here exemplified, Congressman CLEVELAND A. NEWTON of Missouri, testifying before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, February 26, 1924, on House bills 6647 and 8209, to create an inland waterways corporation for the promotion and protection of the Government-owned barge lines on the Mississippi River, and which bills have been favorably reported (see H. Rept. No. 375), shows at page 6 of the printed hearings that—

> "The Mississippi barge line rate (between St. Louis and New Orleans) is 80 per cent of the rail rates that parallel the river, but the rail rates that parallel the river are but 58 per cent of the average rail rate of the country, so that the barge rate is not more than 50 per cent of the average rail rates of the whole United States."

Of course, the difference between the 58 per cent rate factor maintained by the railroads paralleling the river and the full 100 per cent rate basis is made up by the railroads charging higher rates at all interior points where river transp tation is not available.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, in section 6 of the interstate commerce act as amended, 1920, is given authority to fix the minimum rate or rates at such a level in a case of this kind as to properly preserve and protect water transportation and to see that "both rail and water transportation shall be fostered and preserved in full vigor," as provided in section 500 of the transportation act; but, of course, as long as section 4 confers discretion upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to authorize the railroads to charge long-and-short-haul rates there is such a direct contradiction in terms that said section 500 will doubtless continue to be a dead letter.

Further illustrating, Congressman NEWTON, at page 8 of said printed hearings shows that the first-class rate for a haul of 494 miles from New Orleans to Fort Smith is $38.80 per ton, while between St. Louis and New Orleans the rate is $34.60 for a 700-mile haul, and from Dallas, Tex., to New Orleans, for a 515-mile haul, where there is no water transportation, the rate is $41.70 per ton; that from Portland, Me., to New Orleans, for a haul of 1,685 miles, the rate is $45.20 per ton on first-class freight, whereas from Kansas City to New Orleans, for a haul of 879 miles, the rate is $44.50 per ton. Further, from St. Louis to New Orleans the first-class rate is $35.80 per ton, whereas from St. Louis to Texarkana the rate is $37.80, and from St. Louis to Dallas the rate is $44.50.

STRUCTURAL STEEL

Further, the rate on structural steel from Pittsburgh to Galveston or Houston is $17.50 per ton, whereas from Pittsburgh to Dallas, for a 350-mile less haul, the rate is $20.40 per ton.

CEMENT

On cement, from St. Louis to Galveston, for a thousand-mile haul, the rate is $7.40 per ton, whereas for a 350-mile less haul to Dallas the rate is $9 per ton.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

On agricultural implements from Fort Madison, Iowa, to Houston, for a haul of 1,160 miles, the rate is $24 per ton, whereas for a 300-mile less haul to Dallas the rate is $25.60.

MOLASSES

On molasses from New Orleans to Memphis, for a haul of 400 miles, the rate is $5 per ton, whereas from New Orleans to Longview, Tex., for a haul of 391 miles, the rate is $13.40 per ton; for a haul of 458 miles from New Orleans to Little Rock, Ark., the rate is $9.40 per ton; for a haul of but 183 miles, from New Orleans to Jackson, Miss., the rate is $5.90 per ton. For a haul of 1,093 miles, from New Orleans to Norfolk, Va., the rate is $9 per ton, whereas for a haul of 737 miles to Asheville, N. C., the rate is $12.70, and for a haul of 688 miles to Spartanburg, S. C., the rate is $11.70 per ton.

This is illustrative of the long-and-short haul rates between water competitive points from the Gulf of Mexico to Norfolk on the Atlantic Ocean, with the higher long-and-short haul rates at intermediate North and South Carolina points. Other points could be named but these are fairly representative of the situation, and if the amendment here under consideration is passed, it will have the effect of correcting the highly preferential rail rates named to these Atlantic coast and Gulf ports, while at the same time preventing the prejudicially higher rates at North and South Carolina points. Likewise, it will correct the present prejudicial rates applied in Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Oklahoma.

The long-and-short haul situation as affecting Louisiana may be illustrated by the table set forth below:

From—	Miles	Agricultural implements, rate per ton	Soap rate, per ton	Packing house products, rate per ton
St. Louis to—
Alexandria, La	602	$16.60	$12.30	$15.20
New Orleans	835	12.80	8.55	11.30

FERTILIZER

The injustice of the railroad long-and-short-haul rates may be further illustrated by referring to the movement of fertilizer from Savannah and New Orleans to various points reached by water, compared with the higher rates for shorter hauls to intermediate points that do not have the benefit of water transportation.

On fertilizer for a haul of 678 miles from Savannah to Memphis, Tenn., the rate is $5.20 per ton, whereas for a haul of 588 miles to Corinth, Miss. (directly intermediate), the rate is $6.64 per ton; for a haul of 632 miles from Savannah to Vicksburg, Miss., $4.95 per ton, whereas for a haul of 588 miles from Savannah to Jackson, Miss., the rate is $5.63 per ton; for a haul of 718 miles from New Orleans to St. Louis the rate is $5.20 per ton, and likewise for a haul of 776 miles to Louisville, Ky., is $5.20; whereas for a haul of 389 miles from New Orleans to Longview, Tex., and for a haul of 471 miles to Little Rock, Ark., the rates are $5.50 per ton, and for a haul of 523 miles from New Orleans to Bonham, Tex., the rate is $6.10 per ton.

These illustrations are self-explanatory. Many others could be given; but these will suffice, I believe, to show that the Western and Southern States are vitally interested in having the long-and-short-haul rate situation, now in effect for the purpose of meeting water competition, eliminated for the future. The Railroad Administration refused to authorize long-and-short-haul rates during its existence, and while since 1918, or for the past six years, we have been in a large part free from discrimination, we find the carriers setting the stage for a return to the old indefensible discriminations covering large sections of the country. The bill under way does not undertake to interfere with competition as between rail carriers and will only put a stop to the practice of carrying artificial rates to and from water transportation points, the burden of which must be carried by the intermediate States and communities. Further, by thus stabilizing the rate base, the policy of Congress may be carried out which provides that "both rail and water transportation shall be fostered and preserved in full vigor." It will eliminate the present uncertainty under which the intermediate sections labor at present; it will enable them to establish industries and manufacture raw products, of which the interior abounds; it will prevent the interior from being exploited, as at present, by being compelled to ship raw products long distances, leaving nothing at the point of production in the way of increased population and taxable property; and it will enable the people of the intermediate sections to gather and safely invest their own capital as well as bid for and secure outside capital for investment and development purposes, all of which can not be accomplished under the present plan of operation.

Finally, what the intermediate sections of our country need is a stable rate base before they can go forward in full development of their enormous resources. Under the act as it now stands—authorizing as it does (as shown by the examples herein) the charging of a higher rate for a shorter than for a longer haul, and the rates being subject to change from a uniform or a graduated basis to a long-and-short-haul scheme, there can, of course, be no certainty at intermediate points upon which we can bid for new capital and population, nor can we prevent the railroads from parceling our country into producing and industrial sections in the interest of long and double hauling of traffic. The exercise of such uncalled for power results in the railroads throwing off millions in earnings to the large water ports, not so much on the relatively small scheme of water traffic to be secured but on the large volume of traffic that is already moving to the water ports by rail which, of course, must be made up by higher rates at all intermediate points of the country—thus destroying or neutralizing water competition. On the other hand, we, of the interior, are taxed to build canals and improve rivers and harbors and by this railroad policy we are burdened with an additional tax; or, in other words, double taxation which, of course, is unjust and indefensible.

The National Association of Railroad Commissioners at its annual conventions at Atlanta, Ga., in 1921, and at Miami, Fla., in 1923, adopted resolutions memoralizing Congress to amend the fourth section of the interstate commerce act in order to make the rule absolute and to establish a wise and equitable policy for the future. These resolutions were put in evidence before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce on S. 2327 (p. 332 printed hearings) and were read into Senate record by Senator GOODING May 16, 1924.

Respectfully yours,

J. F. SHAUGHNESSY,
Chairman Nevada Railroad and Public Service Commission.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the point of order which I am about to make against the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada is based upon certain language contained in Rule XVI. Let me say at the outset—and I shall be exceedingly brief—that I do not intend to raise a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane or relevant, but upon another and separate ground.

The first sentence of paragraph 3 of Rule XVI reads as follows:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The measure before us is the War Department appropriation bill. It is not a special appropriation bill. It bears no resemblance to appropriations for the settlement of private claims. It is indeed nothing more nor less than a general appropriation bill for the support of the War Department in its military and nonmilitary activities. I think that assertion can not be denied.

It is proposed to insert in this general appropriation bill an amendment, to be inserted on page 96, after line 6, the first sentence of which reads as follows:

That paragraph (1) of section 4 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

The interstate commerce act is not a special act. It is a general law. The pending amendment is an amendment to a general law of the land. Its provisions affect the whole country with respect to railroad transportation and rates. It is general legislation. There is nothing special or private or limited about it. It is general in every conceivable fashion and way.

The rule forbids the reception of amendments contemplating general legislation on a general appropriation bill; therefore, this being a general appropriation bill and the amendment that is proposed being general legislation, I submit that the amendment is out of order, and I make the point of order against the reception of the amendment on that ground.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I had hoped the Senator from New York would be constrained not to urge the point of order against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada. The situation is a peculiar one. By virtue of some rules of the House of Representatives and of this body the ordinary rivers and harbors bill becomes a part of the Army appropriation bill, a reprehensible logrolling arrangement under which the ardent supporters of large appropriations for rivers and harbors are constrained to support the Army appropriation bill, whatever it may contain, and the advocates of liberal appropriations for the Army are in a way forced to support unjustifiable appropriations for rivers and harbors. I shall feel obliged to support the point of order made by the Senator from New York if it is pressed.

I regret exceedingly to be driven to this position. I wish to see enacted the legislation embodied in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. The whole intermountain country has been discriminated against for years by the legislation which it is sought to correct, and, as has been shown, every effort to relieve ourselves from the unjust burden that has been imposed upon us has been in some way or other frustrated, contrary to the pronounced views of Congress.

The Senator from New York will accomplish nothing by his point of order, because if it shall be sustained I shall submit another amendment, to which I am confident no objection whatever can be taken, that will accomplish exactly the same result.

So we are going to get a vote on this question regardless of the point of order. If the point of order be sustained, I shall offer the following amendment to the bill: After line 15, on page 95, where the language reads:

RIVERS AND HARBORS

To be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

I shall offer to amend as follows:

Provided, however, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be available until Senate bill 2327 shall have been considered and finally disposed of by the Senate, and, if passed by the Senate, until it shall have been considered and finally disposed of by the House of Representatives.

That amendment will be entirely relevant and germane to the bill, and it will not be general legislation of any character whatever. Now, I appeal to the Senator from New York to let us have a vote on this question; let us have a vote on the merits of it. Why should the Senator object to doing so?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, my raising the point of order is not due to hostility to the amendment itself.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I assume as much.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is due to two reasons: First, the Committee on Appropriations has delegated to me in a sense, as chairman of a subcommittee, the charge of the bill on the floor. In that capacity I assume that it is my duty to protect the bill against infractions of the rules of the Senate.

I am not authorized by the Committee on Appropriations to refrain from raising points of order in one direction and to raise them in others. The Committee on Appropriations will not tolerate for a moment my "playing favorites" in connection with legislative amendments that may be offered.

The second reason, Mr. President, as I have said to the Senator from Nevada and to the Senator from Idaho in the colloquy here the other afternoon, is that I have believed and still believe, that the process of attempting to put this legislative amendment on the Army appropriation bill will not gain the advantage which its supporters desire for it, even if it be successful here in the Senate, for the simple reason that the House conferees almost invariably have taken the position that when the House has sent an appropriation bill to the Senate and the Senate proceeds, as they term it, to load it up with legislative amendments, they simply will not discuss those amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The House of Representatives has a rule which controls them and prevents such action on their part.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; they have a rule which controls them. I anticipate that if an amendment of this sort be placed upon the bill, the Senate conferees will find themselves confronted by three absolutely adamant Members of the House forbidden by their own rules to accept the amendment.

The attitude of the other House, I think I can say, is just this: They object to the Senate, through the channel of a conference report, forcing legislation on the House which the House has had no opportunity to pass upon or even to amend.

Mr. WARREN. Their rules forbid it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And their rules are especially framed to prevent the Senate dictating legislation on appropriation bills. I believe now, as I said the other day, that the supporters of this measure are taking the poorest course, the most unwise course, if they really wish to attain the object they have in mind.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there seems to be some difference as to whether or not the House has established rules on the subject or whether its conferees simply act under specific instructions with reference to particular matters.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They have rules.

Mr. BORAH. They have rules that cover this matter so that it would have to go back to the House?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it would. Their conferees are not allowed to accept such amendments. I think I may say that, regardless of its merits, when such a proposal as this comes before the House many Members object to not having any right to perfect or amend the legislation; and I must say I think that, if we are fair about it, we must admit that the House has a good deal of right on its side in making that contention.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As I understand the Senator, two reasons are urged by him why he ought to press the point of order. The first is that he speaks for the Committee on Appropriations and that he ought not to play favorites, and the second is the difficulty that will be encountered by the conferees on the part of the Senate in considering the matter with the House of Representatives.

In the first place, I do not understand that the Senator in raising this point of order is speaking for the Committee on Appropriations. I understood the point of order was made by the Senator from New York and not for the Committee on Appropriations. Of course, he is acting in his individual capacity with reference to this point of order, and any other Member may raise a point of order against any other amendment, and the Senate will determine whether it ought to go on or ought not to go on.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say that before the point of order was raised by me I consulted the members of the Committee on Appropriations who collaborated in the preparation of this bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I dare say the Senator did, but that does not mean that the action is that of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Montana that the Senator from New York is a member of the Committee on Appropriations under our rules.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WARREN. And is charged with the duty of conducting this particular bill on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I appreciate that the Senator from New York is a member of the Committee on Appropriations under the rules.

Now, Mr. President, as to the attitude of the House of Representatives with respect to this matter, the House of Representatives sends over to this body an Army appropriation bill and has tacked onto it provisions in relation to appropriations for rivers and harbors.

The two have no sort of relation to each other; none whatever. The one, the appropriation for the support of the Army, is made under one provision of the Constitution, while the other, the appropriation for rivers and harbors, is made under an entirely different provision of the Constitution, namely, that which gives to Congress the power to regulate commerce between the several States and with foreign nations. When the House sends over to us a bill containing appropriations of that character, in relation to two entirely separate and distinct subjects, it then says, "You must not put anything else on; we have tied two entirely irrelevant and incongruous things together, but you must not put on a third."

Let me say that, as everybody knows, the only possible connection between the two is that the river and harbor work is conducted under the supervision of the engineers of the War Department.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, the bill itself is not merely an Army appropriation bill but it is a bill for the whole War Department, including both the military and the nonmilitary activities of the War Department.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And river and harbor expenditures are under the engineers of the War Department.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The river and harbor expenditures are under the engineers of the War Department, but they have no relation whatever to the national defense. River and harbor appropriations are made for the promotion of commerce, as everybody perfectly understands.

Mr. President, the appropriateness of this proposed amendment to the appropriation for rivers and harbors has been so fully demonstrated by the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Idaho that there can remain, it seems to me, no doubt in the mind of any Senator that the appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors are utterly useless, so far, at least, as the interior of the country is concerned, if the policy at which the amendment is aimed is to continue. As has been said, to make appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River is like pouring money into a rat hole so long as we allow the railroads to fix rates to river points that will drive navigation off the river. It is a waste of public funds. The main purpose of the legislation proposed by the amendment is to make useful the enormous appropriation that we make annually, great portions of which are absolutely lost by this policy.

As I have stated, the Senator from New York will avail himself nothing by a point of order, because I shall offer the amendment which I have suggested, and, if the Senate agrees to it, it will accomplish practically the same result as that sought to be accompanied by the amendment of the Senator from Nevada. I feel constrained, however, to support the point, for I can not reconcile myself to the view that the amendment does not propose general legislation on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the Senator see any difference as regards general legislation between this amendment and the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to construct a building for a private institution?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; I have considered that, and I have not been able to satisfy myself, I will say to the Senator from Nevada, that the Howard University case is a just precedent for this amendment. I wish I could stand with him on that question; but I can not do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In view of the relations of the Chair to this subject, it may not be improper for him to state that as a Senator he is in favor of the proposed amendment, but as Presiding Officer of the Senate it is his duty to interpret and apply the rules which the Senate has adopted for its guidance. The Chair has no doubt whatsoever that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada proposes general legislation, and, therefore, the point of order made by the Senator from New York is sustained.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as I have contended, I consider the decision recently rendered in the Howard University case as having changed the former understanding of the rule, and in order to have an opportunity of ascertaining whether there are other Senators who take the same view of it that I do, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PITTMAN. And on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. In what form will the question be put?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? Upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. He is absent, but I am informed that he would vote as I expect to vote on this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PHIPPS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. DIAL] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE]. If those Senators were present and voting, the Senator from Missouri would vote "nay," and the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea" on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 25, as follows:

So the Senate decided that the decision of the Chair should stand as the judgment of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I give notice that as soon as the bill which is now before the Senate is disposed of, I shall move to take up Senate bill 2327.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. After line 15, on page 95, I move to insert:

Provided, however, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be available until Senate bill 2327 shall have been considered and finally disposed of by the Senate, and, if passed by the Senate, until it shall have been considered and finally disposed of by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 95, after line 15, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be available until Senate bill 2327 shall have been considered and finally disposed of by the Senate, and, if passed by the Senate, until it shall have been considered and finally disposed of by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I was very glad to hear the Senator from New York say a few days ago, in the course of this debate, that he would be glad to aid in securing consideration for Senate bill 2327, introduced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING], and in substance like the amendment now offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. I think it eminently advisable that before any part of this appropriation for the improvement of rivers and harbors shall become available at all the Congress shall declare its policy with reference to this subject of the long-and-short-haul clause, which is so intimately and so vitally connected with the appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is a limitation upon the appropriation with reference to rivers and harbors alone?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; it applies only to the appropriation for rivers and harbors. As I said a little while ago, it has been demonstrated beyond controversy in the debate upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that to a very large extent the appropriations for the improvement of our interior rivers at least are entirely wasted if the policy of giving rates to river points lower than to interior points a less distance from the point of shipment is tolerated at all. No other factor and no other agency is so potent in the destruction of river carriage as that policy.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of this amendment to this bill, as the Senator knows; but the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] has given notice that when this bill is disposed of he is going to call up his bill, and I think two-thirds of the Senate are for it. Why can we not legislate in the regular way upon that bill, instead of putting an amendment on this appropriation bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is what I ask. My amendment does not affect the appropriation at all. It simply provides that we shall not do any more of the wasteful expenditure of money that we have been doing in the past.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator, and I think that bill ought to pass and will pass; but why hamper this bill and send it to conference and never get it heard over in the House of Representatives by a threat of this kind to hold it up? Let us pass the other bill in the regular way and send it to the House, and they will pass it. We can notify the House that we will pass none of their bills unless they pass that bill. I am willing to do that; but to put it on an appropriation bill as an amendment is not the way to legislate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I take an entirely different view of the matter from the Senator. This is not anything in the nature of a threat, either to this body or to the House of Representatives. It is a declaration on the part of those who so believe that we will appropriate no money for the improvement of our interior rivers and allow no money to be expended so long as that policy is pursued.

Mr. President, I said that that is the view, I think, of the Senate; but some feeble voices have been heard in favor of this policy. Very well.

If it is the policy of Congress to allow discrimination of that character, and to build up the terminal points at the expense of the interior of the country, we can make appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors in view of that policy; but to go on in this way seems to me entirely useless, if not senseless. Accordingly, I think this amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. To what appropriations in the bill does the limitation offered by the Senator from Montana apply?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It affects nothing except the appropriations for rivers and harbors.

Mr. SWANSON. Harbors, too?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; because it is impossible to make it any other way, as the appropriation is in a lump sum, $37,250,000.

Mr. SWANSON. Under the Senator's amendment that would apply entirely to the policy in reference to freight rates and passenger rates throughout the country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Not necessarily. The appropriation is made, as a matter of course, for the harbors at the terminal points, as well as for the improvement of the interior rivers. The policy, of course, affects all of them, both the interior rivers and the coast points.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Does not the Senator understand that the policy of all the transcontinental railways, and all of the railways at the water points, is to develop the harbors, in which case they disagree with the Senator from Montana; but, on the other hand, that they are aggressively opposed to the development of the river navigation in this country, and as the amendment of the Senator, if adopted, would have the effect of preventing the development of such streams as the Ohio, a project which is nearly completed, and the development of the Mississippi and other great river systems, to that extent the railroads thoroughly agree with the Senator from Montana?

The harbors themselves have been properly looked after, but we are just now beginning to see the coming of the time when we may have river competition with the railroads, and the result of it will be that the people whom the Senator from Montana and other Senators on this floor represent, people living in the interior of the country, will agree exactly with the views of the railroad systems that want to prevent water competition.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator that the only effect, of course, would not be, as the Senator from Louisiana has said, to play into the hands of the railroads. It would amuse the railroads very much if Congress should say that it will do nothing further in the way of improving and developing the rivers and harbors of the country; but the effect would be to tie up all operations now going on, to tie up the Government plants. This work is continually going on upon projects which are under way, and it would just stop all improvements unless both Houses should happen to pass the bill. If they should fail to pass the bill which the Senator desires to have passed, then all work of this nature under way now, under contract, or ready to be let to contract, would be discontinued, because there would be no money to pay for the work.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has not understood the amendment. It would not suspend the work until the bill was passed. It would simply suspend it until the Congress declared its policy, either one way or the other; that is all. If the bill should be defeated in the Senate, that would end the limitation, and all of the money would be available. If it should pass the Senate and go to the House, and pass the House, then the limitation would be ended. If it went to the House and was considered in the House and defeated in the House, then the limitation would cease and all the money would be available. The only purpose is to provide that it shall not be available until the Congress shall have passed on this other question, that is all, and it seems to me that is eminently fair and just.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I confess this amendment now offered by the Senator from Montana is of a new kind if it is to be classed among amendments placing restrictions or limitations upon appropriations. It proposes that this appropriation shall not become available until the Congress legislates in a certain fashion. I assume that in its essence it is still legislation, although the Senate has upon occasion taken a very broad view of its powers under the rules to restrict or limit appropriations. But before making any further observation let me point out one or two things which will happen if this amendment is adopted.

The appropriation on which it is supposed to be a limitation provides, among other things, for the maintenance of all the river and harbor work thus far completed. If this amendment goes through, the Army engineers will be forbidden, in effect, to maintain any channel in a river or harbor until the Congress takes certain action with respect to legislation now pending. Certainly no Senator wants to tie up the maintenance work. There are some projects completed years since which require certain expenses for maintenance every year. If those expenses are not met and that maintenance work not carried on the channels will become useless.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I suppose we made an appropriation last year that was intended to carry the work over until the end of the present fiscal year, June 30?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That will all be available, will it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but this amendment will not terminate in its effect, as I read it, on the adjournment of this session of Congress. If the legislation urged by the Senator from Idaho does not go through both Houses at this session, the money appropriated for rivers and harbors for next year can not be used. And all through the next session of this Congress, during which the Gooding bill will have life, nothing can be done by the Army engineers in carrying on new projects or maintaining old ones. I think I am right in that if I read this correctly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, are they not continuing contracts which go beyond this period?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Which must be cared for?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What will become of them if we adopt this amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They would be canceled, and the Government would lose millions of dollars by having to enter into new contracts at some future time after the contractors' equipment had been taken off the field and dispersed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I say to the Senator that that is the very purpose of this amendment, so that not a dollar shall be spent for the present current year——

Mr. WADSWORTH. The present current year?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the purpose of this amendment—that not a dollar shall be spent until Congress declares its policy with respect to this matter, either one way or the other.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator contend that we should not even maintain what we have?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; we should get a declaration from Congress about the matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I notice that while by this amendment a certain notice is served upon the House of Representatives, the Senator has not served notice on the President of the United States, who is part of the legislative machinery in that without his signature the new legislation under discussion can not become a law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That signifies the extent of our confidence in the good judgment and wisdom of the President of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The absence, however, of notice to the President, who must sign this measure, is significant.

Mr. President, it seems to me to be so utterly impracticable and likely to inflict such severe injury on public works already long since completed, and the continuance of public works which the Congress has authorized by statute, that I can not conceive that the Senate will put such a limitation upon this appropriation. I confess I am somewhat puzzled as to whether it is a proper limitation or an improper one. At least it is an extraordinary one.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against this amendment. I do not think it is a limitation on an expenditure. It makes an appropriation available upon the occurrence of certain events, and I think there is a difference between a limitation and a provision making an appropriation available provided certain things occur. I make the point of order that this is not a limitation directing how this money shall be spent. It simply is to make it available on the happening of certain conditions.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have a precedent before me which seems to indicate that the question now raised by the Senator from Virginia has already been passed upon by the Senate. It is found in volume 2 of Gilfry's Precedents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Chair will say to the Senator from Montana that it is ready to rule.

The Chair remembers that the Senate has taken different positions with reference to limitations on appropriations, but that the later attitude of the Senate has been to hold such limitations in order. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, regardless of the question of whether this amendment is in order or not, it occurs to me that it is a most extraordinary amendment to be proposed to any bill, and that the adoption of such an amendment would be setting a precedent which would plague the Senate for the remainder of time. If one Senator or any group of Senators succeed in having an amendment of this character agreed to, which would force legislation dealing with some other subject on any measure, then any other Senator or any other group of Senators could do likewise, and we would possibly have this kind of practice to contend with in all the future, because I dare say that Senators who are not able to get certain measures to which they were favorable called up in the regular order will not sit supinely by and allow others to go ahead with their legislation, when the Senate has once established a precedent that limitations may be placed upon some measure that is being considered which will force subsequent action upon the measure which they are favoring.

That is what this means. It is not only an attempt to force the Senate at this time in considering this measure to agree to act upon another measure, but it also attempts to force the House also to consider the measure.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senate could not force any limitation on it unless a majority of Senators were in favor of it, and if a majority were in favor of it, they could defeat it just as well as limit it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is very true, and for that reason I am voicing my opposition to any such action as the one proposed, just as the proponents of the amendment are voicing their sentiment in favor of it. I say that, regardless of the question of the merits of the bill which this contemplates bringing before the Senate, it sets a bad precedent, and a precedent that will rise to plague the Senate in the future, if adopted, regardless of the merits of the bill the Senators are seeking to force upon the Senate and force upon the House in an irregular way, although it may be in order under parliamentary rules.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator if the provision on page 82 in reference to the stop-watch business is not of exactly the same character as the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have not the bill before me, and I do not know exactly what that provision is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I answer the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That legislation was inserted by the House and not by the Senate. We have no jurisdiction over it, so far as our parliamentary rules are concerned.

Mr. BROOKHART. That matter could be decided on a point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was inserted by the House.

Mr. BROOKHART. The question now is as to the character of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, and there is a provision in the bill of identically the same character, which was passed without objection in either House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A point of order against House language does not lie in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to inquire of the Senator from New York if he takes the position that the House may put any kind of a limitation upon an appropriation which it sees fit to put, but that the Senate can not do it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President, I took no such position.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But in answer to the Senator from Iowa the Senator from New York said, "Oh, but that limitation was put on by the House."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I made that observation——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Therefore, though the House puts a limitation upon an appropriation which it makes, it is the position of the Senator that the Senate can not do the same thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I did not take any such attitude. I am quite sure the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I certainly misunderstood the Senator then.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I made my statement with respect to the so-called "stop-watch" provision which appears in the bill as it was agreed to in the House, and therefore is not subject to a point of order in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly, but the Senator from Florida, as I understand, is not raising a point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was answering the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. And the Senator from Iowa was commenting upon the remarks of the Senator from Florida. Now, that part of the bill reads as follows:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch—

And so forth.

The House put that kind of limitation on its appropriation. Why should not the Senate put this limitation upon another appropriation?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That, it seems to me, is much more pertinent as a limitation than an attempt to write into the pending bill a provision that we must first consider another certain measure and that the House must consider that measure if it passes the Senate before the provisions of this bill will become operative so far as the appropriations are concerned for rivers and harbors. I never heard of such procedure in all of my observation and experience in connection with legislative bodies, covering a period of probably 20 years. Perhaps some Senator who has served here for 25 or 30 years, or even with an experience of half a century, may have heard of such procedure, but I fancy no such effort was ever before recorded. I do not like the idea of trying to write into a law that the provisions of that law shall not become operative until the Senate takes up and considers some other measure. If we are going to establish that kind of precedent, then every time that any other Senator may have some measure which he may not have been able to bring before the Senate in an orderly way, all we will have to do will be to try to tack it on as an amendment to an appropriation bill, and if it is not adopted as an amendment we can have a prolonged debate for two or three or four days trying to tack it on under this kind of procedure, and we would have that process followed daily or weekly. I think the amendment ought to be defeated as a matter of the orderly conduct of the business of the Senate, if for no other reason.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I would suggest to our friends who favor the McNary-Haugen bill that possibly they could offer as an amendment to this bill a provision that no appropriation in the bill shall be available until the McNary-Haugen bill is considered and passed. I would suggest that every Senator who has any legislation pending might offer it as an amendment to an appropriation bill, and, failing in that, offer an amendment providing that none of the money appropriated in the bill shall be available until that certain legislation in which the Senator is interested shall have been acted upon.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. If there are those who would like to defeat all the appropriations for rivers and harbors, that would be a pretty good way to do it, would it not?

Mr. SWANSON. It would be a fine way. The time has come when the Committee on Rules must report an amendment with regard to the limitation of appropriations which are to continue from year to year. I am not criticizing the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Since the rule has been adopted by which any kind of legislation in the world is not permissible on a general appropriation bill, but can be put on an appropriation bill covering a period of only one year and then continued from year to year, that seems to be the favorite method of getting legislation enacted. But this is the first time it has ever been attempted in the history of the Senate to make money appropriated unavailable until certain legislation has been enacted.

I believe that President Coolidge, when he was Vice President, concurred in a decision rendered by Vice President Marshall which was not identical with this, but the Senate overruled him in that decision. I have not had an opportunity to look it up, but I have the impression that Vice President Coolidge made a ruling similar to this, and the Senate overruled him. However, I may be mistaken. This would mean that all the harbors of the country could not be improved if the House should get impatient and adjourn without considering a certain measure; that the rivers and improvements now in operation must cease unless the House and the Senate shall consider certain legislation. If they consider it at this session, that is not fixing a policy. They could change it next year or they could change it the year afterwards.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. What is the good of improving rivers and harbors and spending the $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 appropriated in this bill, plus any appropriation still unexpended, if we are going to pursue a policy which in the end must be destructive of rivers and harbors as freight carriers?

Mr. SWANSON. I think the Senator and those who are cooperating with him in the support of this amendment were frightened when they ought not to have been frightened. Do not Senators want the entrances to all these harbors, which have cost millions and millions of dollars, not to be dredged, to be kept open, to let foreign and other ships enter and leave? What would be the condition of our agriculture if that situation arose? A great many of the harbors of the United States must be dredged annually, and there must be expenditures made for that purpose. We can not stop dredging a few months without increasing, doubling, and trebling the expenditures that would have to be made thereafter. Is it the idea that if the long-and-short haul principle prevails one way or the other, we do not need harbors to export wheat and other grain, and to bring in goods? The mere statement of the fact shows the folly of it, whether we have high freight rates or low freight rates. At the ports of entry and export it means a great deal in the matter of the importing and exporting business of this country.

If I understand it aright, a vast majority of the appropriations are used for harbor improvements rather than river improvements, but we must keep the harbors in condition whether we have high or low freight rates. Whether we have competition of one harbor with another harbor in the United States, we are bound to have import and export business. This proposition would hamper the entire river and harbor improvement of the United States. It seems to me it is a bad policy to start, and I regret that the Chair did not hold that the amendment was subject to a point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, an incident very much like this occurred on January 23, 1923. At that time the District of Columbia appropriation bill was before the Senate and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] offered an amendment to an item of the appropriation bill which appropriated money for the salaries of the Public Utility Commissioners of the District of Columbia. His amendment and the subsequent proceedings read as follows:

Provided, That the appropriation in this section shall not become available until the Public Utilities Commission shall fix rates of fare for the street-railway companies in the District of Columbia at rates not in excess of the rates of fare fixed in existing charters or contracts heretofore entered into between said companies and the Congress—

And so forth.

The question being on the point of order yesterday made by Mr. PHIPPS that the amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill,

The Vice President overruled the question of order and held the amendment to be in order.

From the decision of the Chair Mr. WADSWORTH appealed to the Senate. * * *

The Vice President stated the question to be, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

It was determined in the negative—yeas 32, nays 36.

So the Senate has already created a precedent almost exactly on all fours with the situation confronting us to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair has a very distinct recollection with reference to different rulings on the proposition by the Senate. The present occupant of the chair himself has made a point of order against limitations, and they have been held in order. The personal opinion of the present occupant of the chair is in accordance with the latter ruling; but in view of the fact that the Senate has taken a different attitude with reference to the matter the Chair overruled the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, of course the question raising the point of order has been determined, and there is no occasion for a further discussion of it. I take this opportunity, however, to say that the Senate has nullified its own rule by the interpretation placed upon it by a vote of the Senate. I recall that on one occasion an amendment was submitted to a general appropriation bill—I think the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] referred to the distance—which was plainly out of order under the rule which has been invoked to-day. The point of order was submitted to the Senate; and the Senate, because it favored the legislative provision involved in the amendment, placed an interpretation on the rule which it reversed just a few minutes ago.

I thought the ruling in the Howard University case was clearly wrong, but I followed the precedent set by the Senate in my vote upon the point of order raised to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. The Senate saw fit to reverse its decision in the Howard University case just a few minutes ago on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada, so that the effect of the rule is to restrain the Senate from legislating on general appropriation bills when the Senate is willing to be restrained and to accomplish nothing whatever when the Senate wants to violate its own rules. That is a plain statement of the effect of the precedent which the Senate itself has written on this general rule.

But with respect to the amendment I feel it my duty to make a statement in explanation of my vote. I am in sympathy with the proposal of the Senator from Nevada and feel that an opportunity should be afforded to vote on his proposal. I can not, however, support the pending amendment for the reasons stated by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and suggestions made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and for other reasons.

We hear occasionally in the Senate references to the practice of logrolling, which of course means the process of trading votes and influence. This is usually censured and justly censured. I do not know of a precedent which would be better calculated to invite logrolling in legislation than the adoption of the pending amendment. It declares that the appropriation for rivers and harbors shall not be available until Senate bill 2327 shall have been finally disposed of in the Senate and, if the Senate passes it, until it shall have been finally disposed of in the House of Representatives, which means, if it means anything, if it is adopted that all who favor river and harbor improvement will be expected to get behind Senate bill 2327 and help secure its passage in order to secure their desires in connection with river and harbor improvements.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Admitting that the idea is sound, and I do admit it, does not the Senator find exactly the same vice in the bill as it comes to us with the appropriation for the improvement of rivers and harbors tacked on to the bill making appropriations for the War Department?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no. Under the rule of the Senate the War Department appropriation bill properly incorporates appropriations for rivers and harbors.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not controvert that it is in accordance with the rule, but I want to go back of that.

Is it not a fact that combining these two, those who are not interested in the appropriations for the Army at all but are very deeply interested in the appropriation for rivers and harbors will be constrained or in a measure induced to support the appropriations for the Army, and those who are not interested in river and harbors appropriations but are interested in the appropriations for the Army will be induced to support the other? In other words, is it not a logrolling bill, to start with?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think not. I do not think such a statement is justified. The Senate has determined that certain general appropriation bills shall embrace appropriations to carry out authorizations by the Congress; and, in pursuance to its decision upon that question, the appropriations for rivers and harbors are carried in the Army appropriation bill, probably for the reason that the Army engineers have jurisdiction of certain investigations and reports upon which the appropriations are based. It is perfectly proper under those circumstances to embrace river and harbor appropriations in the Army appropriation bill, because they can not otherwise be provided for under the rules of the Senate as they now exist. That, however, is a very different thing, both in theory and in practice, from adopting an amendment which prevents an appropriation from being expended until affirmative legislation relating to another subject has been disposed of by both Houses of Congress. I can not conceive of a worse parliamentary procedure than that contemplated in the pending amendment, according to my view of it. Everything that the Senator from Florida has said regarding it is justified.

I make this statement in order to explain why I shall vote against the amendment. It is unfortunate for the proposal which has been advanced here, touching the subject of the long and short haul and the rates applicable thereto, that it should be coupled with an attempt to establish a precedent of this character. I should like to support the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, but I can not support the proposal in the form in which it is presented by my friend, the Senator from Montana.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is, of course, desirable that any legislative body should proceed in matters of legislation in an orderly way. The rule that prohibits legislation on an appropriation bill, while it has two sides to it, I think is justified. We must remember, however, that desperate conditions warrant desperate remedies. Our forefathers confronted such a condition when they rebelled against the mother country. It was not because they wanted to isolate themselves, but the desperate remedy of revolution was resorted to in order to protect their own liberties and their own rights.

It will be observed that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Montana does not require the passage of the bill therein referred to, either by the Senate or by the other House; but merely provides that the bill must be disposed of, and, if in such disposition it shall be passed by the Senate, then it must be disposed of by the other House before the appropriation for rivers and harbors shall become effective.

If that bill were defeated in the Senate, the money would immediately be available so far as this amendment is concerned. If it were passed by the Senate and defeated in the House, again it would be true that the money provided for in the bill for river and harbor appropriations would at once be available.

I wish that the Senator from Montana had not included the entire appropriation, but that he had included only the portion of the appropriation providing for the improvement of rivers. That would entirely meet the argument made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] that our ports must be kept open in order that products may come in and go out.

Mr. President, why should the money appropriated for rivers be held back until some provision similar to that now proposed shall be enacted into law? The money which we appropriate for rivers is practically thrown away so long as we permit the railroads to put out of business the boats that would ply up and down upon the rivers after we shall have spent the money to provide for their dredging and improvement. So there is an intimate connection between the limitation in the amendment and the appropriation itself. Unless some such amendment shall be adopted we might just as well throw the money away. That is the principal reason why the river and harbor bill in the past has met with so much opposition in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, and has been so often condemned by the people of the country. We spend a hundred million dollars of the people's money dredging the rivers and then permit the railroads to drive all of the boats out of business as soon as they are put on the river which has thus been improved, and when the boats are driven off then up go the rates. That has been going on for 25 years. Is it any wonder that Members of Congress and people generally are getting tired of that kind of a misuse of the money of the taxpayers?

But that is not all; by virtue of the law permitting the railroads to charge a greater amount for a short haul than for a long haul when the short haul is included within the long haul, the people in the interior of the country are taxed in two ways: They are directly taxed by law to improve the rivers that do nobody any good, and, second, they are taxed by the railroad companies by means of higher rates in order to build up cities on the coast or at other points known technically as competitive points. They are getting tired of that kind of fleecing, and it is no wonder that a spirit, as it were, of revolution is growing up in the minds of men who have been paying taxes for 25 years to pay for the upbuilding of communities a thousand miles away from where they live, and who have been compelled to pay freight charges higher than other people must pay a thousand miles farther away from market. That injustice has been going on for generations. Time and time again it was supposed that it had been remedied by law, but some joker or some method of administration has always interfered, and relief has never come.

I want to tell you, Mr. President, I think we are justified in attaching to this bill, if we have the votes to do it, a limitation against the improvement of rivers until we have regulated the traffic both on the rivers and on the railroads so that our money will not be wasted and thrown away. I want to say to the Members of the Senate who are particularly interested in the improvement of the rivers that I believe I feel as deep an interest in their improvement as they do, but I am not so enthusiastic that I want to improve them when it will do nobody any good. I am willing that Senators should take public money with which to improve the rivers if the people in return may derive some benefit from lower freight rates, but the people are not getting such benefit now; we know they are not getting it; and this bill will not give it to them. It is proposed to appropriate $37,000,000 more of public funds to be thrown away on the improvement of rivers without bringing any return to the people who must toil to produce the money thus expended. If this proposed step surprises and annoys some Senators and makes them feel that the people are becoming revolutionary, just keep up the practice long enough, keep pushing down those who must pay taxes in the interior of the country to build up particularly favored cities and localities, and they will get a taste of something that is worse than this, and it will come naturally. I make no threat, Mr. President; I have no feeling of ill will against anyone, but a system is being perpetuated here that, carried to its logical limit, must result at some time in those who are already over-burdened with taxation refusing to pay money to build up rival localities.

We ask nothing unfair; we are not asking that we be favored; we are not asking even that the charge for the short haul shall be less than the charge for the long haul. We are willing that those who have the long haul shall have their rates cut down as low as the rates of those who have only the short haul, but we are not willing to pay more for the short haul than for the long haul. We have been doing that for a lifetime, but we have come to a place where we feel that the injustice ought to end and we should be given some relief from that kind of a condition.

Talk about passing the bill as a separate measure! We have done that before, but it has not accomplished any good. Somewhere, at some place, somehow, somebody sidetracks it, pigeonholes it, and no relief is afforded. What good does it do to spend millions of dollars every year on our rivers if we are not going to use the rivers? We are not justified in taking public funds out of the Treasury to improve and dredge the rivers and let them fill up in the natural course of events without boats plying on them. We are willing to appropriate public funds to dredge the rivers and to improve the harbors if there may be coupled with such appropriation a provision under which somebody will get some good out of it in addition to those who receive the money for doing the dredging.

We are not asking anything unreasonable or anything unfair, and there is no injustice in the proposal. We ought to have what is now demanded. We ought to provide before we spend a single dollar to dredge any river that boats when put upon it shall not be driven out of business by competition that is unfair and unjust, which always results in the rail rates going up immediately the boats are driven off. We in the interior ought not to be expected either to continue to toil and to pay taxes to build up rival cities and favored communities in some other localities. It seems to me, therefore, Mr. President, that if the amendment shall be modified as I have suggested there can be no injustice in it and it ought to be adopted.

GOVERNMENT INTEREST RATES

Mr. SHIPSTEAD addressed the Senate on Government interest rates.

After having spoken for some time,

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota be good enough to yield until an effort is made to effect an arrangement about voting on the bonus bill?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If it will not cause discussion I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The bonus bill has passed the House over the President's veto and will be presented here very soon.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is here now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Page, its Clerk, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 7959) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, with his objections thereto, the House proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION—VETO MESSAGE

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, some of the Senators on the other side desire to leave the city, and I desire to know if we can not reach an understanding as to when we will have a final vote upon this measure. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to proceed now or on Monday or on any other day that is satisfactory to the different Senators.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that Senators take an extraordinary course here, to break in right in the middle of a Senator's argument to take up something else.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the Senator from Minnesota was good enough to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I know he was, but——

Mr. ROBINSON. A number of Senators on both sides of the Chamber—some four or five on the other side and three on this side—have expressed a desire to leave the city. Many of them are leaving for the purpose of attending political conventions in their respective States. My impression is that if the arrangements can be effected a vote may be had next Monday. If that is not done, it may be necessary to defer the vote for several days.

I ask unanimous consent that immediately upon convening next Monday the Senate proceed to the consideration of the veto message, and that before the expiration of the calendar day of Monday the Senate vote finally upon it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is day after to-morrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I shall have to object to that, for the same reason that my friends on the other side object to making it two days later, Wednesday, as was suggested. We have in Pennsylvania a State committee meeting and a meeting of all our delegates to the Republican convention fixed for Tuesday morning, and it will be necessary for both my colleague [Mr. PEPPER] and myself to leave here early Monday in preparation for that. Then there will be some debate on the matter of overriding the veto, and for that reason, it seems to me, that to fix a vote for Monday is a little too soon. I suggest to the Senator that he make it Wednesday or Thursday of next week.

Mr. ROBINSON. The difficulty about that, as the Senator knows, and as already stated, is that a number of Senators are leaving here Tuesday to be gone all the week, and the Senator from Indiana is leaving this afternoon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then I suggest to the Senator that he make it a week from Monday—that would enable all of the absent Senators to get back—or next Saturday, a week from to-day, if that is preferable.

Mr. CURTIS. Why not a week from to-day?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have my doubts about whether we can get back. Our convention takes place on next Thursday, and we would have to leave early Thursday evening in order to get back here by Saturday morning.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Would Monday be satisfactory to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SHIELDS. Monday week? That would be only one day later than Saturday.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the Senate, on convening next Monday week, proceed to the consideration of the veto message on the adjusted compensation bill, and that not later than 10 o'clock p. m. of said day the Senate proceed to vote.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as the Senator having charge of the bill, I have no objection to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is May 26.

Mr. NORRIS. It will be necessary to have a roll call.

Mr. ROBINSON. We shall have to have a roll call, and, Mr. President, if no Senator who is present objects, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I object to a roll call being had at the present time. When I yielded the floor——

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator pardon me for another interruption? The Senator was good enought to yield for the purpose of submitting this request, and unless an arrangement is effected this afternoon for a final vote it will occasion considerable inconvenience to a number of Senators. I hope the Senator will be kind enough to permit this arrangement to be entered into now, and in order to do that it is necessary to have a roll call. If the Senator would prefer——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I suggest that by unanimous consent these remarks about an agreement for a vote on the bonus bill be directed to appear in the RECORD apart from the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota, so as not to interrupt the sequence of his remarks as they will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. All proceedings on this subject. I think that is entirely proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the last request with respect to the continuity of the address of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas suggests the absence of a quorum in order to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that when I yielded——

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no intention of taking the Senator from Minnesota off the floor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am aware of that. I will say to the Senator that when I yielded the floor I did so with the understanding that there was to be no debate, and certainly I did not understand that there was to be a roll call or a vote; but in view of the fact that that is necessary now, since we have been interrupted so long, and in view of the fact that so many Senators want to leave the city, I will agree.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. That is very courteous of him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just one moment. I stated a while ago that I was willing to have a vote next Monday. Of course I should like to see this matter voted on at the earliest possible moment, and I am perfectly willing to vote to-day, if possible. I think the sooner we vote on it, the better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Fess	Lodge	Sheppard
Ashurst	Fletcher	McKellar	Shields
Bayard	Frazier	McKinley	Shipstead
Borah	George	McLean	Simmons
Brandegee	Gerry	McNary	Smith
Brookhart	Gooding	Moses	Smoot
Broussard	Hale	Neely	Stanfield
Bursum	Harris	Norbeck	Stephens
Cameron	Harrison	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Oddie	Swanson
Caraway	Howell	Overman	Trammell
Colt	Johnson, Minn.	Pepper	Wadsworth
Copeland	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Kendrick	Ralston	Warren
Edwards	Keyes	Ransdell	Watson
Fernald	King	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Ferris	Ladd	Robinson	Willis

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-two Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present.

The Secretary will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The reading clerk read as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate, on convening next Monday a week, May 26, 1924, proceed to the reconsideration of the adjusted compensation bill, and that at not later than 10 o'clock p. m. on said day the Senate proceed to vote thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators who have come into the Chamber since the discussion that preceded the request for unanimous consent occurred, I desire to say that a number of Senators find it necessary to leave the city to attend political conventions in their home States. Some of them are leaving to-day, others will leave Monday, and still others upon days following:

I asked unanimous consent at first that the vote upon the reconsideration of the adjusted compensation bill be had next Monday. It developed that that agreement could not be secured, and that during the remainder of next week there would be absent a number of Senators who desire to be recorded upon the bill.

I therefore submitted the request for the earliest day when it appeared all Senators might be able to be present, namely, next Monday a week. I should like to see the vote had at an earlier time; I should like to see it had very promptly; but it does not appear possible to effect that arrangement, and Senators do not desire to leave with the question unsettled as to when the vote on the reconsideration of the bill will be had. I am merely submitting the request for the convenience of Senators on both sides of the Chamber who have advised that they are compelled to leave the city to attend political conventions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to suggest that after a certain hour on that day the speeches be limited in time. Under this unanimous-consent agreement three or four Senators could take all the time.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to modifying the request in any particular with respect to a limitation of debate which the Senator desires to suggest.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that after the hour of 6 o'clock p. m. speeches be limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to that modification. Indeed, I think it improves the agreement.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request as modified?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to announce that it will be impossible for me to be present on Monday, the 26th day of May, for the reason that our primary election is to be held in West Virginia on May 27. I desire to vote on this question, and purpose voting to pass the adjusted compensation bill over the President's ve.o. Unless the unanimous-consent agreement is modified so as to provide for the taking of the vote on some day other than the 26th or 27th of May, I shall be compelled to object to the request.

Mr. ROBINSON. I modify the request so as to make it a week from to-day, next Saturday, which would be the 24th, and I will move up the hour for the final vote, if no Senator objects, to 6 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request as now modified?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If that brings the final vote at 6 o'clock, we should modify the request so as to make the 10-minute limitation apply at 4 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; let that be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am willing to vote on this matter this afternoon or any day early next week; but I can not possibly be here on next Saturday, and that is the situation of some other Senators, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] among others, on account of conditions similar to those in which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] finds himself.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have demonstrated that it is impossible to fix upon a day upon which every Senator will find it convenient to be present. Unless Senators want to be obstinate about the matter, and occasion great inconvenience to other Senators, I think some date ought to be fixed and notice given. Otherwise I shall move to proceed to the reconsideration of the bill next Monday upon the convening of the Senate. It is privileged, and I can do that.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator ought to leave that to the Senator in charge of the bill. That Senator was going to serve the same kind of a notice.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will serve that notice, I will withdraw mine.

Mr. CURTIS. I am perfectly willing to handle the measure.

Mr. ROBINSON. I assure the Senator from Kansas that I have no intention of usurping his jurisdiction.

Mr. CURTIS. When I first made my statement I said to the Senate that I was willing to go on now, or to go on Monday, or at any time; but I am willing to consult the convenience of other Senators by having a day fixed.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is there any reason why we can not go on right now?

Mr. CURTIS. We could not go on now, with the Senator from Minnesota entitled to the floor, and Senators who are not here want to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that objection has been made.

SEVERAL SENATORS. No! No!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] made an objection.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I did not make a formal objection, but it is simply a question of not wanting the Senate to decide on a day when I could not be here.

Mr. WATSON. I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to vote immediately upon the subject.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I serve notice that upon Monday, immediately after the convening of the Senate, I will move that the Senate proceed with this privileged matter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the rule, until 2 o'clock on Monday the calendar will be the order. So I change my notice. I will call the adjusted compensation bill up immediately after 2 o'clock next Monday.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I will say this to the Senator, that if an agreement can be made to vote this afternoon I shall be willing to go on on Monday by unanimous consent, if it is agreeable that I continue my remarks on Monday. I shall not do anything to interfere with the Senate acting now, if the Senate will agree to act now. The fact that I have the floor need not stop the Senate from transacting this business if the Senate will agree to do it now. I am willing to yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators out of the city, and some will be leaving at 4 o'clock with the idea that we were not going to vote to-day. It would be unfair to them to take the matter up, and therefore I shall object.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If no agreement can be made, I shall refuse to yield the floor.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 112)

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and ask that it lie on the table and be printed. I give notice that I shall call it up at the earliest possible moment.

The report was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 10, 18, 21, 32, 41, 46, 47, 49, and 64.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 23, 26, 27, 33, 34, 35, 37, 38, 39, 42, and 61, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "2,550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$62,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$17,550,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "plant appliances as now defined by the 'Navy classification of accounts;'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "in all, $50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows: "No officer of the Navy or Marine Corps, while on leave of absence engaged in a service other than that of the Government of the United States, shall be entitled to any pay or allowances for a period in excess of that for which he is entitled to full pay, unless the President otherwise directs"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,385,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,911,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ", and limiting the number of officers and enlisted men"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and that no part of the moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or herein made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 8, 25, 28, 30, 31, 40, 43, 44, 45, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 59, and 60.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD resumed and concluded his speech, which is entire as follows:

GOVERNMENT INTEREST RATES

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] said something about being taxed for the purpose of raising funds to develop harbors and then being taxed again to pay railroad rates. There are more ways of taxing the people than by simply passing a tax bill requiring the citizen to go to the county treasurer, pay his county taxes and his State taxes, and pay his income and excise taxes to the Federal Government.

It is interesting to note that while we have been discussing the Army appropriation bill the President has vetoed the bill calling for adjusted compensation to the service men of the last war. For doing so he gives various reasons, the chief among which is his desire to lower taxes.

Mr. President, because the Senate, through various sources, has been led to believe and the country has been led to believe that the Secretary of the Treasury has been the chief financial adviser of the administration, and because of the fact that I myself and other Senators have been deluged with letters and telegrams asking the Congress to sign on the dotted line when it comes to passing tax measures or when it comes to acting upon questions of public finance that are proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury as the chief financial adviser of the administration, I want to discuss the conduct of the Government financing by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I want to discuss him as chief financial adviser of the administration; and I want to say that I do not intend to do it in a controversial spirit. I do not intend to do it in a partisan spirit. I want to confine myself to the facts, to the statements of the Secretary of the Treasury, and to the statements of his friends.

Mr. President, the President has vetoed the bonus bill. His message tells us that he has been actuated by various motives, chief among which is his desire for lower taxes and therefore easier economic burdens for the American people. A desire for lower taxation is a commendable one, upon which there can be no difference of opinion. I am firmly of the opinion, however, that the President is ill advised when he places the burden and cost of reducing taxes upon the soldiers. There are other ways whereby the burden of the people can be lightened and the taxes reduced without taking it out of the pockets of those who risked their lives at the request of the Government during the World War. There are many ways of placing unnecessary burdens upon the backs of the people, but the most universal manner is that of taxation. It is an axiom that "The power to tax is the power to destroy." It is also a recognized fact that the power to fix the interest rates is the power to tax, and therefore the power to destroy.

On February 1, during this session of Congress, I tried to impress upon the Senate the fact that this power had been so used and that it had resulted in an exorbitant rate of interest being charged on borrowings of all kinds in the United States to such an extent that it is conservative to say that the American people were paying an exorbitant interest charge of at least 1 per cent on borrowings of all kinds. That as a result of this exorbitant interest charge the American people were obliged to pay directly an unnecessary interest charge totaling $1,000,000,000 per year, based on a total indebtedness, public and private, of $100,000,000,000, which I know to be a very conservative estimate of the indebtedness of the people of the United States. At that time I also pointed out the law of economics—that each unnecessary cent that goes into the cost of production is multiplied five times when the article produced reaches the ultimate consumer, and that therefore, in accordance with that law, an exorbitant interest charge of $1,000,000,000 entered into the cost of production of American products has been multiplied into $5,000,000,000 when the products reach the ultimate consumer. I charge that this unnecessary burden of $5,000,000,000 annually is the result of the extraordinary high interest rate paid by the Government, by commerce, public and private corporations, and private individuals. My remarks to the Senate on February 1 state that this high rate of interest was due to the high interest paid by the Federal Government upon its securities issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, the interest rate on which is fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by the high rediscount rates of the Federal reserve banks; that these high rates serve as a peg on the money market of the United States and set the pace for high interest rates being charged on borrowings of all kinds. I called attention at that time to the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury is chairman of the Federal Reserve Board as well as Secretary of the Treasury, and therefore was to a large extent to blame for the high interest rates paid by the Government and high rate of discount charged by Federal reserve banks, and therefore for the high rate of interest being charged upon debts of all kinds in the United States.

Three months have passed by, and the matters I have referred to have been discussed in the financial journals all over the country, by bankers' conventions, and the Secretary of the Treasury has replied thereto in the public press in the April issue of the American Bankers' Association Journal, answering my remarks to the Senate of February 1.

Mr. President, I am sending to the desk a copy of that letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will not take the time to have it read. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD with my remarks, without being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the request will be granted.

The letter is as follows:

MARCH 17, 1924.

DEAR SIR: I received your letter of March 10, 1923, commenting on the address of Senator SHIPSTEAD of Minnesota on the floor of the Senate, February 1, 1924, in which he charged that the people of the United States are paying about 1 per cent too much interest on the public debt, and requesting a statement as to how the Treasury fixes the rate of interest on its borrowings.

The factors which the Treasury must always take into consideration in floating a new issue of securities are practically the same as those which must be considered by any investment banker in floating new issues for his clients. All Government offerings are made on a strict investment basis. The Treasury always aims to sell its securities at the lowest possible interest rate consistent with their successful distribution among investors, and with this in view it always gives close attention and consideration, in connection with the determination of the amount and terms of each issue, to the market quotations on outstanding securities and to prevailing money-market conditions. No one realizes better than the Treasury that the burden of paying the interest on the public debt falls on the country's taxpayers, and I can assure you that every effort is made to minimize this burden. On the other hand, it is necessary to meet market conditions in carrying on refunding operations and in securing funds to meet current activities. If Treasury certificates and notes should be offered at rates of interest lower than market conditions warrant, they would not prove sufficiently attractive to investors and the funds necessary to carry on the Government's activities would not be available. The Government can no longer appeal to the public to purchase its securities at less than market rates on grounds of patriotism.

In the Government financing which took place on December 15, 1923, the Treasury required, to meet maturing obligations and to carry it over the period to March 15, 1924, about $350,000,000. One-third of this could be thrown into June 15, 1924, maturities, when maturing obligations were somewhat lower than expected receipts, and two-thirds placed in December 15, 1924, maturities, on which date there were no other maturing obligations. A summary of the market situation December 10, 1923, when the December 15 financing was announced, with the maturity dates, the amount of short-term issues then outstanding, and their return based on the market price, follows:

Maturity	Amount outstanding	Return
		Per cent
Mar. 15, 1924	$570,946,800	3.85
June 15, 1924	411,088,000	4.04
Sept. 15, 1924	377,081,100	4.20
Dec. 15, 1924
Mar. 15, 1925	508,355,900	4.39

Obviously the above market situation called for an interest rate of 4 per cent on the six months' certificates maturing June 15, 1924, and 4¼ per cent on the certificates maturing December 15, 1924. That in spite of oversubscriptions the interest rate was correctly fixed is shown by the fact that in the week succeeding their issuance large amounts of the new issue of each series changed hands at par.

The March 15 certificates were offered Monday morning, March 10, and the previous Saturday the price of Government short-term obligations indicated the following returns on the maturity dates:

June 16, 1924	3.90
September 15, 1924	3.83
December 15, 1924	3.85
March 15, 1925	4.00
June 15, 1925	4.13
December 15, 1925	4.14

Faced with this market situation, a 3¾ per cent rate was too low for a nine months' certificate. To have made this 3¾ would have been to adopt an inconvenient rate. It was determined, therefore, to issue 12 months' certificates on a 4 per cent basis, which exactly hit the market.

It is possible, of course, that the Treasury might at times have issued its securities at a somewhat lower rate and have appealed to the Federal reserve banks to support the market through heavy purchases of such securities in case the proper distribution should not be effected. To pursue such a course in peace times, however, would seem to me to be inexcusable. It would create an artificial situation in the investment and money markets and tend to produce inflation. It may be noted in this connection that the Treasury has succeeded in borrowing on its certificates of indebtedness at a lower rate than even States and cities have been able to borrow on their fully tax-exempt short-term bills, though in substance the Treasury certificates are exempt only from the normal income tax. During the whole of February, for example, the city of New York paid 4¼ and 4½ per cent on its short-term bills, while the Treasury is now offering one-year certificates at 4 per cent. Moreover, the Treasury's long-term bonds not wholly tax exempt do not bear higher rates than the average on municipal bonds issued during and since the war, which are wholly tax exempt. The Treasury's wholly tax-exempt securities bear a rate nearly 1 per cent lower than municipal tax-exempt securities. A glance at the public-debt statement will show that the great bulk of the outstanding public debt bears 4½ per cent or less. During the heavy refunding operations of 1921 and the early part of 1922, when the money market was tight and interest rates high, it was necessary, of course, to issue securities at somewhat higher rates, but it will be noted that none of these issues have long maturities. They all mature within the next few years and can soon be replaced by issues at lower rates according to the conditions of the market. In fact the two series of notes which bear the highest rates mature during the current calendar year and will be paid off or refunded at the market rates.

The principal evidence in support of the contention that the Treasury is paying too high rates seems to be that the various offerings were oversubscribed, but if one will take the trouble to examine the market it will be found that there are comparatively few successful offerings of securities of any kind which are not oversubscribed. In fact, if they are undersubscribed, the offering is in part a failure and reflects on the judgment of those who made it. The investment market is an exceedingly delicate affair, and a very small difference in rate will mean the difference between success and failure of the offering. Reference was made to the Treasury notes of January 15, 1923, bearing 4½ per cent and the notes of May 15, 1923, bearing 4¾ per cent. The daily quotations, which are, of course, the best index of what the market will take, show that soon after the issue of the 4½ per cent notes in January they dropped below par, and by May, when the next issue was due, they were selling at a yield of over 4.60. The May issue was an unusually large one, amounting to nearly $700,000,000, and I do not believe anyone familiar with the market would contend that the issue would have been successful at a lower rate. You will recall the violent criticisms which were directed against the Treasury after the war when the Liberty bonds sold below par on the ground that the rates on the loans were too low.

In comparing the rates on acceptances with the various types of Government securities the differences in the nature of the issues in maturity dates, size of issues, changing market conditions, and other fundamental factors were wholly ignored. Rates on acceptances are for 90-day bills, and it might be noted that in December, 1923, the Treasury issued six-month securities at 4 per cent, and is now offering an issue of 12-month securities at 4 per cent, while the market rate on bills was 4¼ to 4¼ on the former date and is now 4½. A compilation of interest rates shows that the rate on 6-month certificates has conformed fairly closely to the rate on 90-day bills since 1921, and that the rate on commercial paper has run approximately three-quarters to 1 per cent higher.

Much of the criticism of the Treasury and the Federal reserve banks clearly betrays a lack of understanding of the fundamental economic principles which determine interest rates. The impression seems to prevail that conditions in the money market are due entirely to the rates paid on Government securities and to the discount rates of Federal reserve banks, and that these rates can be fixed arbitrarily at a higher or lower level, thus determining market conditions at will. On the contrary, both the rates paid on Government securities and the discount rates of Federal reserve banks reflect conditions in the money market rather than cause them. Fundamentally, interest rates are determined by the demand for and supply of capital. The comparatively high money rates which continue to prevail are the result of economic conditions which exist throughout the world.

The demand for capital everywhere following the destruction of the war is so great that high rates must be paid by those who wish to secure the limited supply. The return to normal rates must necessarily be a gradual process depending upon the rapidity with which the supply of capital is replenished. A scarcity of capital is something beyond the power of the Treasury or banks to prevent. It is a persistent fallacy that financial and credit institutions can create capital or make it cheap. They can manufacture credit, but only in a limited sense can credit take the place of capital. Capital can be created only by increased productivity and increased savings.

With reference to the effect of the Federal reserve bank rate on conditions in the Northwest, statistics show that in the Minneapolis district the average rate charged by member banks to customers on paper which they in turn rediscounted rose from 7.65 per cent in December, 1921, to 7.99 per cent in December, 1923, although the discount rate of the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis declined from 5½ to 4½ per cent. On the latter date the spread between the discount rate and the rate charged by member banks to their customers was 3½ per cent. This would hardly bear out the contention that the plight of the banks in that district is due to the discount rate of the Federal reserve bank. A similar situation prevails in some of the other districts, particularly in the agricultural districts. Many banks have long been accustomed to charge the maximum rate allowed by the usury laws of the State, especially on the smaller loans. In some sections of the country these rates range from 6 to 10 per cent, and are still paid by many borrowers in spite of the discount rate of 4½ per cent. In many agricultural sections, moreover, a great majority of the commercial banks are not members of the Federal reserve system, and under such conditions it would be difficult for the Federal reserve banks to exercise any great influence over the higher level of interest rates for these districts. In fact, the discount rates of none of the Federal reserve banks can be said to be effective at the present time in the sense that they are a controlling factor in the general level of interest rates. It should be noted in this connection that discount rates of Federal reserve banks are not fixed with the idea of enabling member banks to make a profit. Commercial banks are not primarily borrowing institutions; they are lenders, and for them to borrow in order to lend at a profit is universally recognized as unsound practice. The primary purpose of reserve institutions is to assist commercial banks in times of unusual or emergency demands rather than to extend a permanent line of credit on which member banks can make a profit. In connection with this whole question of discount rates and the function of reserve institutions, it is significant that in England and other European countries the bank rate is almost constantly higher than market rates on discountable paper. Since the entrance of the United States into the World War in 1917, however, the rates of Federal reserve banks have been lower than rates charged by member banks on practically all paper rediscounted.

While the Treasury welcomes any public discussion or suggestion with reference to its policies, I realize that much harm has been done by charges against the Federal reserve system by those who are neither familiar with the facts nor the fundamental economic principles involved. These charges have inflamed the minds of the public in certain sections with wholly imaginary evils and injustices, and any contribution that you can make toward the better understanding of our banking and financial systems will be a public service.

I fully appreciate the conditions in certain agricultural districts, but in my opinion the farmer's greatest enemies to-day are those who, posing as his champions, lead him into the belief that his ills can be cured by political measures rather than through the necessary economic adjustments, and who seek to divert him from facing the facts in the case by indiscriminate attacks on existing institutions. What the farmer needs above all else at this time is sound constructive statesmanship.

Very truly yours,

A. W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JAMES E. CLARK,
Editor American Bankers' Association Journal,
110 East Forty-second Street, New York City.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, in this letter the Secretary of the Treasury does not deny that the Treasury, through the Federal reserve banks, is outbidding banks for bank deposits on their savings certificates, paying a higher rate of interest than banks can afford to pay on savings. He does not deny my charge that there is an exorbitant rate of interest being charged on borrowings of all kinds. He does not say that the Treasury is not paying too high a rate of interest on several billion dollars of floating indebtedness. He does not deny that the rediscount rates of the Federal reserve banks are too high, but he says that the Secretary of the Treasury and Federal reserve banks are not to blame. He says that the high rate paid by the Secretary of the Treasury on Government issues and the high rediscount rate of the Federal reserve banks reflect the condition of the money market instead of causing those high rates.

In the article published in the American Bankers' Association Journal Secretary Mellon states:

Much of the criticism of the Treasury and the Federal reserve banks clearly betrays a lack of understanding of the fundamental economic principles which determine interest rates. The impression seems to prevail that conditions in the money market are due entirely to the rates paid on Government securities and to the discount rates of the Federal reserve banks, and that these rates can be fixed arbitrarily at a higher or lower level, thus determining market conditions at will. On the contrary, both the rates paid on Government securities and the discount rates of the Federal reserve banks reflect conditions in the money market rather than cause them. Fundamentally interest rates are determined by the demand for and supply of capital. The comparatively high money rates which continue to prevail are the result of economic conditions which exist throughout the world.

Then he goes on to say:

No one realizes better than the Treasury that the burden of paying the interest on the public debt falls on the country's taxpayers.

So he recognizes that fact.

Now I will quote another statement from a document bearing the name of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he takes an entirely opposite point of view. This is from a document issued by the Federal Reserve Board, of which the Secretary of the Treasury is the chairman. This report is dated February 15. I believe it was not available until the first week in April.

which is the week in which his letter to the American Bankers' Association Journal was published.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Before proceeding to a consideration of the matter to which the Senator has just adverted, may I inquire if it is not a fact that the Secretary of the Treasury, in his borrowings, went into a number of the agricultural States—into Ohio and Illinois and Indiana and Iowa—and obtained from those States considerable money for these short-time certificates at a higher rate of interest than was then current in those respective localities?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. So that that would be a refutation of the statement which is contained in the letter which the Senator has just read.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, yes. That drive was made for the sale of savings certificates drawing 4½ per cent interest, compounded semiannually. I will say, however, that the newspapers record that on the 1st day of February that sale of savings certificates was stopped in the Northwest States.

I want to quote from this other document bearing the name of the Secretary of the Treasury. Here he gives an entirely different point of view on the question of whether or not the Federal reserve bank discount rate has anything to do with the rate of interest being charged on borrowings of all kinds. On page 10 he says:

> The experience of the Federal reserve banks, notwithstanding that the brief period of their active operation on a considerable scale has been one of disturbed economic and financial conditions, is demonstrating that there is a sufficiently close connection between changes in Federal reserve bank rates and changes in interest rates charged their customers by member banks on a sufficiently large volume of customers' borrowings to make Federal reserve rates an important and at times a leading influence in money centers. In that sense the Federal reserve bank rates may be said to be effective. Its effectiveness and the range of its influence have been promoted in no inconsiderable degree in recent years by the increasing fluidity of the American credit system; that is, by the ease with which credit flows between the larger financial centers and the interior of the country.
> Member bank customer rates have shown a tendency to move with Federal reserve bank rates. * * *

Are not these two statements entirely opposite and contradictory? In the first statement, Secretary Mellon states that the Federal reserve bank rates reflect conditions in the money market rather than cause them, but in the second statement he claims that there is a sufficiently close connection between changes in the Federal reserve bank rates and changes in rates charged their customers by member banks to make Federal reserve rates an important and at times a leading influence in money centers.

Which of the above statements is true? The letter to the American Bankers' Association Journal was written in reply to my address to the Senate of February 1, in which I charged that the Federal reserve rate kept up the interest rate on commercial borrowings, and Secretary Mellon's letter was not written until March 17, plenty of time for due deliberation. The report for 1923 by the Federal Reserve Board was made public the latter part of March or first part of April, so that the letter and report can be said to be simultaneous expressions from the Treasury Department.

There we have Mr. Mellon's view on the question of whether or not the high rate of interest being charged on borrowings of all kinds in the United States is caused by the Secretary of the Treasury setting the pace by offering an unnecessarily high rate of interest on Government securities, and rediscount rates charged by the Federal reserve banks. That seems to be the question in controversy,

The Secretary of the Treasury takes the position that the Federal reserve bank rediscount rates reflect the condition of the money market, and are not the cause of the high rate of interest. He admits that interest rates are high.

Since these statements were made some very interesting things have happened, because on the 1st day of May the Federal Reserve Bank of New York reduced its rediscount rate from 4½ per cent to 4 per cent.

I want to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that on April 30, the day before that interest rate was reduced, call money on the New York market closed at 4½ per cent.

I have an editorial from the Wall Street Journal which I send to the desk, and part of which I want to have printed. I do not care to have the whole editorial printed, but just enough to indicate the fact that the call-money rate at the close on April 29 was 4½ per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, May 1, 1924]

MONEY DEMAND IS SLOWING UP—RESERVE REDISCOUNT RATE REDUCED TO 4 PER CENT—BROKERS BORROWING LIGHTLY—COMMERCIAL PAPER STEADY

New York Federal Reserve Bank announced reduction on the rediscount rate from 4½ per cent to 4 per cent Wednesday.

Last time the rediscount rate was changed was on February 23, 1923, when it was increased from 4 per cent to 4½ per cent, when the Federal reserve banks of New York, Boston, and San Francisco all acted at once, so the same rate, 4½ per cent, prevailed throughout the system.

It is believed that some of the stronger reserve banks, with high ratios, may follow the lead of the New York bank now. Each Federal reserve bank is free to take independent action on rediscount rate, subject to approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

Money market continues quiet. Tuesday's closing rate of 4½ per cent brought a flood of out-of-town money to swell the already large local surplus so that the rate opened at 4¼ per cent.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Another editorial from the Wall Street Journal of April 30 read as follows:

> Call money renewed at 8¾ per cent and gradually rose to 4½ per cent in the afternoon without any particular demand for loans in the stock market or elsewhere.

The news that the New York Federal Reserve Bank had reduced its rate was not made known in the money market until after the close of business on May 1 of this year, and here we find in the editorial of the Wall Street Journal for May 1 this statement:

> Money market continues quiet. Tuesday's closing rate of 4½ per cent brought a flood of out-of-town money to swell the already large local surplus, so that the rate opened at 4¼.

Here is another editorial from the Wall Street Journal of May 1:

> Liberty loans rally on rumors that Federal reserve rediscount rate will be cut.
> When there was only a rumor in the money market that the Federal reserve bank intended to reduce its rediscount rate, Liberty loan bonds and other Government securities started to go up.
> Rumors in the street yesterday to the effect that the Federal reserve bank would reduce the rediscount rate influenced activity in United States Government bonds and after early slight recessions most issues rallied above Tuesday's closing level. News of the cut in the bank rate did not come until after the close of the bond market so that the full effect of that constructive action was not reflected in yesterday's prices. Most of the surplus funds of banks and insurance has been placed lately in United States Government bonds and high-grade railroad issues. From now on, high-yielding bonds of the second grade should do better.

So we find that when it was only rumored that the Federal reserve rediscount rate would go down, bonds, and particularly Government issues, started to rise.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator if, conversely, at the time of the deflation in 1920, when the rediscount rates were raised, the prices of Government bonds were not depressed?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BROOKHART. And people who had bought those bonds for war purposes were forced to sell them at below par?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. We know by bitter experience that that is true.

Mr. BROOKHART. Perhaps it might be reasoned from that that one of the big objects of deflation as talked at that secret meeting of May 18, 1920, was to depress the bonds and buy them in at the lower rates.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not see how any sane man can doubt that.

Mr. President, I have here an editorial from the Wall Street Journal of May 2, the day after the Federal Reserve Bank of New York lowered its rediscount rate, and I find this in large headlines:

> United States 4½'s at record high. Reduction in Federal reserve rediscount rate and the decline of call loans to 3½ per cent stimulates Government issues.

I want to call attention to the fact that the day after the Federal Reserve Bank of New York lowered its rediscount rate from 4½ per cent to 4 per cent, call money dropped to 3½, and has never gone above that to this day. As a matter of fact, this morning's Wall Street Journal said that the money market last night closed at 3 per cent.

Here is what the Wall Street Journal said editorially as the effect of the reduction of the Federal reserve bank rediscount rate upon the money market:

Responding to the cut in the New York Federal Reserve Bank rediscount rate from 4½ to 4 per cent and continued easy-call loans, which receded to 3½ per cent in the afternoon, the bond market developed activity yesterday with attention centered chiefly on United States Government and other high-grade investment bonds. United States Treasury 4½'s established a record price of 102, and all the Liberty loan issues reached the highest prices for the year.

On May 2 there appeared in the North American of Philadelphia a communication from their correspondent in New York, which appears on page 23, in which he said:

Although bankers generally agree that the lowering of the local Federal reserve rate will result in easier money, its only effect to-day was in the call money market, which opened at 4½ per cent, and then dropped successively to 4, 3½, and 3½. * * *

* * * * * * *

Sharp rallies in Liberty bonds, which mounted in unusually active trading to the highest levels of the year, to-day measured the bond market's response to the reduction in the New York Federal Reserve Bank's rediscount rate. For the first time this year all active issues sold at par or higher, while the Treasury certificates reached a new price of 102, the highest ever recorded.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is a Federal reserve bank also at Philadelphia. Does the Senator know the difference between the rediscount rate of the New York bank and of the bank at Philadelphia?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will say to the Senator that up until May 1, when the New York Federal Reserve Bank lowered its rediscount rate to 4 per cent, the Federal reserve bank rediscount rates were uniform in all banks throughout the United States. Whether the Philadelphia bank has followed the action taken by the New York bank I do not know. I am quite sure it had not been done up to yesterday. But it is expected that it may be done. Whether they will do it or not we can not tell.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have not heard all of the Senator's speech; but has the contention been made that the rediscount rate at the regional or reserve banks has not affected the flow of money or the rates that were exacted in the member banks, and in the ordinary commercial and national banks?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will say to the Senator that I made the charge on the floor of the Senate last winter that it affected borrowings of all kinds.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter written to the American Bankers' Association Journal on March 17, and published in the April issue, made the statement that the Federal reserve discount rates reflected a condition in the money market and the interest rate in America instead of being the cause of those high rates. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. SMITH. I was just wondering if, under an amendment offered on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and adopted by the Senate, which was known as an amendment to provide a progressive and graduated rate when the borrowings of the bank had reached a certain base line and above it, they were to be foreclosed by the progressive and graduated rates that were incorporated in the Federal reserve act.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH. I have a statement from officials of the Federal reserve bank that under the operation of that amendment in some places the discount charges were 16 per cent, and in one case in Alabama 87½ per cent was charged, not because the security was not ample or perhaps was not safe, but simply because they wished to reduce operations and to bring about deflation, which they did amply succeed in doing.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will say to the Senator that I think he is absolutely correct. It may seem presumptuous to take up the time of the Senate this afternoon with a discussion of a question so rudimentary as that, but because of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury has not recognized the power of the Federal reserve bank through the control of the rediscount rate to control the interest rates, the high rates of interest being charged all over the country, and because of the fact that the Senate and the people of America are asked to accept him as their official infallible adviser on questions of public finance, I am taking up the time of the Senate this afternoon to show what has actually taken place in the money market since the Federal Reserve Bank of New York reduced its rediscount rate on the 1st of May.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Am I to understand the Senator to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has stated that the Federal reserve system did not fix the rate of interest but, rather, followed the commercial rate? I was under the impression that one of the chief objects and purposes of the Congress in the establishment of the Federal reserve system was that it might act as a regulator, so to speak, of the interest charges made in ordinary commercial transactions, just as the Bank of England has always been supposed to regulate the interest charge prevailing in the Kingdom of Great Britain. It is news to me and rather a startling statement to come from the Secretary of the Treasury that the Federal reserve system is not performing that function at all but simply following in the wake of commercial enterprises and commercial investments in commercial enterprises.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will say to the Senator that before he came into the Chamber I quoted the Secretary's point of view on that question contained in a letter to the American Bankers' Association Journal and published in their issue for April. For the benefit of the Senator and other Senators who were not in the Chamber when I quoted the Secretary previously, and because I do not want to misstate what he said, I will read the direct quotation again.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would like very much to hear it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. He said:

Much of the criticism of the Treasury and the Federal reserve banks clearly betrays a lack of understanding of the fundamental economic principles which determine interest rates. The impression seems to prevail that conditions in the money market are due entirely to the rates paid on Government securities and to the discount rates of Federal reserve banks, and that these rates can be fixed arbitrarily at a higher or lower level, thus determining market conditions at will. On the contrary, both the rates paid on Government securities and the discount rates of Federal reserve banks reflect conditions in the money market rather than cause them. Fundamentally, interest rates are determined by the demand for and supply of capital. The comparatively high money rates which continue to prevail are the result of economic conditions which exist throughout the world.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator understand that to mean that the Federal reserve banks can not in any way affect the rate of interest charged in the country, either to reduce that rate or to pursue a policy which would necessarily force down the rate?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think the language is very plain when he says that those rates reflect conditions in the money market rather than cause them.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. It was the purpose or one of the purposes in creating the Federal reserve system to control just such situations as he talks about, but those who are now in control are saying that conditions in the money market fix the rediscount rates and not the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is what the Secretary said. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the Federal Reserve Board issued a report dated February 15, in which they took the opposite point of view, and because the Senator was not in the Chamber when I read it I will read it again.

The experience of Federal reserve banks, notwithstanding that the brief period of their active operations on a considerable scale has been one of disturbed economic and financial conditions, has demonstrated that there is a sufficiently close connection between changes in Federal reserve bank rates and changes in rates charged their customers by member banks on a sufficiently large volume of customers' borrowings to make the Federal reserve rates an important and at times leading influence in the money markets. In that sense the Federal reserve rate may be said to be effective.

Mr. SIMMONS. I never supposed the Federal reserve banks could absolutely fix the rate of interest in the United States, but I did suppose the Federal reserve banks might exercise a largely determining influence in the fixing of the rates of interest throughout the country. I thought that was the purpose of the inauguration of the system. When the deflation policy was first inaugurated it was very well understood at that time that the Federal Reserve Board, in fixing the rate at that time, was fixing it for the purpose not only of influencing but to a very large extent controlling the rates of interest throughout the country.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Secretary seems to claim that the ample supply of capital—and by that he means the supply of money deposited in the banks, savings accounts, and elsewhere—has an influence in the matter of fixing the rediscount rates. In a statement issued by the Federal Reserve Board on April 30, 1924, it appears that in the various Federal reserve districts the savings deposited in the Federal reserve districts amounted on April 1, 1924, to $7,307,062,000, as against $6,740,410,000 on April 1, 1923. It appears also that the time deposits in all the national banks exceeded $6,000,000,000. So we have savings deposits of over $7,000,000,000 and time deposits of over $6,000,000,000 in the banks. There would seem to be a supply of capital.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have here an editorial from the Wall Street Journal of May 8, in which it is said:

> Business has not receded nearly so far as some opinions indicate. Loans are still in demand, and liquidation of old business is hardly sufficient to keep down total loans outstanding. Total loans of reporting member banks in leading cities stood at $12,062,136,000 on April 16. They were at $12,066,813,000 on January 2, which was the high point since deflation in 1921.

This report is only from about one-third of the money markets of the United States, showing that there is a tremendous demand for capital, that capital is not unemployed, that there is plenty of capital in the country, and that there are more bank borrowings now than there have been since 1921.

Of course during the deflation period of 1920 the Federal reserve banks annihilated the credit which they had created during several years prior to the time when they put in that period of deflation by restricting the circulating medium of the country and thereby breaking the prices of agricultural products, causing the Liberty loan bonds to come out from the people who had bought them at par, and compelling them to sell at 80 and 85. It is very significant that they did not come back until after the revenue act of 1921 was passed putting them on the tax-exempt list when held by corporations.

It was not only the Liberty loan bonds that were shaken out of the hands and pockets of the American people during that period of deflation. The American people during that period were, by this power of the control of the money and credit and discount of interest rates, deflated out of many billions of dollars. The Secretary of Agriculture has said that the American farmer alone was deflated or dispossessed at $18,000,000,000 in property. I had never claimed that he had been deflated out of more than $12,000,000,000, but the Secretary of Agriculture claimed he was dispossessed of $18,000,000,000. The Manufacturers' Journal, of Baltimore, makes the statement that the American farmer was dispossessed of $32,000,000,000 of property. That is a very conservative journal and therefore very respectable, so I hope the Senate will take under consideration the statement which I have just quoted.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is it not true that this control of interest rate also has an effect upon prices?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. From the editorials which I have read from financial journals that I have been quoting this afternoon it is evident that immediately upon the drop in the rediscount rate by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York on May 1 the market prices of all kinds of securities were affected and Government issues that the Secretary of the Treasury sold March 15, 1924, to yield 4 per cent, are now sold on the open market to yield about 3.59.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is it not then true that the greatest economic power in our country, and therefore the greatest in the world, is located in the administration of the Federal reserve system?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, certainly. It controls all industries.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does it not behoove the Congress to find out and know more about how that institution is controlled?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think Congress should. Here I have an editorial from the Wall Street Journal of May 14, wherein the editor said:

> Commercial paper always shows a tendency to rule at one-half of 1 per cent above the reserve bank rediscount, and when shaded below this figure hardly represents the market. In any event, the rediscount rate practically "pegs" the rate at 4½ per cent as minimum.

Here we have the editor of the Wall Street Journal admitting that the Federal reserve bank rediscount rate "pegs" the money market at 4½ per cent on the open market.

The Wall Street Journal for May 16, speaking editorially, states:

> Money market, while quiet, is remarkably steady at the new level recognized by the reduction in the New York Federal Reserve Bank rediscount rate on May 1. Call money rate has not moved from 3½ per cent since the close of the market on that day. It is as if pegged. Time money is extremely dull and readily available at 4 per cent for most dates.

In my address of February 1, I quoted from Wall Street Journal of January 25, 1924, the following:

> Federal reserve rediscount rate serves as a peg, insuring paper from going lower.

In Wall Street Journal of April 26, 1924, the following statement appears:

> Bankers do not look for any further softness in commercial paper while the Federal bank rediscount rate holds at 4½ per cent.

I quote further from the same issue of the Wall Street Journal, May 16, 1924:

> Country banks show no inclination to loan their funds at anywhere near the present market. They are finding more profitable use for their money nearer home or turning to such short-term securities as Treasury certificates and notes, bankers' acceptances and commercial paper. In any event, brokers' borrowings are so light that no considerable amount of interior money could be absorbed even though it were offered.

So we find that as a result of the lowering of the rediscount rate of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York money is beginning to flow back into the country to finance the business of the interior of the country.

I have here the editorial page of the Literary Digest for May 17; that is to-day. I send it to the desk and ask that the two paragraphs marked in ink be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> For a year past the bank rate has been 4½ per cent for all the Federal reserve districts. Now that New York has lowered it to 4 per cent, other eastern reserve banks are expected to follow suit; and, of course, interest rates on loans and deposits will be correspondingly cut down.

> For money has of late been cheap in New York, call money being quoted at 4½ per cent at the end of April. We are reminded in the New York Times that 4 per cent is the lowest rate that the reserve banks have fixed at any time since the system was established in 1914.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like to remind the Senator from Minnesota of a fact that I ascertained in reference to the cooperative banking system of England. In the panic of 1908 over there the Bank of England was forced for a while to raise its discount rate, as I remember, from 3½ to 7 per cent. At the same time the cooperative system, which was then a very large system, was able to go through, and did go through, that period with an interest rate of 3½ per cent, without change or modification. Is not that an indication that the cooperative idea of banking is sounder and safer and better in every way than is the competitive idea which we in this country follow?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think the Senator from Iowa is correct; but I maintain that a comparison between the banking system of England and the banking system of the United States is not a fair comparison, because the Bank of England is controlled by the merchants who borrow the money and who are interested in a lower rate of interest on money with which to finance their business, while the banking system of the United States is in control of the bankers, who are interested in a high rate of interest.

Mr. BROOKHART. But the cooperative banking system of England is controlled by the cooperative merchants, and it is fair to compare the two systems in England. I do not mean to compare the English system with that of the United States, but to compare the two systems in the same country.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, yes.

Mr. BROOKHART. On that basis I think the comparison is fair.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. A cooperative system of banking in the United States, if it were of such a character that it could control the volume of loans, I am confident would cut the interest rates on commercial borrowings.

Mr. BROOKHART. As well as on agricultural loans.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Absolutely. English commerce pays a much smaller rate of interest than does American commerce. The British Government sells its short-term treasury bills for 3 per cent and less, and sells them at competitive bidding to the highest bidder. The United States gives the power to fix the interest rate on Government securities to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if the Bank of England has not recently reduced its interest rate?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That I can not tell the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. It has.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I have, however, heard rumors to the effect that it was going to raise its discount rate in the near future.

Mr. HEFLIN. I noticed some time ago—I think a month or more ago—that the Bank of England had reduced its discount or interest rate, and my recollection is that it was about half of what the discount rate is in the United States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As to that, I can not inform the Senator. I know that the Bank of England operates in a different manner than does the Federal reserve banking system of the United States. The Federal reserve banks of the United States were copied after the German Reichsbank system, which was controlled by the bankers of Germany. The Bank of England is not controlled by the bankers of England, but is controlled by the merchants and they use the bank for the purpose of keeping the interest rate, so far as commerce is concerned, as low as possible because they are interested in having a low rate of interest.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Federal reserve system was intended to be controlled by a board appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate that had no connection whatever with any bank in the country. I agree with the Senator that now the influence of the bankers of the country seems to be controlling the board.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not know what the intention was, but I do know what we were told was the intention when that system was established by law. We were told it was to be a money system that would give us an elastic currency that would expand and contract with the natural flow of commerce, and that it would always furnish plenty of money to business and commerce, so that there should never be a panic due to a scarcity of money and there should never be hard times due to a scarcity of money, because the Federal reserve banks could issue money based upon credit, and so long as anyone who was entitled to credit wanted to use that credit he could have it and the Federal reserve banks would see that that credit was extended to him.

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely; and President Wilson referred to the Federal reserve law as having established a democracy of credit so that any man who had a going business and who needed money could get money whenever he needed it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. He found out in the fall of 1920 that he could not get it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely; and that is when Wall Street got control of the board.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me ask was not the trouble that they loaned out too much money for two or three years during the time of inflation? That was the main trouble. Anybody could get money with which to speculate, but he had to stop sooner or later.

Mr. HEFLIN. I agree with the Senator that they let them have too much with which to speculate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. And the Federal reserve banks are to blame for it.

Mr. HEFLIN. But if they had stood with the West and with the South on their loans and had not forced them to sell their products, I do not think we would have had a panic.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is it not true that the powers granted and the system of administration adopted enabled those in control of the Federal reserve banks to produce a panic in agriculture? For four years they have been able to sustain every other line of business and prevent it from suffering a panic, while the panic in agriculture continues to be quite as serious as it was in the beginning.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I wish to digress from the main tenor of my remarks to answer the statement which has been made that the panic was caused because there was too much money loaned. I admit that there was too much credit extended, for instance, for speculative purposes. Credit should never be extended for speculation. That is a matter of good judgment in banking; but I maintain that in 1920 credit was not denied to the speculator but it was denied to the productive industries of the country. The farmer, who was entitled to credit and who had plenty of property with which to back up his loans with security, could not get any credit; the man who was engaged in legitimate business and had plenty of property could not use his credit in the fall of 1920 and the winter of 1921.

I do not wish to take up unnecessarily the time of the Senate to go into the history of that period, but I know of a case at Lehighton, Pa., for instance, which I think is quite typical. A man in Lehighton, Pa., had a small steel plant. He had assets of about $700,000; he had $200,000 cash in the bank; he had orders amounting to $1,500,000, upon which he expected to make a profit of $400,000; but in order to pay his labor and in order to discount his bills he had to make use of his credit. If there was anyone who was entitled to credit it should be an individual with a business in that condition. He went to his bank in the local town and with them made arrangements that they should secure for him a credit of $200,000 at the Girard National Bank in Philadelphia. He did not need that money at once, but he made arrangements so that when he did need it, it would be available. However, when the time came when he needed that credit for the purpose of finishing his contracts and keep his plant going, his banker came with a letter from the bank in Philadelphia which had agreed to extend the credit and said, "We know that we promised to take care of that manufacturer, but conditions have now changed and we are unable to do so." What was the result? That man was forced into receivership. As I have said, when he made the arrangements for the credit he had assets of $700,000 and $200,000 cash in bank and he had running liabilities of $180,000. He tells me he was sold out last winter by the receivers for $47,000. According to Dun and Bradstreet 50,000 concerns have been forced into bankruptcy since the fall of 1920.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I have listened with a great deal of interest to this discussion, and I think the able Senator is on the right track.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I hope so.

Mr. NORBECK. Deflation was carried to the point where it did unnecessary injury. It is easy now to say to the farmers and the business men, "You should not have gone so far"; but the fact is that the bankers, even the Federal reserve bankers, encouraged the extension of credit and almost begged people to take money; in other words, asked them to get out on a limb and then sawed them off afterwards.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. NORBECK. I think one of the heaviest drains upon productive industry is the high interest rate. I remember very clearly when Secretary Wallace advocated the intermediate credit system the chief argument in support of it at that time was that it would reduce interest rates one-half of 1 per cent, and that if that were done it would be equal to a 20 per cent reduction in freight rates on agricultural products.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think the Secretary is right.

Mr. NORBECK. If that is the case, the question of interest rates is a very far-reaching one.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think the Senator from South Dakota is absolutely correct. High interest rates, which are multiplied, according to established and recognized laws of economics, five times by the time the product reaches the ultimate consumer, place a tremendous and unnecessary burden upon the American people amounting to at least five billions of dollars a year.

Mr. NORBECK. But we could not get the reduction in freight rates, we were told; and we did not get the one-half of 1 per cent reduction in interest rates which would have been its equivalent, so that the problem is still before us to be dealt with.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Oh, yes.

Mr. President, I have here an editorial from the Wall Street Journal for May 17, 1924. I will read the headline and one paragraph. It is headed:

Money market breaks again.

The money market broke yesterday.

Call money renewed for over the week end at 3½ per cent and after an hour dropped to 3 per cent. This renewal rate spoiled the flat picture of 3½ per cent, which, as stated, ruled uninterruptedly since May 1, so that the average renewal rate for the week works out 3.45 per cent, compared with 3½ per cent the week before.

In his letter to Chairman GREEN, dated November 10, 1923, Secretary Mellon states:

These taxpayers are withdrawing their capital from productive business and investing it instead in tax-exempt securities and adopting other lawful methods of avoiding the realization of taxable income.

Secretary Mellon made this statement in connection with his plea for reduction of surtaxes. He did not state what productive business was lacking capital, except he stated that taxpayers subject to the higher taxes can not afford to invest in American railroads or industries or embark upon new enterprises. He certainly did not advocate that more people should engage in the production of agricultural products, for the reason that when farmers ask for relief from the present deplorable condition they are met with the charge that their difficulties are due to overproduction. I have been unable to find any line of business in which production is not sufficient to meet the demands of the people. I have read financial journals very carefully since last December and have often found headlines to the effect that money was plentiful; that there was a "plethora of money"; that railroad bonds and other industrial bonds have found a ready market; and by examining the reports of large business enterprises I find that they have a large amount of cash and investments in securities. Secretary Mellon states in his letter:

There are comparatively few successful offerings of securities of any kind which are not oversubscribed.

It may be asked, "How about the small concerns?" There are very few small concerns left. They were forced out of business during the deflation of a few years ago, when over 50,000 business concerns were forced to the wall by the deflation policy of the Federal reserve banks.

[At this point Mr. SHIPSTEAD yielded that a time might be fixed for voting on the President's veto message.]

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I shall refuse to yield any further. I shall finish as hurriedly as I can, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate not to be interrupted.

We are constantly met with the threat that unless we reduce the surtaxes capital will be kept out of production in business. I will read from the Good Book, Luke xvi, 19:

There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day.

And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores.

And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber? We are anxious to hear the quotation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will say to the Senator from New York that the quotation was from Luke xvi, 19, and reads as follows:

There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day.

And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores.

And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table.

I will read no further. The words quoted describe an economic condition. Did you ever stop to think of what would have happened to Lazarus if the rich man had voluntarily desisted from letting any crumbs fall from his table? But that is exactly what we are threatened with now. I have received a letter in which the writer purports to set forth a copy of a telegram he sent to Representative JOHN N. GARNER, from which I quote the following:

In continuing the high surtax you and your colleagues are striking a very hard blow at all higher educational institutions of America, which are entirely supported by voluntary contributions from the income of patriotic citizens.

This looks to me as a threat that if we do not cut the surtax rates there will be no crumbs for our higher educational institutions. And it has occurred to me, if these institutions are supported by "crumbs," have these institutions not also the threat hanging over them that if they teach anything, no matter how true it may be, that will in any way interfere with the business of these donors there will be no more crumbs falling? Are we not simply fed on "crumbs" of truth from some of these large institutions?

But my attention has also been called to another important document that has been issued by the Treasury Department during the last month. I refer to an article in Public Affairs for May, 1924, signed by "Garrard B. Winston, Undersecretary of the Treasury":

[From Public Affairs, May, 1924]

SPEAKING OUT IN MEETING

To the Editor of Public Affairs:

I note that you have given publicity, in the April issue of Public Affairs, to the speech of Senator SHIPSTEAD with reference to interest rates on the public debt. In making his comparisons the Senator has wholly ignored the differences in the nature of issues, maturity dates, changes in market conditions, size of issues, and other fundamental factors involved in determining the rates on securities sold to the public. He devotes much space, for example, to the difference in rates on pre-war securities and those which are being floated at the present time, apparently oblivious of the fact that billions of dollars' worth of the world's capital was destroyed in the Great War, thereby increasing the price of capital universally. Much labored effort was made to show that the circulation privilege was not an important factor in determining the rates on pre-war bonds and the proof seems to be that there are about $42,000,000 out of about $800,000,000 of such securities which are not deposited with the Treasury as security for national-bank circulation. In other words, about 95 per cent of the bonds available to secure circulation are deposited with the Treasury for that purpose, but this is not sufficient in the Senator's mind to show that the privilege enhanced the value of those securities. Moreover, no mention was made of the fact that pre-war bonds are wholly tax exempt.

The best index of what the market will take is, of course, current daily quotations, and instead of referring to the rates on pre-war wholly tax-exempt securities bearing the circulation privilege, would it not be better to apply as a test to determine rates on an offering quotations on similar securities outstanding? As you doubtless know, most of the Government 4¼ per cent bonds have been selling below par ever since they were issued, and you will recall the violent criticisms which were directed against the Treasury after the war on the ground that the rates on these loans were too low. Particular reference was made in the Senator's address to the Treasury notes of January 15, 1923, bearing 4½ per cent interest and the notes of May 15, 1923, bearing 4¼ per cent interest. Daily quotations show that soon after the issue of the 4½ per cent notes in January they dropped below par, and by May, when the next issue was due, were selling at a yield of over 4.60. The May issue was an unusually large one, amounting to nearly $700,000,000, and I do not believe anyone familiar with the market would contend that the issue would have been successful at a lower rate. In emphasizing the rates paid during 1923 no reference was made to the fact that the Treasury was able to sell four issues during 1922 at less than 4 per cent, clearly indicating changing market conditions in 1923 which the Treasury had to meet.

You may be interested in a concrete example of how the rates on securities are determined. The March 15, 1924, certificates were offered Monday morning, March 10, and the previous Saturday the price of Government short-term obligations indicated the following returns on the maturity dates:

June 15, 1924	$3.60
September 15, 1924	3.83
December 15, 1924	3.85
March 15, 1925	4.00
June 15, 1925	4.13
December 15, 1925	4.14

Faced with this market situation, a 3¾ per cent rate was too low for a nine-months certificate. To have made this 3¾ would have been to adopt an inconvenient rate. It was determined, therefore, to issue 12-months certificates on a 4 per cent basis, which exactly hit the market.

It may be noted in this connection that the Treasury has succeeded in borrowing on its certificates of indebtedness at a lower rate than even States and cities have been able to borrow on their fully tax-exempt short-term bills, though in substance the Treasury certificates are exempt only from the normal income tax. During the whole of February, for example, the city of New York paid 4½ and 4¾ per cent on its short-term bills, while the Treasury is now offering one-year certificates at 4 per cent. Moreover, the Treasury's long-term bonds not wholly tax exempt do not bear higher rates than the average on municipal bonds issued during and since the war which are wholly tax exempt. The Treasury's wholly tax-exempt securities bear a rate nearly 1 per cent lower than municipal tax-exempt securities.

Reference was also made to the Treasury savings certificates yielding 4¼ per cent. It should be noted that they yield 4¼ per cent only if held to maturity, but if redeemed before maturity the yield is only 3½ per cent. The interest, moreover, is not collectible every six months as on bank deposits or other forms of investment, but accumulates and is payable only at maturity or whenever redeemed, and if redeemed before maturity the rate will be only 3½ per cent as noted. I am sending you as of possible interest in this connection a Treasury press release on United States Treasury savings certificates.

While these subjects are not simple enough to be easily grasped by the general public, the facts are all available to those who are interested in getting at the truth of the matter, and I think you will agree with me that no public service is rendered by a dissemination of half truths and false impressions.

GARRARD B. WINSTON,
Undersecretary of the Treasury.

The closing words of the article are:

I think you will agree with me that no public service is rendered by a dissemination of half truths and false impressions.

I thoroughly agree with this statement, and I greatly deplore the fact that the article written by this high official of the Treasury Department contains so many half truths, and some statements that do not come within 99 per cent of being true.

This article was also written in reply to my address of February 1, and as certain portions of this article in Public Affairs, and the article referred to in the American Bankers' Association Journal are identical, I will discuss both articles at the same time.

Both articles claim that municipal bonds are wholly tax exempt. This is not true, and I called attention to this fact in my former address, namely, that if a citizen of one State holds municipal bonds of another State these bonds are subject to the tax laws of the State where he resides. I am greatly indebted to the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] for the following telegram:

ALBANY, N. Y., April 14.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Washington, D. C.

Income derived from Minnesota State bonds taxable in New York.

JOHN F. GILCHRIST,
President State Tax Commission.

This shows that the State of New York, which is the greatest market in the United States for the purchase of all State and municipal bonds from all over the United States, taxes its citizens upon the income of bonds of other States and municipalities outside of the State of New York, owned by citizens of New York. This ought to be common knowledge to the high officials of the Treasury Department, but still they insist on calling State and municipal bonds wholly and fully tax exempt.

In discussing the Treasury savings certificates that are being sold, the Undersecretary forgets to state that the interest—a little better than 4½ per cent—is compounded semiannually. One would get the impression from his article that these certificates draw only 4½ per cent simple interest if held for five years.

In both articles it is stated that the Treasury is now offering 12-months certificates at 4 per cent. If the Treasury is now selling 12-months certificates drawing 4 per cent interest at par, an investor could make a nice sum of money by investing a few millions, as, according to the Wall Street Journal of May 16, 1924, United States securities due March 15, 1925, were selling above par and would yield the purchaser only 3.59 per cent.

It is very interesting to note how Secretary Mellon and the Undersecretary of the Treasury explain the method by which the Treasury Department determines the rate of United States securities ranging in issues from two hundred millions to seven hundred millions. Both claim that the best way to determine this is to base it upon the current rate of similar issues outstanding, and they justify the rate paid on these large issues upon the rate at which comparatively small amounts of such securities are sold on the stock market from day to day. These sales seem to run at a million or two a day, which is a very small amount when we consider that there are about twenty-two billions of Government securities outstanding, and is a small amount of sales upon which to base the rate on an issue of from two hundred to seven hundred millions. The Treasury does not offer these bonds at competitive bidding; all that is done, as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1923, pages 51 to 56, is to send a circular to the Federal reserve banks asking for subscriptions to the intended issue at par, and these letters are sent out only a few days—from four to eight days—before the date of issue. No competitive bids are asked for. Rates are already fixed by the department. To use a crude illustration: The Government wants to buy a lot of money and to pay for the same in Government securities, and the rate of interest paid represents the price. When the Government wants to buy from $200,000,000 to $700,000,000 at one time, it is buying in wholesale lots; the small amounts of securities changing hands in the open market are simply retail sales. Now the Government, under the administration of Secretary Mellon, buys money in wholesale quantities, but is paying retail prices and sometimes a higher price therefor. What I claim is this—that when the Government or any State or municipality offers a large issue of securities at one time, this is more attractive to investors than a small issue, and the money can be secured at lower rates. The practice is generally followed by States and municipalities to advertise their bonds or securities and sell them to competitive bidders.

I will say that the British treasury issues three-month treasury bills and the rate of interest is determined by bids. Last summer they sold their short-time treasury bills to yield 3.16 and as low as 2.78, while the United States Treasury paid from 4 to 4⅛ per cent.

Both articles referred to claim that the Treasury has succeeded in borrowing on its certificates of indebtedness at a lower rate than even States and cities have been able to borrow on their what the Treasury officials call "fully tax-exempt short term bills." Let us examine into this matter. If you examine the different issues of Treasury securities issued during the last year and a half you will find that the longer the time, the larger the rate of interest. For example, in the issue of December, 1922, the rate of certificates and notes issued by the Treasury was a follows:

	Per cent
Three months	3½
One year	4
Two and one-half years	4½

As I have stated before, both the Secretary and Undersecretary of the Treasury claim that the Treasury is now selling certificates due in 12 months at 4 per cent, and according to their previous practice if they sold long-term securities the rate would be a great deal higher.

Now let us see what States and municipalities are paying. Commerce and Finance for April 16, 1924, states:

On February 20 last, Massachusetts sold $1,096,000 on a 3.90 per cent basis.

In the same issue of Commerce and Finance we find an account of the sale by New York State of $45,000,000 of State soldiers' bonus bonds. These were sold to bankers at a premium, which would make the interest cost to the State 4.09 per cent annually. The banks in turn sold these bonds to investors to yield 4 per cent. These bonds mature from 1925 to 1949. Bonds were all taken by investors in two days.

Wall Street Journal of February 12, reports a sale of $200,000 Brookline, Mass., bonds due November 6, at 3.89 per cent discount.

Wall Street Journal of April 28 reports sale of city of Boston $2,000,000 notes to Colonial Trust Co. at par, plus $24.75 premium, notes to bear interest at 3.85 per cent on interest-to-follow basis. Due November 1.

Wall Street Journal of April 28 reports a sale of city of Pittsburgh $990,000 30-year bonds at 4¼ per cent to the Mellon National Bank at a premium of $2,128. National City Bank of New York bid $990,728.

And still the Secretary of the Treasury says that the Treasury has been able to borrow at a lower rate than States and cities.

The Secretary of the Treasury and the Undersecretary claim that the rates of interest paid on Government securities is based upon the market situation; that is, upon the prices at which Government securities of same maturities already issued are sold in the open market. They cite some market quotations to substantiate this statement.

I will cite a few quotations that I have taken from the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, and from New York Commercial, which ought to be reliable sources of information.

On the issue of tax certificates, six months, of March 15, 1924, the Government paid 4¼ per cent interest, while the market quotations on Government securities due in six months was 4.05 on March 8, the date of the offering.

Issue of May 15, 1923, the Government paid 4¼ per cent interest on Treasury notes due March 15, 1927, while the market quotations for Government securities due September, 1926, was 4.63, and due December, 1927, 4.59.

On the issue of June 11, 1923, six months, the Government paid 4 per cent, while the market quotations for that day on securities of the Government due in six months was 3.93.

On the issue of September 15, 1923, for six months, the Government paid 4¼ per cent interest, while the market quotations on September 10, 1923, the day they were ordered issued, on securities due March, 1924, was 4.01.

From the foregoing it will appear that on these wholesale issues the Government paid a higher rate than was paid on the retail issues sold in the open market, and in one instance twenty-four one-hundredths of 1 per cent higher.

I will cite a couple of reasons why these Treasury certificates and notes are an attractive investment to banks.

In the American Bankers' Association Journal for April, 1924, I find the following (p. 619):

Senator SHIPSTEAD did not touch upon one phase of the flotation of Federal issues that has made them an attractive investment for banks.

The United States, like other great corporations, must have on hand a considerable working balance. Its financial operations are conducted so that it can meet its maturing obligations and have enough capital to tide over the next quarter. Under the present system of selling Federal securities it permits the bank to retain as a Government deposit the amount of its subscription for the certificates and notes. The bank is required to pay 2 per cent interest on the daily balance, but receives interest on the money it has invested at the rate the issue bears. As the Government requires funds the bank is directed to deposit with the nearest Federal reserve bank.

The Government receives interest on its balance, but the bank, while paying out 2 per cent, gains a 4 per cent return on its capital.

All the banks have to do is to subscribe for certificates or notes, keep the money by paying 2 per cent on daily balances, but receive 4 per cent or whatever rate the securities subscribed for bears. This is certainly a very attractive feature.

But there is another very attractive feature for large banks and corporations in connection with these Government securities. The income therefrom is wholly tax exempt when held by corporations, but these certificates and notes are acceptable in payment of income taxes at maturity dates, and these certificates and notes mature on a quarterly tax-paying date, and certain Treasury notes may, under decision of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, be accepted in payment of income tax at or within six months of their maturity. It appears to be the practice of large corporations to set aside at the close of a fiscal year a reserve fund for the payment of taxes during the following fiscal year. As the United States income taxes are payable quarterly, large corporations find it very profitable in investing this reserve in Treasury certificates and notes. This reserve for taxes will then give them an income, wholly tax exempt, of 4 per cent or better, and when the quarterly tax-paying date comes just turn in some of these certificates in payment of the tax and collect the interest that their tax reserve has earned.

Would it not be a much better plan, in selling these certificates, for the Treasury Department to advertise the sale thereof to competitive bidders? The issues may be too large to sell in one block, and it would not be advisable to offer them in one block as many of the purchasers who could take advantage of these special phases would no doubt make a much better bid than the regular market prices for a suitable block for their tax reserve, and banks would no doubt cut their profits between the rate on the bonds subscribed for and the interest they pay on the daily balances rather than take chances on losing out entirely on this snap arrangement.

Mr. President, I have taken the time of the Senate by going into this system of financing the Government, in order to show that the Secretary of the Treasury is not a safe adviser on the question of public finances. There has been an attempt to create the impression that his advice on the question of public finance and taxes is infallible. It is generally conceded that he is the President's main adviser on the question of taxation and public finance. I believe the President is ill advised. In arriving at this conclusion, I will say that the wish has not been the father of the thought. The question of public finance and taxation concerns the public welfare, and the discussion of this question should not be tainted with partisanship, and so I have based my argument on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, the report of the Federal Reserve Board, of which he is chairman, his own letter to the American Bankers' Association Journal, the editors of the Wall Street Journal, the editors of the Journal of Commerce and Finance, and other financial writers, who apparently unanimously uphold my contention that the high interest rates are caused by the high rates of discount by the Federal reserve banks and the high rate of interest paid on Government securities by the Secretary of the Treasury; this high interest rate resulting in an unnecessary burden on the backs of the American people, amounting to $5,000,000,000 a year.

Out of this unnecessary burden on the people in one year could be paid the bonus to the ex-service men and leave a surplus of two and a half billion dollars, without costing the American taxpayer one extra cent. So if it is true, as we are led to believe, that the President relies for his economic and financial advice upon the Secretary of the Treasury, he is ill advised. I find myself in perfect agreement, however, with at least two statements made by the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter to the American Bankers' Association Journal. He says, for instance, that in his opinion "the farmer's greatest enemies to-day are those who pose as his champions, who lead him into the belief that his ills can be cured by political measures." I agree with the Secretary that the American farmer has been buncoed by those who pose as his friends. I am fully aware that in the last 20 years there have been men in public life posing as the friend of the farmer and have enacted legislation which they said would help the farmer, and this form of legislation has been used by the railroads, the Federal reserve banks, trusts, and monopolies to help the farmer, and they have helped him to such an extent that they have helped him out of almost everything that he ever had. The Secretary of the Treasury makes another statement with which I am in full accord. He says that what the farmer needs above all else at this time is sound, constructive statesmanship. I agree with the Secretary of the Treasury that the farmer at this time needs sound, constructive statesmanship, but I go further than the Secretary of the Treasury; I would go as far as to say that it is not only the farmer who needs sound, constructive statesmanship but the business man needs it, the taxpayer needs it, the whole country needs it, and above all else the President needs sound and constructive statesmanship in the Treasury of the United States.

I send to the desk a copy of Commerce and Finance for April 9, 1924, and ask that the paragraph marked in ink be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From Commerce and Finance, April 9, 1924]

It will be noticed that the Federal Reserve Board admits that "member bank customer rates have shown a tendency to move with changes in the Federal reserve bank rates," and that "the leadership of the Federal reserve banks when rates are advancing appears to be more promptly recognized than when rates are declining."

This admission that the control of the money market rests with the Federal reserve banks, and that it is easier to raise than to reduce the cost of credit to borrowers is coupled with the statement that "it seems clear that if business is undergoing a rapid expansion and is in danger of developing an unhealthy or speculative boom, it should not be assisted by too easy credit conditions," and it is added that "in such circumstances the creation of additional credit by rediscounting at Federal reserve banks should be discouraged by increasing the cost of that credit; that is, by raising the discount rate."

Here, again, we find set forth the doctrine that it is the right and duty of the Federal Reserve Board to determine whether the expansion of business is healthy or "unhealthy" and to assist or check it by raising or lowering the discount rate.

It remains to be seen whether the people of this country will be willing to intrust this tremendous power to any man or group of men, however well informed or intelligent they may be.

We can not find anything in the Federal reserve act that justifies the Federal Reserve Board in thus constituting itself a deus ex machina of American business, and it is greatly to be feared that it invites the destruction of the Federal reserve system in assuming that it is empowered to say whether conditions are healthy or "unhealthy" and vindicate its conclusions by raising or lowering the discount rate.

It did this in 1920–21 and awakened a storm of resentment that has not yet subsided. Another such experience and, valuable as it is, the Federal reserve system may be wiped out of existence.

On page 32 of the report that has called forth the foregoing we read:

> "No statistical mechanism alone, however carefully contrived, can furnish an adequate guide to credit administration. Credit is an intensely human institution, and as such reflects the moods and impulses of the community—its hopes, its fears, its expectations. The business and credit situation at any particular time is weighted and charged with these invisible factors. They are elusive and can not be fitted into any mechanical formula, but the fact that they are refractory to methods of the statistical laboratory makes them neither nonexistent nor nonimportant. They are factors which must always patiently and skillfully be evaluated as best they may and dealt with in any banking administration that is animated by a desire to secure to the community the results of an efficient credit system. In its ultimate analysis credit administration is not a matter of mechanical rules, but is and must be a matter of judgment, of judgment concerning each specific credit situation at the particular moment of time when it has arisen or is developing."

Here, again, we find the Federal Reserve Board trying to justify the substitution of its own judgment for the provisions of the Federal reserve act, which prescribe that when the reserve ratio falls below certain specified minima the discount rate shall be automatically advanced. This is the law. It may be defective, but if it is to be changed the change should be made by Congress rather than by a board whose function is purely administrative and does not include the right to fix prices through the control of the discount rate, which is, in the last analysis, exactly what the Federal Reserve Board attempts to justify itself in undertaking at its discretion.

SETTLEMENT OF INDEBTEDNESS OF HUNGARY

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8905) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Hungary to the United States. I will say to the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that if it lends to any discussion at all I shall withdraw my request.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With that understanding I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GOODING. What is the bill? Will the Senator kindly state again?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a bill to authorize settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Hungary to the United States. It is in the form that was submitted to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. It is the same form of settlement as that made with England and Finland.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator means the basis of the settlement agreed upon is the same as that which operated in the bill relating to Great Britain?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will simply say that the amount of the indebtedness is $1,685,835.61 and they are to pay up to date 5 per cent interest, just the same as England and Finland did, the interest being $233,164.39.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I understand, payments are to be distributed over about 60 years?

Mr. SMOOT. They are distributed over a period of 62 years.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. So far as I am concerned, we may take a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill. There being no objection, the Senate, as a Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Hungary to the United States of America, made by the World War Foreign Debt Commission and approved by the President upon the following terms, is hereby approved and authorized:

Principal amount of obligation to be funded, $1,685,835.61; interest accrued thereon to December 15, 1923, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, $253,917.43; total principal and interest accrued and unpaid as of December 15, 1923, $1,939,753.04; less payment in cash by Hungary on April 25, 1924, $753.04; total indebtedness to be funded into bonds, $1,939,000.

The principal of the bonds shall be paid in annual installments on the 15th day of December, up to and including December 15, 1985, on a fixed schedule, subject to the right of the Government of Hungary to make these payments in three-year periods; the amount of the first year's installment shall be $9,600, the installments to increase with due regularity until, in the sixty-second year, the amount of the installment shall be $75,000, the aggregate installments being equal to the total principal of the debt.

The Government of Hungary shall have the right to pay off additional amounts of the principal of the bonds on any interest date upon 90 days' notice.

Interest shall be payable upon the unpaid balances at the following rates, on December 15 and June 15 of each year:

At the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, from December 15, 1923, to December 15, 1933, and thereafter at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually until final payment.

The Government of Hungary shall have the right to pay up to one-half of any interest accruing between December 15, 1923, and December 15, 1928, on the $1,939,000 principal amount of the bonds first to be issued in bonds of Hungary dated as of the respective dates when the interest to be paid thereby becomes due, payable as to principal on the 15th day of December in each succeeding year, up to and including December 15, 1985, on a fixed schedule, in annual installments, increasing with due regularity in proportion to and in the manner provided for payments to be made on account of principal of the original issue of bonds, bearing the same rates of interest and being similar in other respects to such original issue of bonds.

Any payment of interest or of principal shall be made in United States gold coin of the present standard of value or at the option of the Government of Hungary, in any United States Government obligations issued after April 6, 1917, such obligations to be taken at par and accrued interest.

The payment of the principal and interest of the bonds shall be secured in the same manner and to the same extent as the obligation of Hungary which is to be funded: Provided, however, That all or any part of such security may be released by the Secretary of the Treasury on such terms and conditions as he may deem necessary or appropriate in order that the United States may cooperate in any program whereby Hungary may be able to finance its immediate needs by the flotation of a loan for reconstruction purposes, if and when substantially all other creditor nations holding obligations similar to that held by the United States which is to be funded, to wit, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Holland, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland, shall release to a similar extent the security enjoyed by such obligations.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to decide when this action has been substantially taken.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wish to say just a further word in relation to the amendment, chiefly for the purpose of dispelling the concern expressed by my esteemed friend from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and my friend from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] that the adoption of the amendment would set a bad precedent.

As has been pointed out, it would be impossible to incorporate legislation of this character on any pending bill except a majority of the Senate desired it to be done. So far as giving rise to discussion irrelevant to the matter under inquiry is concerned, if amendments of this character are entertained at all, everyone knows that discussion is not limited by any means to the subject which is under consideration by the Senate. Any Senator is at liberty to speak on a subject whether it forms the basis of an amendment or has any relation to the bill under consideration or not.

The Senator from West Virginia suggested that the advocates of the McNary-Haugen bill might take notice of this method of getting consideration for that measure. Well, Mr. President, as I have stated, it takes a majority of the Senate to put an amendment of this character or any character on any bill, and I suppose very likely whenever an amendment is proposed to a bill Senators will take into consideration the question as to whether or not the amendment has any bearing whatever upon the subject with which the bill deals, and the advisability of confining any measure to the particular subject is recognized by everyone for the purpose of avoiding what is known as logrolling legislation. Therefore, it is always a question which addresses itself to the individual Senator, first, as to whether he favors the amendment at all and, second, whether it bears any such relation to the subject of the bill in question as that it ought to form a part of it.

We have undertaken to make it perfectly clear that the measure referred to in the amendment has a most direct and intimate relation to the subject matter of the bill that is before the Senate at the present time, and particularly to that paragraph in the bill to which it is immediately directed. It may be that the McNary-Haugen bill does have some relation to the subject of the improvement of our rivers and harbors. It is intended to promote the export of agricultural products from this country to foreign countries, and, as pointed out by the Senator from Virginia, if the harbors are not kept free from débris and other accumulations, navigation would be interrupted and thus importation and exportation would be impeded; but the relation is rather remote in that case.

In the cases suggested by other Senators there would apparently be no relation whatever to the main subject, and that would be a good reason for not following the precedent established by this amendment, if it should become a precedent.

However, Mr. President, if an effort were made at any time to submit an amendment on a subject which was entirely irrelevant to the general subject of a pending bill, it would be sufficient to say that this case affords no precedent whatever, because in it a very direct connection and relation is set up. We are simply seeking by this amendment to prevent the further expenditure of public money for the purpose of bringing navigation to our interior rivers while a policy is pursued otherwise that effectually blocks that end, making the expenditure entirely useless.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Out of the $37,250,000 of appropriation I think about $25,000,000 are for harbors and $12,000,000 for rivers. That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Would the Senator give me his support if I should restrict the amendment to river improvements?

Mr. SWANSON. I would not; I think it would be bad policy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator would give me his support, I should be disposed to ask leave to perfect my amendment in that way.

Mr. SWANSON. No; I wish to show from the Senator's own contention that the portion of the appropriation which applies to harbors is not affected by either high or low rates. We are compelled to have harbors for ships in the foreign trade carrying imports and exports. So $25,000,000 of the appropriation does not need to await any adjustment of railway rates.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As I said to the Senator, if the appropriations were differentiated, and a certain amount were devoted to the improvement of harbors and a certain other amount devoted to the improvement of rivers, I should have directed the amendment only to that portion which was for the improvement of rivers. Unfortunately, however, for the Senator, and possibly for myself, the whole appropriation is embodied in one total item of $37,250,000.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator covers more territory than he had intended to cover.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is because of the manner in which the bill is drawn.

Mr. SWANSON. No; the Senator should confine his amendment to the appropriation for rivers.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I say I should be disposed to do so if I thought the Senator would aid me in getting the amendment through.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I have seldom listened to such a bald attempt to induce Senators to vote against appropriations for river improvements as that of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. He proposes to enter into a trade with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] upon the floor to secure votes for his measure, and then denounces logrolling. He does that without any consistency at all.

I voted against the rule that now ties the hands of the Senate, for I rather imagined that a situation would develop such as has now developed and that we would find ourselves unable to legislate. However, the Senate did not agree with me and others and adopted the rule in the Senate. A moment ago, in order that I might be helpful to those who sought lower freight rates, I voted to have the Senate overturn the ruling of the Chair, but I was not able to accomplish that object.

The amendment here, Mr. President, is not a good-faith amendment. It is an attempt by certain Senators who have always fought river improvements to defeat appropriations for that purpose. It is an effort to do by indirection what they have been unable to do directly; and it strikes me that it comes with poor grace from that section of the country that has enjoyed more governmental favors than all other portions of the country combined. Whenever an appropriation is proposed for something for the West no one ever heard the Senator from Nebraska or the Senator from Montana object to it. Their scruples against wasting public funds always stop this side of their own particular section of the country. If the appropriation is for a reclamation project or anything of that kind it is a wise expenditure of public money, although during the 11 years I have been in the House and in the Senate I do not think the reclamation projects have ever paid interest on the public funds invested in them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the Senator will search the RECORD in vain for any remarks from the Senator from Montana in opposition to any river and harbor improvement.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not have to search the RECORD. I heard the Senator just a moment ago trying to trade with the Senator from Virginia so that he might strike down all river improvements.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I referred to the statement made by the Senator that the advocacy of the amendment comes from persons who have always been opposed to river and harbor appropriations.

Mr. CARAWAY. The RECORD can stand as a whole; I have no disposition to correct it; I will let it stand for what it is worth. I do not need to go any further than the Senator's attempt right here on the floor to enter into a combination to strike down river improvements.

I have always been inclined to the opinion that there was more than one section of this country. I have not thought that any particular section was entitled to all the favors that the Government had to bestow or ought to carry all the burdens incident to government; and it strikes me that it comes with poor grace for the Senator from Montana and those who advocate his course to seek particularly to strike down that section of the country which is more or less dependent upon river improvements. I have been willing to support their measure; I have expected to do so, but I did not expect to do so under any such trade as has been suggested. If it is a question here of reprisal, and we must stand and deliver or else have stricken down something that is essential to our very industrial life, I am perfectly willing to meet that issue right here and now.

There never has been a time and there never will be a time so long as I have a seat in this body when any section of this country can compel me to vote for some measure in order that my own particular section may not be stricken. I have never legislated in that way, and, so help me Almighty God, I do not intend ever to do it.

I have been willing to listen to reason; I have been persuaded that they are suffering from a great natural handicap; I have been willing to go to their relief at any time that it was possible. As I said a moment ago, I voted to override the ruling of the Chair on the point of order, and I voted against the rule when it was adopted in the Senate which has caused this situation to arise. I protested, but nobody heeded, and now the rule is fixed upon the Senate. It would be very much better and very much wiser to repeal the rule than to seek to hold up a particular section of the country and say, "Unless you vote with us you shall suffer."

I do not know what the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Montana think about what constitutes waste upon river and harbor improvements; I have no means of gauging their idea of a wise expenditure beyond one certain point, and that is that it is never unwise if the money is going to be appropriated for their particular sections of the country. As an illustration of what river improvement does——

Mr. BROOKHART rose.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator wish to interrupt me?

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. It seems to me that the Senator from Arkansas is unfair to both of the Senators he mentions. They want to do two things for river improvement, namely, to give river points rail rates that will be helpful and to insure that the appropriation for river improvement shall not be wasted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; they want to do something that resembles the act of sending flowers to a funeral. Nobody mistakes the desire to be helpful that they manifest.

Mr. BROOKHART. Is the Senator himself in favor of both propositions?

Mr. CARAWAY. Of what—sending flowers to a funeral? It depends on whose funeral it is.

Mr. BROOKHART. The long-and-short-haul proposition——

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, I have announced that. If the Senator was present he knows what I said about that. I said that I had voted to override the President's ruling on that question, and that I had wanted to support the proposition under the theory that they were suffering from a discrimination.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I think, has no notion that his amendment will prevent the river and harbor appropriation. It will do the opposite thing; it will get us action on the long-and-short-haul matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, the Senator knows that if you have votes enough to pass a measure you can do it as an independent measure. It was not with the expectation of getting it through that the amendment was offered; it was to hope to rally the people who wanted to strike down river improvement.

I started to say, though I do not suppose it will be of any interest to anybody, that river improvement is not wholly wasted. The great valley of the Mississippi—and that was the principal item in this bill which the Senator from Montana was trying to enter into an agreement with the Senator from Virginia to strike down—drains the flood waters from 31 States; the rivers of the State represented in part by the Senator from Iowa drain down that way, and it destroys the country.

I remember one time when I used to live down on the Mississippi River, right on the bank of it, that in one county in my State—I have said this before, but I hope I may be permitted to repeat it—I do not think there was an acre of land that would have sold for $40 an acre. There was not 10 per cent of it in cultivation; and that was less than 25 years ago. With river improvement and levee improvement, which goes with it, that county in 1922 produced more than 1 per cent of all the cotton that was grown in America. It produced one-fifth as much cotton as the great State of South Carolina, one-seventh as much as the State of Mississippi, and paid in income taxes to this Government more money than it ever received for river improvement; and yet before it had the river improvement 90 per cent of it was a swamp, absolutely uninhabited, producing no wealth, adding absolutely nothing to the wealth that tends to feed and clothe the people of this country.

Yet, Mr. President, some people say, "Of course, money spent for river improvement is wasted." It is not wasted if it is reclaiming lands out West, and yet it has cost ten times as much per acre to reclaim that land as it has to reclaim lands along improved rivers. If that were an important item at all, it would be at least some refutation of the statement that river and harbor improvements are wholly wasted. I do not take that for granted; but I do know, as everybody else knows who has ever watched river improvement at all, that under the annual appropriations—and they have always defeated any continuous-appropriation contracts—the process is necessarily slow, and you do not get results until it is completed; but on the Mississippi River now they are carrying how many hundreds of thousands of tons of freight? Does the Senator from Tennessee recall?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall the exact number.

Mr. CARAWAY. Anyway, it is an enormous tonnage of freight. They could carry three or four times as much—it is available now—if we just had a little appropriation to provide all-the-year-around navigation.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROOKHART. There is nothing that would increase that freight tonnage so much as this long-and-short-haul legislation.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have tried to say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing to help put through his bill; but that is not the thing.

Mr. BROOKHART. The fact that Senators have different methods of getting a result does not mean that they are against it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, this method of putting a pistol to somebody's head and saying, "Unless you stand and deliver we are going to blow out your brains," may get results somewhere; I do not know; but it never got any with me. If I absolutely knew from this day that there never would be another dollar appropriated for river improvements, I would not be driven by a threat that such appropriations would be defeated unless we came across and let something else be done. Although such a course would destroy the very source of what little prosperity we used to have, and have not now, I would let it go.

I want to be perfectly fair with every other section of the country. I would love to see the Senator's proposition go through; but there are some things that are obtained at too high a price. If it is to be stated here by one Senator to another, "If you will just strike down the interior river appropriations I shall be glad to join with you," trying to make a trade here on the floor of the Senate to strike down all interior river improvements so that he might have a vote for his proposition, I do not think such a policy will prevail. I hope the Senator's proposition in the proper way will succeed; but I do not think it is likely to succeed in that way.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, he will recall that I stated that I would not vote for the amendment even if the Senator from Montana should exclude harbors and limit it to rivers.

Mr. CARAWAY. I knew the Senator would not, and everybody that knew him knew he would not. The Senator from Montana evidently had not studied the character of the Senator from Virginia when he made that statement.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, we all admire the ability of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] in caustic discussion. I am sure he appreciates, as everybody else on the floor did, that the passage between the Senator from Virginia and myself was mere badinage; but I merely desire to say that the amendment offered by me was offered in no spirit of hostility whatever to river improvement.

I took occasion, when the Senator was talking, to correct a statement he made, a sweeping characterization of those who are in favor of this amendment as being among those who are opposed to all river and harbor improvement, and who have consistently opposed appropriations for that purpose. As I stated to the Senator, the RECORD will be searched in vain for any remark from me at any time in opposition to river and harbor improvement. I have voted more times in favor of liberal appropriations for river and harbor improvement than I have voted against them, and I appreciate that there is the closest kind of a connection and relationship between the appropriations for river and harbor improvement in the lower courses of the Mississippi River and the appropriations for reclamation work along its upper courses.

As intimated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], the real spirit of the amendment offered by me is to promote river navigation, not to place any obstacles in its way. If the Senator from Arkansas takes another view of the matter, of course he has a perfect right to do that; but he ought not, it seems to me, to indulge in such freedom of criticism upon the motives which impel this amendment, nor to charge it with being a threat. I took occasion to say that it was not a threat, either to any Member of this body or to the House of Representatives. It is intended to be the expression of a policy that the long-and-short-haul clause ought to be strictly and literally enforced in order to promote river navigation so that the appropriations made for the purpose of improving the rivers shall be to some purpose and to some end. Nor would I undertake to say that there will not be some carriage by our rivers even if the long-and-short-haul clause is not enforced. It argues nothing at all that there is a large commerce upon the Mississippi and the Ohio and the other great rivers, notwithstanding the handicap of the present policy. We hope that it will be very largely increased by the observance of the policy for which this amendment stands.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I will just make this statement in answer to the Senator from Montana:

Of course I do not know what a threat is. I did not know heretofore that you had to label this as a threat before it was a threat. The Senator is thoroughly conscious of the fact that should his amendment be added to this bill the House would not legislate under that sort of a threat; that it would simply mean the striking out from this bill of every dollar for river and harbor improvement, because the bill would go through, and the House would not act on the other matter. Unless the House has thrown away every bit of its self-respect, and has changed wholly from the kind of a House it was when I had the honor to serve in it, it would simply mean that every dollar for river and harbor improvement would be stricken out. It would not mean the enactment of the long-and-short-haul bill. If there are votes enough for the long-and-short-haul bill—and I rather imagine there are—why not let the matter be taken up in pursuance of the motion that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] gave notice that he was going to make? I shall vote for his motion. It is the right way to legislate, but it is the height of folly simply to strike out of this bill all appropriations for river and harbor improvement when everybody knows that that would not get you the long-and-short-haul legislation.

While I shall credit the Senator from Montana with entire purity of motive, it is difficult for me to think that anybody who knows anything about legislation would believe that he was getting the long-and-short-haul legislation in that way. He would know that the thing he was getting was the elimination from the Army appropriation bill of all appropriations for rivers and harbors and nothing else. Therefore it did not strike me as very much of a stretch of my imagination to say that the real motive was to kill river and harbor improvement, and not to get the long-and-short-haul legislation, because I took it for granted that everybody knew that the House could not be driven into legislating in that way, so that if we put this amendment on this bill it would kill river and harbor improvement and not get the long-and-short-haul legislation.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate only a moment.

I am very strongly in favor of the enactment of the long-and-short-haul clause. I spoke for an hour and a quarter in favor of it yesterday. We have heard so much about the matter here that it is not necessary for me to rehash it. I can not help agreeing, however, with those Senators who think that the wrong means have been adopted in trying to force this amendment on the pending bill.

I sincerely hope the Senator who offered this amendment will withdraw it. I am so strongly in favor of the enactment of the principles of the Gooding bill and the Pittman amendment that I certainly shall vote to take up the measure if the Senator from Idaho makes the motion, as he said he would. I shall not only vote to take it up, but I shall vote to assist him in getting as quick action as possible on it; but I do think, Senators, that it is improper legislation to force a measure of this kind on a big appropriation bill. I do think it would be setting a terrible precedent for us, as was so eloquently stated by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

I hope the amendment will be withdrawn, and if it is not withdrawn I sincerely hope it will be overwhelmingly defeated, as I believe it will be, because the vast majority of the Members of this body are strongly interested, through their constituents, either in appropriations for some of the rivers of this mighty country or in appropriations for some of the harbors, and under the amendment all appropriations for both rivers and harbors will be held up until action has been taken upon this other measure; and it may not be taken, Senators. We are all hopeful that we are going to get away from here soon. The effect of the adoption of this amendment may be to destroy completely and absolutely any appropriation whatsoever for the rivers and harbors of the country; so I hope the amendment will be either withdrawn or overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment.

When the Howard University item was inserted in an appropriation bill I did not think it was in order, and I voted to sustain the Chair. I did not think to-day that this amendment was in order, and I voted to sustain the Chair.

I do not think the amendment that is now before the Senate is proper legislation at this time. Even the speeches in behalf of it show the fallacy of the policy of tying up the appropriations for rivers and harbors through a threat that this other bill has to be passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate.

I sincerely hope the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The READING CLERK. At the end of line 3, page 107, before the period, insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That it being the intent of Congress and the policy of our Government, as expressed in the transportation act of 1920, "to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation, service, and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation," and to prevent departures from the fourth section of the interstate commerce act for the purpose of permitting common carriers under said act to meet competition of water carriers not under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the appropriations herein made for the construction of a new power plant at Miraflores, Panama Canal, shall not be available or used for such purposes after the date that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall hereafter grant relief from the provisions of section 4 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, to any common carrier by railroad or by rail and water subject to the provisions of such act, upon any domestic traffic which now is or hereafter may be competed for by intercoastal water carriers operating through the Panama Canal.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, permit me to explain this amendment. It does not interfere in any way whatever with any appropriation for rivers or harbors. It does not place any strings on any appropriation for rivers or harbors. It does not limit any appropriation with regard to any rivers or harbors. It deals solely with the Panama Canal. It simply restates the policy of Congress as set forth in the transportation act of 1920. I quote the language:

That it being the intent of Congress and the policy of our Government, as expressed in the transportation act of 1920, "to promote—to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation, service, and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation," and to prevent departures from the fourth section of the interstate commerce act for the purpose of permitting common carriers under said act to meet competition of water carriers not under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the appropriations herein made for the construction of a new power plant at Miraflores, Panama Canal, shall not be available or used for such purposes after the date that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall hereafter grant relief from the provisions of section 4 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, to any common carrier by railroad or by rail and water subject to the provisions of such act, upon any domestic traffic which now is or hereafter may be competed for by intercoastal water carriers operating through the Panama Canal.

The amendment deals with nothing except interconstal waterways handling domestic traffic through the Panama Canal. It simply states that hereafter if any departure is authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant relief to meet that competition going through the Panama Canal, from that day on the appropriation for building the power plant at Miraflores shall cease to be available.

It is natural that the question should be asked, Why should we make it unavailable? By reason of the absurdity of the rules of the Senate and of the Congress; that is all. It has been held time and time again that you can place a limitation upon the use of an appropriation, but that you can not affirmatively do anything to bring about the same result. Therefore I have been compelled to look around to seek the smallest appropriation in the bill, so as to find a way of reasserting the policy of the Government and of Congress with regard to the enforcement of our laws by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the event that the Interstate Commerce Commission proceeded to grant the relief asked for on the transcontinental lines, there would be no inhibition against them doing it. It would merely declare a policy, and would stop the work at Miraflores.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is entirely correct. If they disobeyed it the only result would be to stop the work at Miraflores. But, mind you, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission has recently appeared before our committee, and when we constantly cross-examined him with regard to his violation of this provision, he said, "If the Senate of the United States means what you gentlemen think it means—if it means that this relief shall not be given from section 4 for the purpose of meeting water competition—why do you not say so?" That is what he asked us. I say now that if we say so here, he is bound to understand it, and he would not dare violate it, and if he did violate it, it would be ground for the Congress of the United States to remove every one of those commissioners from office.

Heretofore the Interstate Commerce Commission has closed its ears to the debates in Congress. The debates have been called to their attention. The construction I read this morning, given by the chairman of the committee at the time that provision was inserted, was read to them, but that is not law to the Interstate Commerce Commission. If we agree to this amendment, which provides that it is the intent of Congress and the policy of the Government that they shall not grant any relief from the fourth section for the purpose of permitting the railroads to meet water competition, then there is a positive, direct provision by this Congress, and the excuse these commissioners now use, that "if Congress means that why do they not say that," will be answered. That is what I mean.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator's amendment applies only to transportation over transcontinental lines?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all it could possibly apply to, because it deals only with the domestic trade through the Panama Canal.

I have simply taken the smallest appropriation directly in point that I could find, not for the purpose of stopping that appropriation but solely for getting a parliamentary means of answering the Interstate Commerce Commission when they say, "If you mean that, why do you not say it?" That is what they said before the committee.

We do mean that, and by this amendment we do say that. I want to state now that I am satisfied that it is not the intention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to hold up appropriation bills, but I can readily see how it might be construed even as the Senator from Arkansas has construed it, and for that very reason, in preparing an amendment, and in anticipation that my original amendment might be subject to a point of order, I did not let it apply to the appropriations for rivers and harbors or inland waterways, but I picked out the smallest appropriation I could find in this bill in point, simply for the purpose of supporting a declaration.

The bill itself provides, "and including $1,000,000 for the construction of a new power plant at Miraflores." If the Interstate Commerce Commission should disobey this express pronouncement of Congress, there would be no other result than that this new power plant would not be built.

However, the appropriation even of that $1,000,000 would not be interfered with until the order was made in spite of this provision. It is inconceivable that the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is the agency created by Congress to carry out our transportation acts, will contend for one moment that they can continue these violations if Congress expressly declares that if they do so the appropriations with regard to the Panama Canal must cease.

I have asserted in my amendment the policy of our Government. I have asserted that it is the intent of Congress, that it is the policy of the Government, that they shall not utilize the provisions of the fourth section of the interstate commerce act to grant relief to common carriers to meet water competition. That is the declaration, positive and frank, and if that declaration is not made somewhere they will continue to use the excuse they have used, which is, "If you meant that, why did you not ever say that?"

This would not interfere with the passage of the bill of the Senator from Idaho in the slightest. It is a protection pending the time of the passage of his bill, as a pronouncement of the intention of Congress. It is a continuing protection in the event the House should finally defeat his bill. It is in aid of passing the Senator's bill, because it declares the policy. It is in support of his bill. It does not go as far as the Senator's bill goes, because it deals solely with transportation through the Panama Canal.

I do not think any of the objections to this matter can be urged which were urged to the amendment of the Senator from Montana. I think it is the last chance we will have at this session of announcing positively and directly the policy of this Government with regard to transportation through the Panama Canal. I sincerely hope the Senate will agree to this amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think it well that the Senate know something about the project for the new power plant at the Miraflores Lock before it votes on this extraordinary amendment.

The War Department appropriation bill for the current year carries an appropriation of $850,000 to commence the construction of the new power plant which is to operate the gates at the Miraflores Lock on the Panama Canal. The Panama Canal administration for some years has been faced with the possibility of a breakdown in the operation of these gates, especially during a dry season, when they desire to keep the water level as high as possible. Commencing with last year they asked authority to begin the construction of a modern auxiliary power house which would develop the same amount of power and swing the gates during a dry season or other emergency.

The amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] proposes that a contract which is already in process of completion be stopped at any time that an utterly unrelated branch of the Government, the Interstate Commerce Commission, issues a decision on a certain railroad question in the State of Nevada or Wyoming or somewhere else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. PITTMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments to be proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had intended to offer a number of amendments dealing with the question of waterways, but in view of the protracted discussion which has taken place I shall not offer them.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks be authorized to correct the totals in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2327) to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The purpose is to clarify the language of the bill and to give the commission a full year in which to readjust violations of the fourth section, provided the bill becomes a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Strike out on page 3, all after line 15, and all on page 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Where any common carrier has or common carriers have in effect any rate, fare, or charge which is less for the longer than for the shorter distance between two points (the shorter being included within the longer distance), and which has been authorized by the commission or as to which application was filed with the commission on or before February 17, 1911, and not yet acted upon by it, such rate, fare, or charge shall not become unlawful (except by order of the commission) until after 12 months following the passage of this amendatory act; nor shall such rate, fare, or charge in effect via a circuitous rail carrier or rail carriers become unlawful if it shall have been authorized by order of the commission, after public hearing, based on no less a showing than that upon which the commission is herein authorized to grant relief: And provided further, That nothing in this section contained shall prevent the commission from authorizing or approving departures from the provisions of this section in so far as applicable to import or export rates, including rates applicable to traffic coming from or destined to a possession or dependency of the United States, or to a block system of express rates established by order or with the approval of the commission, or permitted by it to be filed.

Paragraph 2 of section 4 is hereby repealed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think I shall favor the bill under consideration, but it seems to me that this is a very important amendment to be agreed to without any discussion. The bill now becomes the unfinished business, and I suggest that it go over until next week. The amendment has not been printed and Senators have had no opportunity to consider it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me that that is the wise course to follow.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It would seem so. As I said, I think I shall vote for the bill, but I want to have an opportunity to consider the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator's request is a reasonable one. The importance of the amendment at this time is undoubted.

Mr. GOODING. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Idaho has secured his chief desire, which was to have the bill made the unfinished business.

Mr. GOODING. It is the unfinished business, and I am willing that it shall go over until next week.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MOSES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, May 19, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, May 17, 1924

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our heavenly Father, around about us are always Thy everlasting arms. A mighty fortress is our God, a refuge never failing. To Thee we yield ourselves, acknowledge our dependence, and confess our sins. Enlarge and extend the range of our understanding, and we always have the deepest concern for others and for the welfare of our country. In Thy light may we see light and strive for the best possible work by being the best possible men. In the name of Jesus our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution (H. Res. 316), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That J. ZACH SPEARING of Louisiana be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committees of the House on Coinage, Weights, and Measures and Railways and Canals.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT GUIDE BOOK

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, day before yesterday the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the minority leader, extended some remarks in the RECORD in relation to the Washington Monument Guide Book. In order to complete the record and for the information of the House, I ask permission to extend some brief remarks in relation to the same subject matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill. Senate amendment 15, to restore the right of sale at the Washington Monument of the guidebook authorized by the Congress in 1909, should be adopted.

The discontinuance of the Washington Monument Guide Book, which was prepared by Miss Ina C. Emery, a native of Bethel, Vt., is a gross injustice to her. She has had the book at the Monument approximately 20 years with the unanimous approval of Members of both Houses of Congress, of the succeeding Secretaries of War and Chiefs of Engineers, of the public, including heads of patriotic organizations, until it remained for one man, an Army officer, to stop it on July 1, 1923, and to replace it a month later with a book copyrighted by a private organization—the Society of American Military Engineers, Mills Building, Washington—of which he is a member.

MISS EMERY'S BOOK APPROVED

I ask permission at this time to insert as part of my remarks a letter of Chairman MADDEN, of the House Appropriations Committee, to the Secretary of War, on July 2, 1923, citing the law governing the matter, pointing out that Miss Emery's book at the Monument, in pursuance of that law, had given satisfaction to the public and asking the Secretary of War to restore to Miss Emery that right to sale of her guidebook at the Monument.

I also ask permission to insert as part of my remarks a copy of the hearing of Miss Emery, on January 14, 1909, on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill of 1909. That hearing was before the House appropriations subcommittee, consisting of Representative James A. Tawney, of Minnesota (chairman of the full committee); Edward B. Vreeland, of New York; J. Warren Keifer, of Ohio, who had been Speaker of the House; S. Brundidge, jr., of Arkansas, and Leonidas L. Livingston, of Georgia, who were in charge of deficiencies for the fiscal year 1909. There were also present at that time Representative Graff, of Illinois, and Representative Rodenberg, of Illinois.

SECRETARY WEEKS APPROVED IT IN 1923

It was Mr. Rodenberg who arranged for Miss Emery's hearing before the committee in 1909. Many years later, on or about June 1, 1922, Mr. Rodenberg, familiar with all the facts about the Washington Monument Guide Book, accompanied Miss Emery to the Secretary of War when a subordinate Army officer had threatened to take away Miss Emery's right to have the book at the monument. When the conversation, including the threat, was repeated to the Secretary of War, the latter stated to Mr. Rodenberg, Miss Emery, and her brother:

Miss Emery, I am thoroughly familiar with your guide book. I have no criticism to make of its price or criticism of it in any way. So far as I am concerned, I see no reason why it should not be there for 20 years to come if you want it.

Yet the subordinate officer succeeded in having the book discontinued, as he had threatened to do, and he stated before a House subcommittee (on the War Department appropriation bill) on February 14, 1924, that it was on his recommendation that the book was discontinued. He did not state that the book he put in its place is copyrighted by a private organization of which he is a member (the Society of American Military Engineers), nor did he say that his book is made up largely of the same material as in Miss Emery's book, some of it practically verbatim, nor that the book he put there bore a notice advising the public that additional copies may be obtained by sending 20 cents a copy to the Mills Building office of the private organization, of which he is a member.

The letter of Chairman MADDEN in favor of Miss Emery's book follows:

CHAIRMAN MADDEN'S LETTER

COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C., July 2, 1923.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In Statutes at Large, volume 35, page 615, will be found the following: "That hereafter no advertisement of any kind shall be displayed and no articles of any kind, except a guidebook to the Monument, shall be sold in or around the Washington Monument."

Then, later, in Statutes at Large, volume 35, page 997, there appears the following: "That hereafter no advertising of any kind shall be displayed and no articles of any kind shall be sold in or around the Monument, except upon the written authority of the Secretary of War."

In pursuance of this authority Miss Emery has been selling a guidebook to the Monument, which she has prepared at her own expense. The sale of this book involves no expenditure of public money, and she has paid the Government $75 per annum for the privilege. Recently you have ordered the sale of the book discontinued. It seems to me that in view of the expense incurred by Miss Emery in the preparation of the book and the satisfaction which its sale has given all these years to the visiting public she should be permitted to continue its sale.

I shall consider it a personal favor if you can find it consistent to withdraw the order recently issued by you and reinstate Miss Emery's right to the sale of the book at the Monument.

MISS EMERY'S HEARING IN 1909

The hearing of Miss Emery in 1909, referred to in Senate amendment 15 to the independent offices bill, shows textually that it was the purpose of the committee, without specifically mentioning her name, to authorize the sale of Miss Emery's guidebook to the Monument. Her book was the only one under consideration, and later when the provision the committee reported was before the House and the Senate copies of Miss Emery's book were before the membership of the two Houses. This provision and the subsequent one relating to the subject, both in 1909, are set forth in Mr. MADDEN'S letter to the Secretary of War. The first provision authorized her guidebook; the second provision provided how it should be placed on sale. The present Senate amendment is in no way in conflict with the existing law.

The hearing, from the printed record of the House Appropriations Committee hearings on deficiency bills in 1909, is as follows:

WASHINGTON MONUMENT, SALE OF ARTICLES IN

STATEMENT OF MISS INA C. EMERY

The CHAIRMAN. Miss Emery, you have called our attention to a provision in the sundry civil law for the current fiscal year in connection with the Washington Monument, asking that it may be abrogated. It reads as follows:

> "Provided, That no advertisement of any kind shall be displayed and no articles of any kind shall be sold in or around the Monument."

That is the Washington Monument, here in the city?

Miss EMERY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What reason have you for asking that this provision be abrogated, for wanting this law changed?

Miss EMERY. It is because I have a book, the only book that has ever been published, containing all the inscriptions, the history, and a description of the construction of the Washington Monument. It is the only one that has ever been prepared, and it has cost me over $1,600 to prepare the book, and it has been there for nearly six years, without a single adverse criticism from anywhere. On the contrary, I have had letters from all over the country, and even from Europe, telling me what a pleasure it has been to the writers to read an inscription on a tablet that an aunt or an uncle or some one had placed there, and it is the only book of the kind ever published.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you selling this book at the time that the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds recommended to the committee the adoption of this paragraph?

Miss EMERY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you know about the paragraph at the time of its adoption?

Miss EMERY. No, sir; I had no intimation of it.

Mr. KEIFER. When was that passed?

The CHAIRMAN. At the last session of Congress.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What objection have you to advertisements that do not affect your book?

Miss EMERY. I have no objection. I only want my book placed back there.

Mr. VREELAND. She wants the right to sell her book there. The right has been taken away.

Mr. RODENBERG. They construed that provision in such a way as to exclude her book.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Suppose the law is changed so that it will not exclude the selling of your book?

Miss EMERY. That is all I ask.

Mr. VREELAND. She is not seeking to exclude anybody else.

Miss EMERY. No. I only ask that my book may be sold there, as it is a benefit to the public, and I think that Mr. Tawney knows of the various persons who have interested themselves in it who know the book and know what it has done.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Can anyone tell why that law was passed?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. It was enacted at the last session of Congress on the recommendation of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds. It was placed as a provision on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I was not here at the time and did not get a chance to hear a thing about it. What reason did he give?

The CHAIRMAN. He wanted to shut out the vending of anything at that place, because, as he said, if you will allow one you would have to license others.

Mr. GRAFF. There is no book vended there except this book, is there, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not recall the testimony now. My recollection, however, is that there were applications for permission for the vending of all sorts of articles—postal cards, souvenir postal cards, and souvnirs of all kinds.

Mr. GRAFF. But there is no history of the Monument except this one?

The CHAIRMAN. Not that I know anything about.

Mr. VREELAND. We could amend the provision by excepting books describing the Monument, or views of the Monument.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a guide to the Monument?

Miss EMERY. It is a guide to the Monument. There is nothing in it except a guide to the Monument.

The CHAIRMAN. Then if we were to amend this provision so as to read that no advertisements of any kind should be displayed or any articles should be sold except this book, that would be satisfactory to you?

Miss EMERY. Yes, sir; that is all I ask.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not see why they should prohibit anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. There was reason for this legislation. Of course, the committee did not know anything about this book at the time, but if you allow these people to go there indiscriminately you would have a crowd of people selling things there, especially during the week of inauguration and perhaps weeks afterwards.

Mr. VREELAND. It is a great convenience for the people to go there and buy it. I want to look at it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. This is of benefit to visitors, in that it will enable them to understand the history of the Monument and the history of the inscriptions inside of it?

Miss EMERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. I think we can amend that in a way to be satisfactory to you.

Mr. VREELAND. I wish you would send up two or three copies of that book. When it comes up in the House we would like to show just what it is.

Miss EMERY. I have already sent a copy to each member of the committee. I thank you, gentlemen, very much.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a short editorial from the Boston Transcript, nationally known as a conservative Republican newspaper, asking the Congress to pass the adjusted compensation bill over the President's veto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPROUL of Illinois. I object.

HAUGEN-M'NARY BILL

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a report (H. Res. 317, Rept. No. 775) from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a report from the Committee on Rules on a bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9033) entitled "A bill declaring an emergency in respect to certain agricultural commodities, to promote equality between agricultural commodities and other commodities, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its chief clerk, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendment to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 47 to the bill (H. R. 5078) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, had asked for a still further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 6298) to authorize the leasing for oil and gas mining purposes of unallotted lands on Indian reservations affected by the proviso to section 3 of the act of February 28, 1891.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6357) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 698. An act for the relief of the Great Lakes Engineering Works;

S. 1174. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine claims of certain members of the Sioux Nation of Indians for damages occasioned by the destruction of their horses;

S. 1975. An act for the relief of the Commercial Union Assurance Co. (Ltd.), Federal Insurance Co., American & Foreign Marine Insurance Co., Queen Insurance Co. of America, Fireman's Fund Insurance Co., United States Lloyds, and the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Co.;

S. 2052. An act to carry out the decree of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania in the case of United States of America, owner of the steam dredge Delaware, against the steamship A. A. Raven, American Transportation Co., claimant, and to pay the amount decreed to be due said company;

S. 2138. An act for the relief of First Lieut. Harry L. Rogers, jr.;

S. 2397. An act to provide for refunds to veterans of the World War of certain amounts paid by them under Federal irrigation projects;

S. 2448. An act to amend the organic act of Porto Rico approved March 2, 1917;

S. 2455. An act to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Government of Nicaragua on account of damages alleged to have been done to the property of Salvador Buitrago Diaz by United States marines on February 6, 1921;

S. 2526. An act providing for an allotment of land from the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation, Okla., to James F. Rowell, an intermarried and enrolled member of the Kiowa Tribe;

S. 2457. An act to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Government of Nicaragua on account of the killing or wounding of Nicaraguans in encounters with the United States marines;

S. 2593. An act for the extension of Rittenhouse Street in the District of Columbia;

S. 2669. An act for the relief of J. R. King;

S. 2975. An act validating certain applications for, and entries of, public lands and for other purposes;

S. 2693. An act in reference to writs of error;

S. 2826. An act for the relief of the Italian Government;

S. 2905. An act to amend section 25 (a) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act;

S. 2919. An act to extend the provisions of the national bank act to the Virgin Islands of the United States;

S. 2928. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept certain lands in the vicinity of Pensacola, Fla., to assure a suitable water supply for the United States naval air station at Pensacola;

S. 2949. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to sell a portion of the Carlisle Barracks Reservation;

S. 3025. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Oostanaula River in Gordon County, Ga.; and

S. 3211. An act authorizing the sale of Gasparilla Island Military Reservation.

VETO MESSAGE—ADJUSTED COMPENSATION BILL

The SPEAKER. The business before the House is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the adjusted compensation bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the large attendance to-day justifies the wisdom and propriety of the motion I made on Thursday to give Members an opportunity to be here and vote upon this most momentous question. However, I feel that the House does not desire to hear prolonged debate on this question, so therefore I shall very shortly move the previous question. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the President is the Nation's leader. The people of the United States look to him for guidance. They admire his courage and his wisdom. They are willing to follow him, and I know of no reason why I should not follow him. [Applause.] I have always favored a bonus and voted for it, but I think that the present financial condition of the country justifies a change of opinion on my part, and I shall therefore vote to sustain the veto of the President. [Applause.] The State of Illinois has voted a bonus to the men of that State, $55,000,000. I paid my share of that. I am proud to pay my share of anything that is justified for the ex-service men.

The Nation since the war has done wonders to stabilize the world and put our own finances on a sound basis. As chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I think I would be unworthy to stand in my place day by day and advocate economy in every other direction and then vote to override the veto of the President. [Applause.]

I am assuming the responsibility here which the chairmanship of the Committee on Appropriations imposes upon me, and I do so gladly. I believe that in doing that I am doing what the Nation as a whole would have me do. The tax-reduction bill pending wipes out any surplus that might have existed in the 1925 program of receipts and expenditures, and it is possible that the bill itself will result in a deficit. Proposals for additional expenditures for the fiscal year 1925, pending in legislation, if approved by the President, would call for appropriations of nearly $400,000,000 more for the fiscal year 1925 over and above what the Budget for 1925 asked. No revenues are provided to meet these unusual expenditures. In other words, all these large pending proposals for expenditures would either effectively destroy tax reduction or, if tax reduction should accompany their enactment, they would result in a large deficit in the next fiscal year's running expenses of the Government.

Appropriations to meet the bonus would cost in 20 years $2,280,000,000. The appropriation for the fiscal year 1925, under the bonus, would amount to $152,500,000. The face value of the bonds to retire these policies plus the interest reinvested will equal the maturity value of the insurance policies, aggregating at the lowest estimate $3,145,000,000. Appropriations for compensation, insurance, vocational training, hospital construction and hospital treatment to June 30, 1925, will amount in the net to $2,750,000,000. Appropriations for the next fiscal year for these purposes alone will aggregate $349,065,000. Legislation pending to liberalize compensation and other features and provide additional hospitals aggregates $46,500,000 and if enacted will bring the total for next year to approximately $400,000,000.

So that it can not be said by the ex-service men of the Nation that we have been undmindful of the services they have rendered. There is nothing that appropriations could supply that has not been supplied to every man who needed attention, and I am sure that the Nation is proud to have been enabled to supply these needs; and to the extent that it can supply the needs of the men who came back with armless sleeves and sightless eyes and other deformities as the result of their services to the Nation I am sure that every man and woman everywhere from end to end of the Nation will be proud to do their duty. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, it has been my duty and pleasure to have drawn each of the three caucus or conference calls which have in the past presented the matter of adjusted compensation to the Republican conference. In all of these years this will be my first, only, and last speech on adjusted compensation in the Congress, because within five days the law will have passed both the House and Senate and be an accepted law. [Applause.] I approach it without any feeling of rancor, because it is a question upon which men may logically and fairly and honestly disagree, and I respected the men who have opposed adjusted compensation because of their manifest courage—men of the type of the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. MADDEN], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He, like so many others, votes his convictions on the floor of this House, regardless of the effect upon his political fortunes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that I have only five minutes. This is the only speech on this subject that I have ever made on the floor of the House, and I do not have the time to yield.

It is not a political question. Each President of the United States that we have had since the war opposed the granting of adjusted compensation—President Wilson, President Harding, and President Coolidge. Each of the Secretaries of the Treasury of both parties has disapproved adjusted compensation, the distinguished Secretary under the Democratc administration just as much as the distinguished Secretary under a Republican administration. The question of party politics can not come in it. It is a question purely of right and justice.

What we should have done in this Congress in 1919 was to have given a sufficient appropriation to have furnished each of these men who returned from the service a suit of clothes, a pair of shoes, a hat, and an overcoat, and this question would have been settled at that time if men had had that viewpoint. But Congress did not have it, and has not come to this viewpoint until after there has been much discussion of the question throughout the country.

The question of insurance comes into the veto. I do not think it properly belongs there. No man who secured insurance under the war risk insurance act but who pays for everything that he has received, and he could have purchased insurance in the open market as well as he could have secured it from the Government, the actual war risk expected.

I am firmly convinced that the passage of this act—and it will be passed—will do much to avoid the issuance of pensions to well, sound men. No service man in this House has ever introduced a pension bill for able-bodied veterans, and I hope the time will not come in my lifetime when pensions for fit and sound men will be presented. The fact that men will be able to get this insurance policy and pass insurance to their families ought to be sufficient for men who are able-bodied.

I do not like the statement that adjusted compensation is capitalizing patriotism. There was no question of capitalizing patriotism when these men were in the trenches. [Applause.] I can recognize the fact that men can divide fairly and honestly on the question, but I think that the burden of proof is on those who say it is a capitalization of patriotism. George Washington did not capitalize his patriotism when he received adjusted compensation from the Government. Abraham Lincoln did not capitalize his patriotism when he secured his land grant from the Government. Grant and Lee did not capitalize their patriotism when application was made or when they received something from the Government for their services, and that is the only part of the argument that to me does not appeal as being exactly fair. I hope that this question will be settled, that it will never come before this Congress again, and that it will be settled right by enacting finally the adjusted compensation law. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the motion to pass this bill, the objection of the President notwithstanding, and I shall do so not because of but despite the message which the President sent. In so doing, whether right or wrong, I am consistent in my position.

My reason for opposing the so-called bonus bill has been stated on the floor of the House upon different occasions when the subject matter has been before it, and more important than that, perhaps, they have been stated before my constituents in a spirited campaign in which that constituted the principal issue.

I can not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to condole with my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and possibly may have to condole with the leader of the majority [Mr. LONGWORTH], although I do not know, as yet. [Laughter.]

What the gentleman from Illinois has stated as his reason for now voting was known to me at the time we voted on the passage of the bill. It was known to me in the last Congress when we voted on the passage of the bill, and in the Congress before that time I thought I knew. I congratulate the gentleman from Illinois that he lives and learns as he lives. [Applause.]

I was opposing the bonus when the present President of the United States, then Governor of Massachusetts, was signing a bonus bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, as the sponsor of the 20-year endowment insurance bill—I believe I was the only one to introduce a 20-year endowment measure—I wish to protest against the objections raised on the ground of poverty.

Here we are, five years after the armistice, pleading poverty to escape an obligation that has been recognized and fulfilled by every one of the Allies during the World War and partly with money we loaned them.

This bill was changed from the previous cash bill to the endowment-insurance feature in order to harmonize with the financial condition of the Treasury. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, now comes before the House and says that we are not in a financial position to pass a 20-year endowment measure requiring an appropriation of approximately $100,000,000 annually for the next 20 years. I submit that such an appropriation will in no way harm the economic stability of our country or affect the price of Liberty bonds or hamper in any way the business conditions of the country at this time or for the next 20 years.

Both parties have pledged adjusted compensation to the veterans of the World War. Former President Harding in a speech prior to his election stated that he was for adjusted compensation, and he vetoed the Fordney-McCumber bill for a reason which proved to be a false reason. He was informed by Secretary Mellon that there would be a deficit of $600,000,000 in the Treasury on June 30, 1923, but it turned out instead that there was a surplus of $329,000,000. On June 30, 1924, there will be a further surplus of $370,000,000 in the Treasury; and now the statement is made on the floor of the House that the Treasury is not in a position to finance this particular bill. That is the main issue I want you to consider in voting on the bill. Is there sufficient money at the present time, and will there be sufficient money in the future to finance an appropriation of $100,000,000 to pay adjusted compensation by means of endowment insurance policies to veterans of the World War? This bill is based on sound business and insurance principles and without hampering business fulfills a pledge given during and after the war by the American people. It is nothing but a simple act of justice and recognition of the services of these men during the war. It is not a complete adjustment of compensation based on the difference of wages paid back home and the pay of the soldiers, as that would amount to thirty billions. This bill will cost eventually about two billions, or about half the cost of the Fordney-McCumber measure, which President Harding vetoed.

It carries out a continuous policy from Revolutionary days.

We adjusted the compensation of Washington, of LaFayette, of Steuben, and of all the soldiers and officers. It is an American policy; it is a sound policy; and it is a policy to which we have pledged ourselves individually and collectively.

We adjusted the payments of the war contractors, the railroads, and the munition makers and in one day passed the Dent bill appropriating $4,000,000,000 for the adjustment of business claims. I do not propose to discriminate in favor of everyone as against the soldiers, nor do I propose on this question to march up the hill and then down again. When will we meet the issue unless we meet it now? The whole trouble is that we did not meet it when we should have, five years ago, and given $300 to every soldier that was honorably discharged. We are now simply doing what we should have done five years ago by giving them partial adjusted compensation as the grateful act of a grateful Republic and the consummation of a debt of honor. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, when the Congress immediately after the war voted a bonus of $240 to every employee of the Government who remained at home and was never exposed to any danger or suffered any discomfort, it was all right; * * * when we treated the railroads liberally and poured millions into their coffers, that was all right; when we guaranteed the earnings of the railroads, that was all right. It is only wrong when we propose in a small way to recognize the services of the men who saved the civilization of the world. [Applause.]

Five years ago, standing at this desk, I urged my colleagues on this floor to treat the ex-service men exactly as they had treated the army of officeholders at home, to wit, to give each sailor and soldier $240; and if that had been done, I think the adjustment would have been reasonably satisfactory. But it was not done. When the great naval and military figures of the world are given money enough to make them comfortable for life, it is all right; the large donations are a proper recognition of successful, patriotic service; but when the buck privates and the sergeants and lieutenants, who led them from the front trenches forward in no man's land in the face of deadly fire of the enemy—when we propose to give these men a little pittance, it is capitalizing patriotism. [Applause.]

I respect the President of the United States, Mr. Speaker, and I am sincere when I say it was with profound regret that I heard his message read. I shall, of course, vote to pass this bill over his veto, and I want to say here once again in the moment I have that this agitation for adjusted compensation can not be properly charged to the ex-service men. It was started on this floor and in the other Chamber. In some small degree I am myself responsible, and to my dying day I shall feel proud of the part I have taken.

I regret that I can not vote for a better bill than this. It would only be partial justice if we treated every ex-service man as we have treated the war workers for a single year. But, Mr. Speaker, for my own self-respect, feeling that my position is absolutely just, I must hurl back to the President the insinuation that there is any effort to capitalize patriotism when we proceed to pass this eminently just but unsatisfactory bill. In face of all the benefits which the Government has bestowed upon others who, exposed to no danger, aided in winning the World War, I am utterly amazed that anyone should suggest sordid capitalizing of patriotism when we pass such a bill as this.

It is said that the wealth of this Nation increased from the time we entered the World War until now from $50,000,000,000 to $100,000,000,000. Nobody knows accurately, of course, but we do know that during and after the war millionaires sprung up all over this Nation, like the teeth of Cadmus, overnight; and now, because we propose to pass this eminently just measure which takes but a little pittance of the wealth that has been poured into this country from every quarter of the globe, because we would do that the charge must be hurled in the face of Congress and the ex-service men that it is an effort to capitalize patriotism. God have mercy upon the man who honestly feels that is so; for that man is groping in the dark. [Applause.] Surely he must have forgotten five years of recent history. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has no remarks to revise and extend.

Mr. KINDRED. But I wish to formulate some.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to these requests? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if the President of the United States had contented himself merely with vetoing the adjusted compensation bill, I should have had no quarrel with him. I voted for the adjusted compensation bill because I believe the soldier boys are entitled to it, and I expect to vote to pass it over his veto; but I have no quarrel with the President because of his views on economic questions. I have no right to quarrel with any man because we happen to differ on political or economic issues.

But, Mr. Speaker, I must resent, as I feel every other American citizen should resent, that bitter veto message in which he went out of his way, as I said a few days ago, to gratuitously insult those ex-service men who are asking for adjusted compensation.

This message is no ordinary document. If it were an editorial in a local paper, or if it were an article in some transitory publication, I would not even take the time to refer to it here; but this message will not only go down in the crystallized archives of this Republic for future generations to read how the President of the United States, in a solemn document, reflected upon the ex-service men and referred to them as capitalizing their patriotism, but it will go on down to future generations to be read perhaps "in states unborn and in accents yet unknown" as a manifestation of the President's gratitude, or ingratitude, for the services rendered and the sacrifices made by our soldiers in the World War. [Applause.] The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] has said that other Presidents have vetoed adjusted compensation measures, but no other President has ever referred to these men in the terms employed by the present Chief Executive in this harsh and unusual document.

Listen to what he says:

We must either abandon our theory of patriotism or abandon this bill. Patriotism which is bought and paid for is not patriotism.

What does he mean by that expression? There can be but one answer, and that is that those who favor this measure have abandoned their patriotism. Ah, what a pitiless rebuff to those legions of ex-service men who went through the grime and dirt and fire and danger and misery of the World War for the pitiful compensation of $30 a month—"deducting twenty-nine" for insurance, allotments, and other necessities—and who are now asking for this adjusted compensation!

Cold, indeed, must those words fall upon the aching hearts of the saddened mothers, whose heroes died in Flanders Field, when they come to receive this small pittance, which is offered them in this bill, to adjust the compensation of their boys who gave their lives in the Nation's cause! [Applause.]

The President says:

This bill would condemn those who are weak to turn over a part of their earnings to those who are strong.

What a horrible spectacle it would be to see these strong ex-service men holding up and robbing those weak and friendless profiteers who made their fortunes out of the war—those cold-blooded grasping individuals who coined their millions out of the blood and tears of the suffering men, women, and children of the world during that great conflict, and who are now abusing the ex-service men for asking for this slight recognition; those consciousless ingrates who have either placed their ill-gotten gains beyond the pale of taxation, or who are demanding that this measure be defeated in order that they may realize a greater tax reduction on their own swollen fortunes!

In concluding his unfortunate message, the President says, in referring to this measure, that "there is no moral justification for it." In other words, that those men and women who are asking for this adjusted compensation, in addition to abandoning their patriotism, are guilty of espousing an immoral cause. Thank God, that is not the view of the American people, or that of the American Congress! In asking for the passage of this legislation the ex-service men of the country feel that they are merely demanding what is justly due them; and in responding to their requests and in supporting this measure, we are not encouraging them to "abandon their patriotism" or abetting them in the commission of an immoral ac We are simply endeavoring to render justice to those brave men who support the Nation in times of peace, and who fought its battles in times of war. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I had not planned on saying anything to-day and would not have uttered a word upon the floor here had it not been for the statements that have just been made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Neither during the Sixty-sixth Congress, the Sixty-seventh Congress, nor this Congress have I been in accord with the majority of my colleagues on the question of the bonus or adjusted compensation. However, in these various discussions, whether upon the floor or upon the stump, I have respected the views of those who differed with me and who now differ with me. They have accorded me the same privilege. I also think that they should respect the President of the United States in the expression of his views. [Applause.]

I do not care whether I look to the right or to the left, to men who agree with me or to men who disagree with me, there is not a man here who does not in his heart acknowledge and admire the courage of the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it ill behooves the members of the minority to criticize the President for his veto. He is the Chief Executive of our Nation and as such responsible to all of the people. In his first message to Congress he voiced the sentiments of the Nation in calling upon Congress for tax reduction. We went to work upon his recommendations. You, my Democratic friends, did your utmost to obstruct and prevent the adoption of this program by unsound proposals. You succeeded in part by making changes which would result in the creating of a deficit. The bill then went over to the other end of the Capitol, where members of the minority party so mutilated it as to create an annual deficit of over $250,000,000. The passage of this bill would increase this deficit over $100,000,000. Yet you who are responsible for creating this situation criticize him for doing the only thing he could do.

But, Mr. Speaker, they have not stopped at this. The effort has been made here to misrepresent the attitude of the President by adroitly extracting sentences and phrases out of their context and to make them mean what they do not mean. Some of them have been quoted here and I say have been given a meaning that was never intended. The President said:

The first duty of every citizen is to the Nation.

Who will deny that?

The veterans of the World War performed this first duty.

Did they not do so?

He then went on to say:

To confer upon them a cash consideration or its equivalent for performing this first duty, is unjustified. It is not justified when considered in the interests of the whole people; it is not justified when considered alone on its merits. The gratitude of the Nation to these veterans can not be expressed in dollars and cents.

[Applause.]

This is the President of the United States speaking. Is there anyone here who will deny the truth of that statement?

I quote further:

No way exists by which we can either equalize the burdens or give adequate financial reward to those who served the Nation in both civil and military capacities in time of war. The respect and honor of their country will rightfully be theirs for evermore.

That is the tribute of the President to the ex-service men, whom the gentleman from Mississippi said——

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I can not yield. I quote further:

But patriotism can neither be bought nor sold. It is not hire and salary. It is not material but spiritual. It is one of the finest and highest of human virtues.

Does the gentleman from Mississippi disagree with those sentiments? [Applause.] No; we know the gentleman from Mississippi too well. He agrees with every sentiment there as announced by the President of the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. I deny that. I do not agree with the message of the President.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I can not be interrupted. Let me say this, that it was the politician, not the service man, who initiated this movement. It has seemed to me as the discussion for the bonus has gone on through the several years that the effect has been to take the emphasis from duty and obligation to country and to place it upon other grounds. Its effect upon many has been to create a false conception of citizenship. Its effect has been to build up the idea that it is the business of the Government to support the people rather than that of the people to support the Government. It would be a great misfortune if any such idea should become prevalent. It would mean the death knell of our institutions. I grant you this has not been intended. It is, however, the natural result of some of the arguments that have been made in its behalf. I imagine that the President had something of this in mind when he uttered these sentiments.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that President Coolidge in his message uttered the same sentiments that were uttered by President Harding in his veto message on the bonus some two years ago. It is different only in words. I quote from President Harding's message:

It is sometimes thoughtlessly urged that it is a simple thing for the rich Republic to add four billions to its indebtedness. This impression comes from the readiness of the public response to the Government's appeal for funds amid the stress of war. It is to be remembered that in the war everybody was ready to give his all. Let us not recall the comparatively few exceptions. Citizens of every degree of competence loaned and sacrificed precisely in the same spirit that our armed forces went out for service. The war spirit impelled. To a war necessity there was but one answer; but a peace bestowal on the ex-service men, as though the supreme offering could be paid for with cash, is a perversion of public funds, a reversal of the policy which exalted patriotic service in the past, and suggests that future defense is to be inspired by compensation rather than consciousness of duty to flag and country.

So spoke President Harding. So far as I can recall there was no criticism of him or his language by anyone, on the floor of this House. In substance it is no different than the message of President Coolidge. But then we were not on the eve of a presidential election.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; I can not yield. Let us determine this question without rancor, without partisanship, without misrepresentation of what the President has said, strictly in accordance with the way we individually believe in reference to this question. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 23 minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, when the preparation of this bill was referred to the Ways and Means Committee it was the duty of that committee to take into consideration not only what we owed to the soldier but what we owed to the rest of the country. The Ways and Means Committee did so. It made up a bill consistent with the financial program. I can not, of course, give all the details now and all the calculations and estimates which were necessary to bear in mind with reference to what the country could raise in the way of taxes and what the bill would cost, but we fully considered them at that time. As a result we reported a bill with which I had considerable to do, which was, as everybody ought to agree, an extremely moderate measure, if any action whatever was taken. It was one which I thought at the time was, as far as financial matters were concerned, so reasonable that nobody could take exception to it.

Mr. Speaker, nations like Canada and Australia several years ago paid their soldiers in cash more than we propose to pay by this bill. Even when we make every allowance for the greater number of soldiers in this country, we are so much superior in natural resources and wealth that there can be no comparison; and yet they say we can not afford to pay the sum carried by this bill. Mr. Speaker, I say that it is idle to make such a contention. The amount we save every year is estimated by good authorities at $8,000,000,000. Only a little over one-quarter of this amount is to be paid under this bill, and that we propose to distribute over 20 years. Do you tell me that the country can not afford to make that payment? How little sacrifice that is. It seems to me unworthy to say that so great, so rich, so powerful, so prosperous a Nation is unable to pay this sum, and I think it ought to be done without question. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. FISH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given half a minute more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield half a minute to the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. I would like to ask the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee if it is not a fact that the primary cost of the Fordney-McCumber bill is about $4,000,000,000 and the primary cost of this is about $2,000,000,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is correct, only this bill will cost a little over $2,000,000,000, and that is distributed over 20 years. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRAND].

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the President of the United States has not insulted his own conscience. He has not been willing to open the doors of the Treasury to anybody, to any voter, in order to please that voter, when he did not believe in the principle involved. The President is right and has refrained from fully stating the case. The issue is greater than the bonus problem, and the time has come to meet it. In the discussion of the old bonus measure, vetoed by President Harding, in the last Congress I said publicly, "More people are suffering from the burdens of present taxation than there are those suffering from the lack of the bonus," but the terms of the bonus were so changed that tax reduction and the bonus were both practical and possible had a program of economy been otherwise followed and, right or wrong, I voted for it.

However, I did not then realize the temper of Congress which has since been revealed to me. Extravagance runs wild. Since the bonus was passed Congress has passed or will pass new expenditure after new expenditure until the surplus in the Treasury is consumed and tax reduction is a myth.

I have talked with the ranking members of the Appropriations Committee and the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and I am convinced that we are planning to spend, in addition to the grand total of three billion plus anticipated by the Budget, the following:

Bonus annually	$114,000,000
Post-office employees	80,000,000
Reclassification Government employees	15,000,000
Roads	10,000,000
Veterans' Bureau	32,000,000
Rivers and harbors	31,000,000
Deficiency bills	10,000,000
Hospitalization of World War veterans	6,500,000
Hospitalization of Civil War veterans	1,500,000
Cape Cod Canal	11,500,000
District of Columbia extra expenditure	4,000,000
Reforestation	2,000,000
Miscellaneous items	10,000,000
Total new expenditures	327,500,000

In addition, we have a right to face the following items which are understood now to be sure of favorable consideration in the near future:

Naval program	$110,000,000
Public-building program	300,000,000
Total	410,000,000
The tax reduction bill exceeds the surplus in the Treasury by	166,000,000
New expenditures	327,500,000
Grand total deficiency	903,500,000

The bonus is but a part of the problem. All the above either have passed or will pass Congress with a whoop. No one save the President can subtract from these new expenditures. Shall his veto fail?

The picture in my mind has changed radically since I voted for the bonus early in the session. I did not then realize the temper of Congress.

There is not much between us and the confiscation of property and men's earnings for taxation purposes when you include the inclination in the States, except the President's veto. Shall it fail? If so, we must face increased taxation.

Every hand held out, especially if it has the power to strike, bids fair to be filled. To please, to grant a demand, or satisfy a plea, to protect one's own interest by opening the doors of the Treasury—this is the evil and the wickedness directly facing us.

We must sacrifice ourselves and accept the opposition that develops.

The bonus is but a part of the problem.

I yield my wish to recognize the patriotism and services of the World War Veterans, and join the President completely in the bigger issue, of saving the public from tax destruction.

I will vote to sustain his veto. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I shall not ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I am hurt; I am offended; I am saddened. I simply want to protest in the name of my comrades in the service of their country during the World War against the unwarranted insult contained in the message of the President of the United States. In that message, Mr. Speaker, the President has placed a question mark on the honorable discharge granted to 4,000,000 gallant American soldiers. [Applause.]

In the crucial moment of the war when the last offensive was started, the commander in chief of the allied forces sent a message to the commander of the First Division to retire, to withdraw his troops for strategic reasons, but the gallant American general replied that he could not retire, that he could not retreat, because he would not be able to explain a retreat to his soldiers. My colleagues, if you retreat now, you will never be able to explain it to the American people. [Applause.]

I might state, Mr. Speaker, that some of the reasoning contained in the message was based on a false premise. I read from it the following statement:

> This bill would condemn those who are weak to turn over a part of their earnings to those who are strong.

Perhaps the President had in mind the Mellon tax bill; but that also has been changed by this Congress. In conclusion I will say that if there is anything spiritual in this whole problem it is not the opposition to this measure. No; the opposition is not spiritual; it is sordidly material. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], and to-day the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], have suggested that the message of the President is an insult to the soldiers who served in the Great War. I know that the gentleman from Massachusetts served in one of the best divisions that ever wore the khaki. I think he feels that he states the views of the soldiers. I, too, served in the war for two years, recruited 1,200 men, many of whom sleep under the poppies of France. I refer to this not in the way of a boast of service, but to show that I, too, may speak for the service men. I read that message, and after the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts I studied it, and I confess that I could not find a word that indicated any insult, open or implied, to the men who served under the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.] I may be rather old-fashioned, but it strikes me that the heart of every citizen ought to be filled with pride that we have a Chief Executive who stands courageously for what he believes to be right.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIBSON. No; I have not the time. The message is a fearless statement of an honest Executive trying to do his duty without regard to the soldier vote or the vote of any other group, and I say that, notwithstanding the fact that I shall vote to pass the bill over the President's veto.

What is there about that message, pray you, that indicates an insult? The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] has called attention to some of it. Is it where the President says that patriotism is not to be bought or sold? Oh, my comrades, I ask you if you would part with the experience that you went through and the sacrifice that you made for dollars and cents? No; your service is something higher, something more spiritual than all that. The gentleman from Minnesota has referred to this matter as not being a partisan question. It is not, and you can not make it so, because Calvin Coolidge has so won the confidence and the respect of the American people that he is going to be triumphantly elected in November. [Applause.]

[By unanimous consent Mr. GIBSON was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the President said that "we must either abandon our theory of patriotism or abandon this bill," and that "patriotism which is bought and paid for is not patriotism." I am one of the few Members of this House who voted with the President on his Japanese immigration policy, but I can not follow this veto. I shall vote to pay adjusted compensation to the men of the last war.

I saw Maryland men of the One hundred and fifteenth Infantry working as carpenters at Camp McClellan in Alabama in 1917 at soldiers' pay, while across the road men not in the service got $10 a day for doing exactly the same sort of work.

I saw American soldiers in France in 1918 breaking stone on the roads at soldiers' pay, while at home in the United States others lived softly and worked in munitions factories at $10 a day or in Government departments in Washington with a bonus of $240 a year.

You can not buy patriotism! But this adjusted compensation bill dares not and does not attempt to buy patriotism. It is a just attempt to settle an economic debt, a debt far below and far removed from the battle risk that all war service either actually or potentially involved.

I am for this bill. I shall vote to pass it over the President's veto. I know it will pass, because it is just. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, if the President of the United States had been content with vetoing this bill and not casting an aspersion on the 4,500,000 men who lately composed the American Army, I would not have risen to-day, but when the President of the United States goes out of his way to say that the men who were in the service are now attempting to sell their patriotism, I for one, and on behalf of these men, must deny it and condemn the statement. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in the 10 divisions that our Artillery supported there were men from Massachusetts, the President's own State, and men to whom he later, as Governor of Massachusetts, granted a bonus. Did they sell their patriotism when they received that bonus, or when they asked for it? Surely not. I say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that my artillery supported a division from his State, and there were in that division men whom I know intimately, men who are asking that this adjusted compensation bill be passed, and not one of those men would be guilty of selling his patriotism. But this is not all.

The President, in the last paragraph of his veto message, says:

> America entered the World War with a higher purpose than to secure material gain. Not greed but duty was the impelling motive. Our veterans as a whole responded to that motive.

Does the President mean that because these organizations and these men are asking for adjusted compensation that they are actuated by the spirit of greed, and that they were part of that minority who did not respond to the highest motive? This is the construction that I place upon his remarks.

I wish to say this, Mr. Speaker, that no matter whether adjusted compensation is ever granted to the ex-service men, or not; no matter how long they may live, they will be as patriotic and as loyal to America as they have been in the past, and if the occasion should ever arise again, while they have the strength that God Almighty gives them, they will go into battle for their country with the same spirit they displayed in the World War. [Applause.]

Every Member here has received letters from the organization called the Ex-Service Men's Anti-Bonus League. Every Member here has received letters and propaganda from the United States Chamber of Commerce. Both of these organizations have repeatedly stated that they were willing to "do and to give everything for the disabled, but nothing for the able." Yet, during the six weeks the Committee on Veterans' Legislation had hearings on relief for the disabled veteran, no representative from either organization came before the committee. No single member of either organization wrote even a letter to the committee asking for any legislation for the disabled. At the same time we were having hearings for the disabled, representatives of these organizations were appearing before the Ways and Means Committee protesting against adjusted compensation.

I voted for adjusted compensation before, and I shall vote to override the President's veto. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, before moving the previous question, I have just this to say: Some three and a half years ago, seated on the same platform with the Republican candidate in my home city, on the Saturday before the presidential election, I heard him commit himself definitely to the policy of paying compensation to able-bodied ex-service men. Some few months after that my State, my congressional district, by substantial majorities confirmed that principle by granting a bonus to its citizen soldiers. At that time I felt myself bound by what I regarded as not only a party mandate but a popular mandate, and so I actively participated in the drafting of a bill to provide compensation for the World War veterans.

I voted for that bill. During this session of Congress necessarily, being no longer a member of the Ways and Means Committee, I did not participate in the drafting of the bill presented by it, but I voted for it. If I change my position now I am perfectly well aware that my friend from Tennessee may have ground to criticize me for lack of consistency and to condole with me as well as with the gentleman from Illinois, for which condolence I am very grateful. However, Mr. Speaker, after a most careful consideration of circumstances and conditions to-day as I see them, I can not bring myself to vote to override the veto of the President. I shall vote to sustain the President. [Applause.] I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? A yea-and-nay vote is provided by the Constitution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 313, nays 78, answered "present" 3, not voting 39, as follows:

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. HULL, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. STENGLE, who are unavoidably absent, and who would have voted "aye" if they had been present. I therefore wish to withdraw my vote of "no" and ask to be recorded as "present."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. BOIES, and with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to recall my vote. If those gentlemen were present, they would vote "aye" and I would vote "no."

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DALLINGER, and with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. DYER. If they were present, they would have voted "aye" and I would have voted "no."

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. KVALE, is unavoidably absent. If he were here, he would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of agricultural relief.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, chiseled in granite over the portals of the Union Station in our Nation's Capital, so that all who enter may read, is the fitting inscription:

> The farm—The best home of the family—Source of national wealth—Foundation of civilized society—The natural providence.

Such has been and such always should be the recognized important relationship of agriculture to the wealth and general prosperity of the country, and the farm as the abode of the unit of society essential to self-government. The family on the farm is the Government's most valuable and substantial asset. From such source the Nation gets its political oxygen purifying its blood; its courage and confidence to maintain its independence; its leaders and statesmen to solve the perplexing problems of to-morrow.

In his address of February 12, 1924, before the National Republican Club in New York City, President Coolidge well said:

> The farm has a social value which can not be overestimated. It is the natural home of liberty and the support of courage and character. In all the Nation it is the chief abiding place of the spirit of independence. I do not need to dwell upon the moral requirement for the equitable distribution of prosperity and the relief of distress by the application of every possible and sound remedy. This problem is not merely the problem of the agricultural sections of our country. It is the problem likewise of industry, of transportation, of commerce, and of banking. I bring it to you, because I know that in part it is your problem.

THE MOST IMPORTANT PROBLEM BEFORE THE NATION TO-DAY

What is the problem to which the President referred? It is the problem of the rehabilitation of agriculture, its restoration to that plane of equality and prosperity enjoyed by the industries of commerce and labor. It is the most important problem before this Nation to-day. With the exception of providing the essential revenues to keep the Government itself in operation, it is of far higher importance and outweighs the necessity of all other proposed legislation. Of more importance than transportation, of greater necessity than manufacturing, of higher consequence than mining, is agriculture, with the family on the farm. Tax reduction is important. Restricted immigration is necessary. The child labor amendment is essential. Likewise the tax exempt security amendment. But they are as nothing compared to the importance and necessity of relieving our basic industry from its present deplorable condition and restoring prosperity to the farm.

AGRICULTURE IS OUR GREATEST NATIONAL ASSET

Agriculture is not only the basic industry but the largest industry as well. It is a $75,000,000,000 concern, in which are directly interested not less than 30,000,000 people living and working on the farms. They constitute 40 per cent of the home market, which in turn consumes 90 per cent of our home products. At one time agriculture furnished 50 per cent of the Nation's bank deposits. With the exception of the railroads, it is the largest consumer of steel and iron products. It consumes 50 per cent of the timber products. It is the largest purchaser of leather and textile goods and motor vehicles. It is the greatest single asset of the Nation, and when prosperous furnishes steady employment to more people than any other industry. Whatever contributes to its prosperity and well-being unquestionably benefits all other lines of industry. When the farmers are prosperous the merchant, the banker, the laborer, the mechanic, the professional man, and all lines of legitimate business are prosperous. Legislation, therefore, in the interest of agriculture is not class legislation, but basic and general. It is in the interest of all.

OPPOSITION TO LEGISLATIVE RELIEF

But when we ask for legislative relief we are confronted with the answer that the low prices for farm products are caused by overproduction and the demoralized condition of the world markets; that the problem is not legislative but economic; that farming should be conducted on a business basis; that the farmers should organize, curtail production, diversify, and market in an orderly manner; that as existing conditions gradually change the price levels will adjust themselves to their economic relations; that we are opposed to price fixing, inflation, legislative interference with economic law; and that you can not legislate prosperity—you must dig it out of its natural sources.

In the school of economics under ordinary conditions such objections might be sufficient, but in the forum of equity they are not sufficient; they are not brought in "with clean hands."

SURPLUS PRODUCTION NECESSARY FOR PROTECTION OF CONSUMING PUBLIC

Because of the uncertainties of yield, effects of the elements, or pestilences, which may so easily produce crop shortage and food famines, and because it is impracticable to regulate production, as in the industries, a surplus is a necessary element of the agricultural system and an economic necessity for the protection of the consuming public. Any loss by reason of having to sell such surplus for a lower price in the world markets is a proper economic charge against the consumer of the home product because it is produced for his protection. Beyond that necessary protective degree of production only can surplus be charged as an unnecessary burden of agriculture.

Such overproduction is but the continuing result of the Government's demands for increased production during the war. It is impossible for unorganized agriculture to curtail production like organized industry. It requires time and money to change wheat land into alfalfa, dairy, hogs, or beef. And even though these changes could have been effected it would only have added to the heavy losses already sustained by the producers, as even the prices for these products have been below the cost of production.

THE GOVERNMENT'S WAR DEMANDS INCREASED PRODUCTION ABOVE CONSUMPTION

In 1916 we produced only 636,518,000 bushels of wheat, and in 1917 636,655,000 bushels. July 1, 1917, we had only 62,000,000 bushels of wheat on hand, an amount sufficient to run our mills for only one month. Our consumption of wheat per capita at that time was 5.3 bushels, or an aggregate consumption of 556,000,000 bushels for food and 80,000,000 bushels for seed—making a total consumption of 645,000,000 bushels for home use. In answer to the insistent appeals of the Government the wheat acreage was increased from 47,000,000 before the war to 75,000,000 acres in 1919. The yield was increased from 636,655,000 bushels in 1917 to 967,979,000 bushels in 1919.

GOOD PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS

In May, 1917, wheat was selling on the Chicago market for $3.45. The average wholesale price of spring-wheat flour at Minneapolis during the same month was $14.88 per barrel, and at one time went as high as $16.75. No overproduction then! No lack of diversification! For the first time in many years farm prices were sufficiently high to warrant the hope of accumulation and independence ordinarily entertained by those engaged in business, manufacturing, or professional lines. At last we can make money on the farm, pay off our indebtedness, reestablish our financial independence, was the joyful anticipation of the farmers as they viewed the substantial prospect of good prices.

CONSUMERS DEMAND GOVERNMENT PROTECTION AGAINST PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS

Was such prospect permitted to materialize? No! It was not. The consuming public would not stand for it. Whoever heard tell of a farmer becoming wealthy and independent on the profits of his farm products? He is not entitled to do so.

Such was the opposing mental conception of the possibilities of agriculture. Gradually it had become so depressed by economic law and organized industry that it was no longer looked upon as being entitled to produce wealth for the producers like other lines of business. Those who engaged in farming must leave such hope behind.

When confronted with such prices for foodstuffs the consuming public squealed like a stuck hog. It exclaimed: "Just see what the prices of farm products are in comparison to ours; we can not pay even our living expenses; such outrageous prices are unconscionable; they should be prohibited by law; the farmers should be compelled to increase their production; prices are all out of proportion; there is but one of two things to do—you will have to lower the prices of farm products to our level or raise our prices up to theirs."

FARMERS PREVENTED FROM MAKING PROFITS BY GOVERNMENT'S INTERVENTION

In the midst of all this clamor the Government was faced with the necessity of feeding our Army and voluntarily assumed the task of feeding those of the Allies. On August 10, 1917, the food control act was approved for the purpose of "encouraging production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel." It especially provided in section 14 that—

Whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit.

On August 10, 1917, under the authority of the act, by Executive order the President created the Food Administration and appointed Herbert Hoover as United States Food Administrator. On August 14, 1917, by Executive order the President, under the authority of the act, also created the Grain Corporation and appointed Julius Barnes president of the corporation. On that date he also appointed a fair price committee, consisting of 11 men, representing all interests, to fix a price for the wheat crop of 1917. On August 30, 1917, the committee presented its report to the President, recommending that the price of No. 1 northern spring wheat or its equivalent at Chicago be $2.20 per bushel. This recommendation was adopted and the amount per bushel declared to be the minimum price by law; but the Grain Corporation and the Food Administration immediately made it the maximum price by their administration of the law. They gathered within their assumed jurisdiction all the leading grain buyers, elevators, millers, traders, jobbers, and bakers in the country.

The Grain Corporation entered into written contracts with grain dealers, elevators, and millers not to pay more than $2.20 per bushel for the wheat known as No. 1 northern at the primary markets. It prohibited the export of wheat and the storage of wheat for more than 30 days; also the storage of flour; prohibited all hoarding of either, so that it kept wheat and flour on the move. It closed down the exchanges, prohibited speculation, and successfully kept the price down to the minimum, nothwithstanding the fact that the law simply authorized it to keep the price up to that amount.

When the fair price committee found that $2.20 was a fair price for a bushel of wheat delivered at the primary markets, August 30, 1917, wheat was then selling for $2.72 per bushel. On September 1, 1917, the day the President issued his proclamation fixing the maximum price of wheat at $2.20, the price fell 52 cents a bushel at all the primary markets. In describing the effect of its administration, the Grain Corporation claimed credit in the following language, which is quoted from its own report:

The high prices of flour and bread led to bread riots in New York and other eastern cities. The United States was a hot bed of incipient strikes and labor disorders in the summer of 1917 growing out of high prices and high living costs. If there had been no prospect of lower food prices, no curb upon speculation, the temper of the industrial population might easily have broken out in an upheaval which would have paralyzed the whole national effort in prosecuting the war. It was positively necessary that some relief be given to our people if the public morale was to be sustained and a united front presented to the enemy.

Had wheat been permitted to rise in price at an equal rate with all commodities during the three years of control, to wit, from August, 1917, to February, 1920, the prices would have undoubtedly fluctuated between $3 and $5 per bushel instead of being held down from $2.20 to $2.26. The index of all commodities rose from 100 in 1914 to 210 in 1919. It is reliably estimated that the fixed and maintained price of the Government was not less than $1 per bushel below what the farmers would have received without such interference, making the total aggregate loss to the farmers on their wheat for such period, $2,094,918,000, in which amount the consuming public and the Government received full benefit in the reduced prices.

LEGISLATIVE RELIEF WAS THE ONLY SOUND REMEDY THEN

Thus a limitation was placed on the price of the farmer's wheat. But no limitation was placed on the prices of the things he had to buy. This very objection was emphatically made at the time without avail. No squeamishness then about price fixing; no learned platitudes about the necessity of permitting the price values to adjust themselves without interference; no sage reminder that it was an economic, not a legislative problem; no familiar protesting resolutions from chambers of commerce. No, indeed! Schoolroom economics could go hang. It was clearly an emergency, demanding immediate emergency relief.

UNJUST DISCRIMINATION AGAINST AGRICULTURE

On the 1st of September, 1917, when the President issued his proclamation fixing the price of a bushel of wheat at $2.20 at the primary markets, the average compensation per hour for all labor including general and division officers upon all class A railroads in the United States was 32 cents per hour. On December 28, 1917, Mr. William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, was appointed Director General of Railroads. He had hardly got his seat warm until he began to play politics, and on January 1, 1918, he issued what is known as General Order No. 27, which, together with other supplementary orders issued by him in 1918 and 1919, increased the average compensation of labor on the railroads in the United States in 1919 to 56.5 cents per hour, an increase of 76 per cent over the wages paid for labor on our railroads when the fair price committee found that $2.20 per bushel was a fair price for a bushel of wheat. Such total increase of wage was 104 per cent above the price paid for labor in 1916 before the passage of the Adamson law.

On July 20, 1920, the Railroad Labor Board issued its decision No. 2, effective retroactively as of May 1, 1920. It increased the average compensation of our railroads for all labor including general and division officers to 67.6 cents per hour, an increase of 121 per cent over 1917, when the President issued his proclamation fixing the price of a bushel of wheat at $2.20, and 146 per cent above the price paid for labor on our railroads on January 1, 1917, before the Adamson law became effective.

In 1921 the Labor Board made a small reduction in the price of labor upon our railroads. For that year the average compensation was 66.7 cents per hour. In 1922 the Labor Board made further reduction, and for that year the average compensation per hour was 61.3 cents. The price of labor on our railroads to-day is 127 per cent above the price paid for labor upon our railroads on January 1, 1917, before the Adamson law became effective.

Up to January 1, 1917, there had been no increase in the price of labor in our shipyards, but in that year the Government increased it 10 per cent. In 1918 the Government increased the price of labor in our shipyards 81 per cent, and in 1919 granted another increase until the total amount was 122 per cent above the pre-war price. In 1921 and 1922 there were some reductions in wages in our shipyards amounting to about 10 per cent, so that the price paid for labor in our shipyards to-day is 110 per cent above the price paid for labor before the war, and 100 per cent above the price paid for labor when the President fixed the price of the farmer's wheat at $2.20 per bushel.

On September 1, 1917, when the Government fixed the price of a bushel of wheat at $2.20 at the primary markets the price of farm labor was 25 per cent above the pre-war price; in 1918 it was 75 per cent above the pre-war price; in 1919 it was 100 per cent above the pre-war price; and in 1920, 130 per cent above the pre-war price. Now, it is 70 per cent above the pre-war price.

In 1917, when the price of wheat was fixed at $2.20, farm machinery of all kinds was 31 per cent above the pre-war price; in 1918 it was 78 per cent above the pre-war price; and in 1920 it was 96 per cent above the pre-war price.

On June 24, 1918, William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads, having increased the wages of his employees, made a horizontal increase in all freight rates of 25 per cent, excepting that the increase on freight rates on wheat should not be increased more than 6 cents per hundred.

On July 1, 1918, the President ordered an increase of 6 cents per bushel in the price of wheat at the primary markets, which was the only increase given the farmers during the period of the war. While such increase might compensate the farmers for the 25 per cent increase on freight rates on wheat, yet it did not compensate them for the increase on their farm machinery, building material, binding twine, barbed wire, and everything else the farmer had to buy.

During such period the Government handed out its 10 per cent plus contracts to unconscionable profiteers without any limitation of expenditure. It guaranteed the railroads against loss and a reasonable return on their investment. But the farmers were limited to a price for their wheat far below the world-market price and wholly out of proportion to the enormous prices of the products they had to buy and the high wages they had to pay. In other words, the Government, through its agencies, hog-tied the farmers down to $2.20 for their wheat and let the prices of other products soar sky-high.

HEAVY FARM LOSSES

When the farmers were at the peak of production, producing with implements purchased at war prices and labor employed at war wages, in May, 1920, the deflation policy of the Federal reserve banks and the depressed foreign markets shrunk the value of their products alone in excess of $8,000,000,000 in two years, leaving them stranded high upon the rocks of bankruptcy, with their increased indebtedness contracted under high prices unpaid and with the purchasing power of their products shrunken 35 per cent. In 1919 the total tonnage production of crops was approximately 255,000,000, valued at $15,423,000,000. In 1921 the total production was still approximately 255,000,000 tons, but the value had shrunk to $6,934,000,000, a loss in value on crops alone in two years of $8,489,000,000.

INCREASE IN FARM INDEBTEDNESS

The increase in farm indebtedness prior to 1920 is shown by the last Federal census, a very considerable part of which was contracted within the four or five years just preceding 1920, when prices of farm products were relatively high, and the American farmer was encouraged to enlarge the scale of farm operations and expenditures to meet the war and post-war demands for food supplies. In 1910 the average owner-operated farm debt was $1,715 per farm. By 1920 the average debt per farm had increased to $3,356. In addition to farm mortgages farmers carry a large volume of debt represented by short-term cash loans from bankers and individuals, as well as credit accounts with merchants of all kinds. With these items included the total farm debt as of January 1, 1920, was estimated to be $13,000,000,000.

AVERAGE FARM INCOME

The average size of an American farm is about 148 acres. Its average value is estimated at about $8,500. The average mortgage debt is about $3,400 per farm. The average personal debt is over $800 per farm. The average annual interest charges are about $315 per farm. The average annual taxes are about $105 per farm. Hence interest and taxes alone take, roughly, $425 per annum from the farmer's income. The average income per farm family in 1919 has been estimated, roughly, at $1,774. The average in 1920 had fallen to $964. Estimates for 1921, though not on a wholly comparable basis, were $1,075. Estimates for 1922, though also on a different basis, indicate a return of $917 on the average to the owner-operator of over 6,000 representative farms included in a survey made by the Department of Agriculture. Although the foregoing figures of income are not wholly comparable they indicate the low rate of income per farm family in the United States.

TAXES AND INTEREST CHARGES

In his annual report for 1923 the Secretary of Agriculture estimates the property taxes and interest combined, paid by agriculture in 1920, at about $1,457,000,000; in 1921 at about $1,684,000,000; and in 1922 at $1,749,000,000. We quote further from this report:

In 1920 practically the entire value of the wheat and tobacco crops, or about two-thirds of the wheat and cotton crops, were required to pay property taxes and interest charges. This was during the period of high prices and lagging charges for taxes and interest.

In 1921 property taxes and interest were equal to the entire value of the wheat, oats, potato, and tobacco crops. The wheat and cotton crops combined would pay but five-sixths of the taxes and interest. This was during the period of low prices and rising charges for taxes and interest.

In 1922 the value of the wheat, oats, and tobacco crops, and one-half of the potato crop were required to pay taxes and interest. In that year, although cotton was very high in price, taxes and interest charges were equivalent to the entire value of the cotton crop plus two-thirds of the wheat crop. Property taxes increased from $532,000,000 in 1920 to $797,000,000 in 1922.

Unfortunately reliable estimates of taxes and interest charges are not available for the pre-war years. It is estimated, however, that property taxes alone in 1914 aggregated about $344,000,000, which was equivalent to less than two-fifths of the 1914 wheat crop, while in 1922 taxes totaled $797,000,000, which was approximately equivalent to the total value of the 1921 or the 1922 wheat crops. The wheat crop is approximately equal to the pre-war value, but taxes have more than doubled. It should be kept in mind that the increase in taxes is due to local and State governments, not Federal.

Under such a situation farmers who are out of debt can get along fairly well, but those who are heavily in debt, and especially those young farmers who have not become thoroughly established, are having great difficulty in meeting interest and principal on public and private debts.

THE PRICE LEVELS HAVE NOT RETURNED

Each year we have been waiting and hoping for the price levels to adjust themselves and for the purchasing power of agricultural products to raise to that of labor and industry. And each year we have been confronted with a market offering but from 75 to 80 cents per bushel for wheat, and prices for other farm products in proportion.

The price levels remain the same. The purchasing power of the farmers' products continues out of all proportion. In February, 1924, a bushel of wheat would exchange on the average for 71 per cent as much of commodities in general as it would before the war, 1910–1914; a bushel of corn, 82 per cent; beef cattle, 69 per cent; hogs, 59 per cent.

The following table shows these purchasing-power indexes for each February in the last four years:

Purchasing power

[Index of average price received by farmers divided by index of wholesale prices of all commodities]

[1910–1914=100]

Date	Wheat	Corn	Beef cattle	Swine
February, 1921	102	64	72	74
1922	83	58	69	81
1923	73	76	68	67
1924	71	82	69	59

DEPRECIATION IN PURCHASING POWER OF HOGS

To show the tremendous depreciation of hogs in their purchasing power the following comparison of the number of pounds needed to purchase certain farm implements in 1913 and 1923 is given:

	Cost, 1913	Cost, 1923	Pork needed		Increase
			1913	1923
			Pounds	Pounds	Per cent
Walking plow, 14-inch, general purpose	$11.75	$21.25	157	332	111
Gang plow, 14-inch	53.25	99.00	744	1,549	108
Disk harrow, 7-foot, 16-inch	23.00	47.50	321	743	131
Corn planter, 2-row	31.75	64.50	443	1,009	128
Grain drill, 22-7	106.00	190.00	1,481	2,973	101

Farm prices, hogs, per 100 pounds: 1913, $7.16; 1923, $6.39.

DEPRECIATION IN PURCHASING POWER OF WHEAT

In order that the relative situation as between wheat and pork may be clearly understood the following comparison is given of the number of bushels of wheat needed to purchase certain farm implements in 1913 and 1923:

	Cost, 1913	Cost, 1923	Wheat needed		Bushel increase
			1913	1923
			Bushels	Bushels	Per cent
Walking plow, 14-inch, general purpose	$11.75	$21.25	15	23	53
Gang plow, 14-inch	53.25	99.00	67	107	60
Disk harrow, 7-foot, 16-inch	23.00	47.50	29	51	76
Corn planter, 2-row	31.75	64.50	40	70	75
Grain drill, 22-6	106.00	190.00	132	206	56

Farm price of wheat per bushel:

1913	$0.799
1923	.923

	Per cent
In terms of pork, a 14-inch walking plow had increased in cost	111
In terms of wheat, a 14-inch walking plow had increased in cost	53
In terms of pork, a 14-inch gang plow had increased in cost	108
In terms of wheat, a 14-inch gang plow had increased in cost	60
In terms of pork, a 7-foot disk harrow had increased in cost	131
In terms of wheat, a 7-foot disk harrow had increased in cost	76
In terms of pork, a 2-row corn planter had increased in cost	128
In terms of wheat, a 2-row corn planter had increased in cost	75
In terms of pork, a 22-6 grain drill had increased in cost	101
In terms of wheat, a 22-6 grain drill had increased in cost	56

and so on, through practically all of the farm implements that the producer must buy, and through every other commodity.

It is astonishing to know that a gang plow that in 1913 cost 744 pounds of pork cost 1,549 pounds in 1923, and that a grain drill that cost 1,481 pounds in 1913 cost 2,973 pounds in 1923.

The farmer buys other commodities with his commodities. The money into which he first exchanges his commodities is a mere convenience of trade. His suffering is due to the fact that when converted into money and then converted into other commodities his products are so deficient in purchasing power that he is being crushed under an economic weight from which he can not escape of his own effort.

Thus we see the farmer's dollar to-day in its purchasing power is substantially 70 per cent of its pre-war value.

THE FARMER ONLY RECEIVES 37 CENTS OUT OF THE CONSUMER'S DOLLAR

Between the farmer and the consumer is a vast army of middlemen. The unorganized condition of the farmers is such that 19,000,000 middlemen are permitted to make their living out of the exchange of farm products. Why should it be necessary for the 6,500,000 farmers to feed and support such an army? It accounts for the enormous spread of $15,000,000,000 between the farmers and the consumer. Out of the $22,500,000,000 paid by the consumers for farm products the farmers only receive $7,500,000,000. Who gets the $15,000,000,000 difference? Some of it, of course, is for legitimate and necessary purposes, essential to the change of the raw material into the finished product; its necessary transportation and distribution. But the amount is out of all proportion to what the farmers who produce the products receive. They get only 37 cents out of the dollar paid by the ultimate consumer, when they ought to be receiving at least 60 cents, which amount they would receive if properly organized to market their products direct; if they were organized as business is organized, as labor is organized, to market their products. But such degree of efficient organization will require years to effect. The farmers must have relief now.

THE WORLD'S PRICE FOR SURPLUS FIXES THE PRICE OF PRODUCT FOR DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION

While benefited by a protective tariff to the extent of largely preventing all imports of farm products, the farmers must necessarily produce a surplus, which makes them sell their whole crop in a free-trade market on the basis of the world's price, in competition with the cheap lands and labor and low standards of living of foreign countries, at a purchasing price much lower than that of the high standard of American living prices, which they are required to pay for everything they have to buy.

It is frequently claimed that the farmer is robbed by the tariff, and that the only remedy is by a repeal of our present protective tariff law and the enactment of a substitute providing for tariff for revenue only or free trade. Nearly all the articles consumed by the farmers are on the free list, the high prices of which are not caused by the tariff but by the high wages of labor and the intensive organization of industry being able to fix their prices, adding all costs, and passing them on to the consumer. In order that there might be no mistake about this contention, the following commodities principally used by the farmers are on the free list:

Lumber, shingles, fence posts, barbed wire, netting wire, farming machinery of all kinds—excepting cream separators—binding twine, leather, harness, saddles, boots and shoes, gasoline, and coal oil.

The farmers are not asking that the walls be leveled, that the gates be opened, so that our home markets may be exploited by the cheap labor of the world, although it would enable them to buy at cheaper prices in proportion to the purchasing power of the prices they receive. They know that free trade or tariff for revenue only in effect would be more devastating and destructive than the ravages of war. They know too well the disastrous results of such a policy. They have experienced this. They know that every purchase abroad would curtail employment just that much here; that such curtailment of employment would result in a gradual discharge of labor; in an army of unemployed, in closed factories, idle mills, abandoned mines, Coxey's armies, and discontent threatening the Government itself.

The crops of which the farmers have an exportable surplus are not sheltered by protection. The post-war world conditions fixed the prices of their surplus, and consequently of their entire production.

Before the war the effect of this was not so marked and noticeable because there was not so much difference between the markets. As a result of the war the markets of the world have been demoralized, depressed, and largely destroyed by unstable values, inflated currency, enormous indebtedness, high taxes, and labor reduced to a lower condition than ever before, bordering on a state of peasantry in some countries and starvation in others.

LABOR AND INDUSTRY FULLY PROTECTED

The industrial interests are protected from peasant labor and the low standards of living of foreign countries. Behind a tariff wall of protection they are permitted to enjoy our home market, which is greater than all the markets of the world combined. The manufacturing, railroad, and mining interests of the country have been giving steady employment to American labor at high wages because of their ability to fix the prices for their products, add all additional charges to the cost, and pass them on to the ultimate consumer. Building programs halted by the war's interference have furnished steady employment to labor at good wages. Labor is protected by a restricted immigration law which wisely keeps out the millions who would come here and lower the American standards of wages and living and of Government.

The Adamson law in effect gave to the 2,000,000 railroad employees an 8-hour day with the same rate of pay they had been receiving for 10 hours. Through intensive organization and collective bargaining, labor has been able to exact a high wage scale, an 8-hour day, and working conditions sufficient to maintain their high standards of living.

THE FARMERS MUST PAY THE HIGH PRICES

These high wages are all reflected in the high freight rates which the farmers are compelled to pay both ways. And such rates in turn are protected by the constitutional guaranty of a reasonable return upon the investment. Rates are fixed sufficiently high to cover all costs, pay the high wages of labor, and yield a net return to the stockholders. This the railroads have been doing for the last several years.

The United States Steel Corporation controls its output and markets its products in such an orderly way through its efficient organization as to yield annual dividends of 6 to 7 per cent to its stockholders. It does not permit the prices of its surplus in foreign countries to fix the prices of its product for domestic consumption. It separates and segregates that surplus and sells it abroad, and then is in a position to fix the prices for domestic consumption, adding the high wages and passing them along to the consumer.

THE FARMERS CAN NOT FIX THEIR PRICES

The farmers are not sufficiently organized to exact the high wages of organized labor. They are not in a position to exact a constitutional guaranty of a reasonable return like the railroads. They can not segregate and sell their surplus abroad so that the prices for their products for home consumption will be proportionate to the prices they have to pay. They can not fix the prices of their products. They can not pass the high prices for implements and high wages on to the consumer. Producing the most important and most essential of all products, they are compelled to take whatever is offered.

THE INEVITABLE RESULT

The temporary prosperity now existing has been exacted from the credit and credit momentum of the farmers given to them by increased credit facilities of recent legislation, but such increased credit facilities have almost been exhausted. While they have been furnishing 40 per cent of the home market, which in turn consumes 90 per cent of all our products, they can not do it any longer. Their purchasing power has been exhausted. The indebtedness contracted by them during the high prices, in response to the appeal of the Government for increased production, remains unpaid. They are no longer able to meet the daily exactions of the high cost of living and high industrial prices, the annual demands of high taxes, and interest charges. They have ceased buying farm implements or making farm improvements or necessary repairs. Even now they are drawing on their last reserve—their remaining equity in their land.

Another year of ruinous prices and the farm will be sacrificed. His farm—"the best home of the family"—will be sold at sheriff's sale and the ancient independence of our once proud agriculture will be gone. What will be the result when 40 per cent of the purchasing power of our home market is gone? Can there be any doubt as to what the result will be? Curtail industrial production 40 per cent and what will you have? You will have closed mines, closed factories, silent mills. You will have millions out of employment, hungry women and children, bread lines, and widespread dissatisfaction and discontent.

WE MUST RAISE FARM PRICES OR LOWER INDUSTRIAL PRICES

Organized labor has seen the result and requested immediate agricultural relief. Will cautious capital see the impending peril and do likewise; or, having eyes, will it see not? Having ears, will it refuse to listen?

From admitted existing agricultural conditions there is but one conclusion. We are confronted with the alternative of either lifting agriculture up to the industrial conditions of trade and commerce, or depressing industrial conditions down to those of agriculture. We will have to resort to either one of the two remedies. There can be no escape.

It is probably true that in the course of time conditions will finally right themselves and the price levels again return to proportionate values, but in the meantime the farming interests of the country would be reduced to a state of peonage and peasantry. Already we have waited four years for this restoration of equality in purchasing power, during which period thousands of farm mortgages have been foreclosed and the farms sold at sheriff's sales, and many voluntarily abandoned by their owners.

In his November 30, 1923, report Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, said:

> Reports were secured from 15 States covering a period from January, 1920, to March, 1923. Out of over 68,000 owner-operated farms included in this survey, 4 per cent lost their farms through foreclosure or bankruptcy. Four and five-tenths per cent lost their farms without legal proceedings and a little over 15 per cent had been spared such loss only because of the leniency of their creditors.

Describing the economic situation in the wheat-growing sections of the Northwest in his message to Congress December 6, 1923, President Coolidge stated:

> The distress is most acute among those wholly dependent upon one crop. Wheat acreage was greatly expanded and has not yet been sufficiently reduced. A large amount is raised for export, which has to meet the competition in the world market of large amounts raised on land much cheaper and much more productive.

In his message of January 23, 1924, the President stated:

> Great numbers of individual farmers are so involved in debt both on mortgages and to merchants and banks that they are unable to preserve the equity of their properties. They are unable to undertake the diversification of farming that is fundamentally necessary for sound agricultural reconstruction of the area. They are unable to meet their obligations, and thereby has been involved the entire mercantile and banking fabric of these regions. Not only have there been large numbers of foreclosures on actual farms but there are great numbers of farmers who are continuing in possession of sufferance from their creditors. There have been large and increasing bank failures.

In his address of February 12, 1924, President Coolidge, urging the imperative need of immediate agriculture relief, again stated:

> But agriculture has only partially revived. Its position has been improved, and the returns for the year are nearly 30 per cent in excess of two years ago. But the great food staples do not sell on a parity with the products of industry. Their average price is little above the pre-war level, while manufactures are about 50 per cent higher. The farmer is not receiving his fair share. The result has been a decrease in the value of farm lands, the choking of the avenues of credit with obligations which are worthless or doubtful, the foreclosure of mortgages, and the suspension of a large number of banks. To this depression there have been other contributing causes, but the main difficulty has been the price of farm produce.

REMEDIAL RELIEF NEEDED

The ills of the farmers are fundamental, demanding immediate relief. This can only be furnished by governmental aid and assistance. Equitable treatment demands that the Government, through an appropriate agency, help them to dispose of the surplus that it caused them to create, charging any losses sustained back against the producer receiving the benefits. This would curtail production to home consumption and, when supplemented by prohibitive tariffs on farm products, would raise the prices proportionate to those of industry and labor.

If protection to the consuming public from the alleged high prices of farm products during the years 1918 and 1919 was a sufficient emergency for the Government to step in and fix the prices of the farmers' wheat far below the world market price, why is not the present emergency sufficient for the Government to step in and protect the consuming farmers from the high industrial prices now? If through its Grain Corporation it could control prices then, why, through an export corporation with similar powers, can it not establish and maintain proportionate purchasing prices for farm products now? And do this for a sufficient length of time to enable the farmers to organize, establish their marketing agencies, curtail production, diversify, and become strong enough to carry the load themselves. It has done as much for industry, labor, and transportation; why should it not do as much for agriculture until it extricates itself from its present condition?

When such assistance is rendered agriculture, prosperity will be diffused and prevail, your mines will continue to operate and produce their output, your mills will continue to run full time, your factories will continue to hum with industry and happiness, your building campaign will enlarge and gather momentum and go forward, your cities will build and further extend, confidence in business and in the Government will be restored, and the Nation will again be in the enjoyment of a world's peace and prosperity—a prosperity which will be basic and fundamental in its quality and character and lasting and permanent in its effect.

THE NATION'S HONORED HEAD

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker—

> Can storied urn, or animated bust,
> Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
> Can honor's voice provoke the silent dust,
> Or flatt'ry soothe the dull, cold ear of death?

Woodrow Wilson has passed on. His troubled spirit is at rest. No more will his soul be tortured by the limitations of a man. He voiced the idealism of the world—at least a hundred years in advance of his time—in advance of the capacity of nations to execute. He was a crusader with as knightly and chivalrous a mein and as lofty a purpose as ever set out on a perilous journey to the Holy Land. His was to keep the way open for the poor and downtrodden of the earth in their upward climb for equality and liberty. His idealism framed the issue of our entrance into the world's great war—"We must make the world safe for democracy."

By virtue of his office he became Commander in Chief of the greatest army ever raised up in the championship of any cause in the history of the world. The greatest in its numbers, in its loyalty to country, in its intelligence, and most deadly efficiency upon the field of actual conflict. When all seemed lost and the Allies stood with their backs to the wall—in position occupied, in morale or fighting force, in necessary finances—the American Army turned the tide and saved the day for self-government in the world. From Commander in Chief of this great and victorious Army, Woodrow Wilson became the world's champion for peace. Rescued from the deadly menace of invasion and exploitation, his countrymen could not visualize the practical execution of his peace program for the prevention of future wars. It was then he entered the forum of discussion, and in his efforts to overcome the opposition, to persuade and educate the people up to the required degree for its adoption, he sacrificed his life for peace and against war. He therefore became a war and peace casualty.

It is the law of mankind that the living, however great and good, shall not be permitted to enjoy to the full the merited appreciation they deserve. And since the death of Woodrow Wilson millions mourn. With his looming greatness uncertainty increases as to his most fitting resting place. This should not be. Let it be beside the Unknown Soldier, whose commander he was, in his own democratic simplicity, side by side, so that all future generations may see the humility of the great and the greatness of the humble typically representing equality and democracy, side by side.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the veto message.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on adjusted compensation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to these extensions, I suppose it is confined entirely to gentlemen's own remarks?

Mr. SABATH. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the reservation that extension shall be confined to Members' own remarks.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNELL. I am willing to allow a man to extend his own remarks, but not to insert editorials from various papers.

VETO MESSAGE—ADJUSTED COMPENSATION BILL

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, in voting for this bill when it was passed by the House of Representatives some time ago I stated that I was doing so because I had been requested to do so by National Commander Quinn, State Commander General Edwards, and representatives of other veterans' organizations in the United States and in my home State. I wish to reiterate that statement in connection with my vote to override the President's veto.

As a member of the House Committee on Ways and Means, which had to do with drafting this legislation, I had hoped consideration of adjusted compensation would be raised above the level of petty partisan politics. Adjusted compensation has been an issue in Republican and Democratic National Conventions for the past five years, and is the child of no particular party. Accordingly it was reasonable for me to expect that my committee would proceed to the consideration of adjusted compensation without any resort to party politics, and I entered the hearings on the bills with that expectation. To the discredit of the Republican members of that committee, however, adjusted compensation was made a political football, and Democratic members of the committee were denied any part in the framing of a bill. Further than that, representatives of veterans' organizations were led to believe that the efforts of Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means to have drafted a genuine adjusted compensation bill were sinister designs against the success of any bill. This insidious campaign had its effect in the subsequent indorsement of the present bill by authorized representatives of the veterans' organizations—indorsement secured by duress and implied threats that no other adjusted compensation legislation could be enacted. If the Republican Party in the United States can stoop to such shallow methods in fulfilling its pledges as it has in the instance of this legislation, the day is at hand when the Republican Party will be taught, as was the German Emperor by the World War veterans, that a solemn pledge is just as sacred as a treaty between governments.

I would like the opportunity of voting for an adjusted compensation bill which would hit the bull's-eye of the wishes of the people of the United States and properly dispose of this important question. By steam-roller methods the Republican Party has denied me this opportunity. I have no other course but to surrender my individuality in order to record myself consistently as in favor of adjusted compensation for World War veterans. In this I am fortified in the present instance by an editorial appearing Thursday, May 15, 1924, in the Boston Evening Transcript, a leading Republican newspaper, published in the same State in which Governor Coolidge signed a State soldier bonus.

THE DUTY OF THE CONGRESS

The House of Representatives we are told received "with absolute silence" the reading of the President's message which accompanied his veto of the bill providing the veterans of the war and their dependents with a modest amount of paid-up insurance. If they expected him to refer to the solemn promise of his predecessor and his party in the campaign of 1920 to write upon the statute books some such law, the Members of the House were doomed to disappointment. For President Coolidge was careful to avoid any reference to this moral and highly pertinent aspect of the case. Here was a campaign pledge concerning the keeping of which he maintained an "absolute silence." Instead of condemning his predecessor and his party for making such a promise and soliciting votes four years ago upon the assumption that if elected to power the promise would be kept, President Coolidge addressed the argument in his message to the economic features of the bill and reserved all of his condemnation for the veterans of the war and their dependents who have advocated the passage of the bill, which originated not with the American Legion but with the leaders in Congress of Mr. Coolidge's own party.

Under all the circumstances, therefore, we think the House of Representatives is to be commended for the dignity and self-restraint and the respect for the exalted office of the Presidency which was shown by Members on both sides of the aisle in receiving such a message from the White House "with absolute silence." Perhaps even the friends of the President found themselves wishing that he had modeled his message on the statesmanlike speech of Senator BORAH against the same bill several weeks ago instead of leaning so heavily upon his inherited Cabinet for counsel.

But the duty of the Senate and the House of Representatives is alike plain and alike imperative. Pass this bill promptly over the veto of the President by the largest vote that can be mustered to its support, regardless of the pressure which may be exerted from any source upon individual Members of either House of Congress, whether in the form of "fear of punishment or hope of reward." For to keep faith with the electorate of an honorable Nation by keeping campaign promises and to deal fairly with the defenders of a rich and mighty Nation and their dependents, regardless of the cost, are aspirations dearer, as we believe, to the hearts of the plain people of the land of Washington and Lincoln and Roosevelt than to pass a hundred tax bills or to elect any President or either party to power. Here and now is the opportunity for the Congress respectfully to remind the President, his people, and their press that "he serves his party best" who "keeps the faith."

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I remember certain solemn words:

And when you come back, you shall have what is left.

Gentlemen, who uttered those words? The answer is: I did; and you did, nearly all of you.

When were they uttered? Why, they were uttered throughout the year 1917 and the year 1918, in all parts of my State, and of all States.

In my State, great, wonderful, honest, square, truthful Illinois, I uttered such words at every Red Cross rally, every Liberty loan meeting, and every going-away occasion that I could get to.

Looking into the eyes, the big honest, questioning eyes of thousands of young men about to leave for the camp, thence to go across the ocean, and then to the march and field of battle—yes, looking into those eyes and feeling upon me the eyes of fathers and mothers and wives and sweethearts who trusted me and showed it—I said such things as this:

THE PLEDGE

"The people of America, 110,000,000 strong, give you the pledge that they—we—will build a bridge of sympathy and support all the way from Yankeeland to No Man's Land and back again, until you are the best fed, the best clothed, the best armed, and the best equipped sailors and soldiers—and the best—the world ever saw, and when you come back you can have what is left."

Of course, there is no use in talking; you all know that that pledge, or its equivalent, was given—given to unnumbered thousands of our bravest and our best—given in the presence of their mothers, their fathers, their wives, or their sweethearts; denial would be idle.

There is only one question, and this is, "Is there or can there be any excuse whatever for failing to keep the pledge?"

All our lives we have talked about pledges and obligations and covenants and promises and vows and oaths of fidelity and loyalty and devotion and consecration, and have been talked to by the hour about such things. And now here is a real obligation. Shall we hesitate? I for one will not. If there ever was a sacred, solemn, binding obligation it is this one, and in the fear of God I intend to keep it.

The only objection seems to be that the Nation can not afford the bonus, or rather that the Nation now owes too much money in the effort to support all our Government activities and bureaus and boards and commissions in addition to the effort to finance Belgium, France, England, and the world.

THE DEBT

Of course, some men say that the soldier ought not to have any bonus—he ought to be thankful to go without any compensation or gift—if he managed to escape, unhit and unhurt, the bullets fired at him by 2,000,000 Germans every five minutes—say 240 bullets for say 500 days—2,000,000 Germans firing in 500 days two hundred and forty times 2,000,000, that is 480,000,000 bullets.

Very few soldiers say such a thing except those independent and well-to-do. As for the men, fat and suave, who sit back in their soft seats in the smokers and sneer at mercenary patriotism and say the country owes no debt to the soldier—I am in favor of a law right now to put right into the Army the very minute the next war begins every man over 31. Why not? The boys went this time, why not the rest of us next time?

Of course, it is all nonsense to assert the soldier has no moral claim. Disabled or not, mutilated or not, wounded or not, destitute or not, he it was who stood between this Nation and this Government and this people on the one hand and the attack of a crowned kaiser on the other who boasted he would ride down Pennsylvania Avenue in the sight of a conquered American people—he it was—our boy! "The kid has gone to the colors. And we don't know what to say." And he it was who from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918—one year and seven months and five days—opened and closed every day with the thought that he had a "rendezvous with death."

And he it was who had about 500 valuable and irrecoverable days taken right out of his young life by law, while his caustic critic of to-day did not sacrifice anything.

Thank heaven Congressmen are not frightened by such critics' cries or by the faces they make.

THE VETO

I do not agree with the words used by the President in his veto message that—

We must either abandon our theory of patriotism or abandon this bill.

I regret that he made such a statement. I can not think he meant it. There must surely be some explanation. I feel sure that the country at large does not concur or approve. I can not believe that the President regards as unpatriotic the 313 of us Representatives here in this House at this moment who are going to vote for this bill over and above the President's veto. I consider myself a patriot, and I so consider my 16 colleagues from Illinois—Mr. Rathbone, of Chicago; Mr. Denison, of Marion; Mr. Hull, of Peoria; Mr. McKenzie, of Galena; Mr. Miller, of East St. Louis; Mr. Fuller, of Belvidere; Mr. King, of Galesburg; Mr. Major, of Hillsboro; Mr. Rainey, of Carrollton; Mr. Funk, of Bloomington; Mr. Kunz, of Chicago; Mr. Michaelson, of Chicago; Mr. Reid, of Aurora; Mr. Arnold, of Robinson; Mr. Sabath, of Chicago; and Mr. Williams, of Flora. Including myself, 17 of the 27 Illinois Congressmen voted against the veto. Nor do I believe that we are excelled in patriotism by Mr. Chindblom and Mr. Graham and Mr. Moore, of Monticello; by Mr. Sproul and Mr. Madden and Mr. Britten and Mr. Hull, of Chicago, all of whom I respect most highly.

And I regard as highly patriotic men such Representatives as:

Mr. Andrew, of Massachusetts; also Connery, Frothingham, Greene, Rogers, and Tague.

Mr. Anthony, of Kansas; also White, and Hoch, and Tincher, and Sproul, and Little, and Ayres, and Strong.

Mr. Barkley, of Kentucky; also Thatcher, and Johnson, and Robsion, and Thomas, and Kincheloe.

Mr. Blanton, of Texas; also Connally, and Garner, and Black, and Sanders, and Mansfield, and Sumners, and Rayburn, and Wurzbach.

Mr. Browne, of Wisconsin; also Cooper, Frear, and Nelson, and Lampert.

Mr. Burtness, of North Dakota; also Young and Sinclair.

Mr. Byrnes, of South Carolina; also McSwain and Stevenson.

Mr. Cannon, of Missouri; also Major and Manlove, Rubey, and Roach.

Mr. Christopherson, of Minnesota; also Larson and Schall.

Mr. Cole, of Iowa; also Green and Dickinson.

Mr. Cooper, of Ohio; also Foster, and General Sherwood, Murphy, and Speaks, Cable, and Thompson.

Mr. Cramton, of Michigan; also Ketcham, and McLeod, and Mapes, and Hudson, and McLaughlin.

Mr. Crisp, of Georgia; also Lee and Upshaw.

Mr. Elliott, of Indiana; also Purnell, and Vestal, Hickey, and Wood, Fairfield, and Sanders.

Mr. Fish, of New York; also LaGuardia, and O'Connell, Perlman, and Crowther, A. D. Sanders, and Reed.
Mr. French, of Idaho; also Smith.
Mr. Gibson, of Vermont.
Major Stedman, of North Carolina.
Mr. Hastings, of Oklahoma; also McKeown, Howard, and Carter, and Hastings, and McClintic, and Swank.
Mr. Morrow, of New Mexico.
Mr. Hawley, of Oregon, also Mr. Sinnott.
Mr. Hadley, of Washington, also Mr. Summers and Mr. Hill.
Mr. Hersey, of Maine, also Mr. Beedy and Mr. White.
Mr. Hill, of Maryland, veteran.
Mr. Bulwinkle, of North Carolina, veteran.
Mr. Johnson, of South Dakota, veteran.
Mr. Reece, of Tennessee, veteran.
Mr. Jeffers, of Alabama, veteran.
Mr. Connery, of Massachusetts, veteran.
Mr. Speaks, of Ohio, veteran.
Mr. Lineberger, of California, veteran.
Mr. Howard, of Nebraska.
Mr. Sanders, of Indiana.
Mr. Sanders, of New York.
Mr. Sanders, of Texas.
Mr. Reed, of Arkansas.
Mr. Reed, of New York.
Mr. Reid, of Illinois.
Mr. Johnson, of Kentucky.
Mr. Johnson, of South Dakota.
Mr. Johnson, of Texas.
Mr. Johnson, of Washington.
Mr. Johnson, of West Virginia.
Mr. Campbell, of Pennsylvania, also Mr. Wyant, Mr. Kelly, Mr. Vare, and Mr. Porter.
Mr. Lazaro, of Louisiana.
Mr. Lea, of California, also Mr. MacLafferty.
Mr. Smithwick, of Florida.
Mr. O'Connell, of New York.
Mr. O'Connell, of Rhode Island.
Mr. O'Connor, of Louisiana.
Mr. O'Connor, of New York.

And I know that there are no men more patriotic than the Senators—59 in number—who are voting to pass this bill over the veto.

"REASONS"

There are numerous reasons for this bill and accordingly reasons for riding over the veto. Among those which appeal to me are the following:

I

1. A debt is owing the ex-soldier and ex-sailor: The war was not won by the uniformed service alone. Capital and labor performed services universally recognized to be as patriotic and necessary to victory as the services of soldiers. Men were legally exempt from military duty on that assumption, and were assured that they rendered the greater service to their country, by remaining apart from the armed forces, as members of the great industrial army which supported the fighting forces.

2. Equal service was not equally rewarded: There was a great discrepancy in pay between those in uniform and the civilian war worker and war contractor—between the members of the fighting forces and those of the industrial forces. This disproportionate payment increased the cost of the war by several billion dollars. To pay this cost a national debt has been incurred.

3. The returned soldier is bearing his share of the burden of paying off this debt, which was contracted for the prosecution of a war, which yielded enormous sums in increased wages and profits to those who stayed at home, but imposed a distinct economic handicap on the soldier.

4. The soldier asks no reward for his services while in uniform. But returning home he asks that, in providing for himself and his family and in bearing his share of the national debt, he be given economic equality with the man who stayed at home. The soldier has not had this equality, because of the superior economic position attained during the war by those who did not go to war, and because they did not go.

5. Therefore a debt is owing, and some adjustment of compensation—or equalization of economic values—is due the soldier to balance the scale in the daily economic struggle between him and his competitor who did not fight and by reason of that fact was able to improve his economic position at the expense of those who did fight.

II

This debt has been acknowledged by the country, and payment has been promised to the veteran.

1. In the national elections of 1920 and of 1922 a majority of the candidates of all parties for national legislative offices campaigned and were elected on platforms which contained the statement that an adjustment of compensation was due the veterans and should be paid. The late President Harding, as a candidate, placed himself explicitly on record as favoring the passage of the adjusted compensation bill. Candidates who declined to go thus on record in nearly every instance were defeated at the polls.

III

The country wants this debt paid.

1. The people of 20 States at general elections have voted in favor of adjusted compensation.

2. The legislatures of 23 States have petitioned Congress to enact the Federal adjusted compensation bill.

3. The governors of 33 States called on the President to sign the adjusted compensation bill when it was before him.

4. The legislatures of 22 States have acted favorably on State legislation of a similar nature.

5. The House of Representatives has passed the adjusted compensation bill three times, the last vote being 333 to 70.

6. The United States Senate, through its Finance Committee, has approved of this bill three times, the Senate as a whole passing it once by a vote of 47 to 22, in 1922. The vote in the Senate this time, May 19, 1924, is 59 to 26.

7. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, a national organization which has been a consistent and active opponent of compensation, polled local chambers of commerce throughout the country on the four options of the bill. The result was 4,116 votes for and 2,657 against adjusted compensation.

8. The American Federation of Labor and many other organizations of large membership have indorsed the bill.

9. In addition to the American Legion, every recognized national organization of war veterans, from the Civil War down, has indorsed the bill and urged its enactment.

IV

The country can afford to pay this debt; the funds are available.

1. In 1921 and again in 1922, though a majority of the American people and a majority of their Representatives in Congress favored the adjusted compensation bill, the measure failed of enactment because of the plea of the Secretary of the Treasury that the finances of the country were not equal to the obligation. If this were the state of affairs in 1921 and 1922, it can not be the state of affairs to-day. The Treasury reported a surplus of $300,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. In his last communication to Congress on the subject the Secretary declared that the surplus for 1924 would be so great as to permit of a reduction of income taxes in the amount of $323,000,000.

2. The officially estimated cost of adjusted compensation is approximately $80,000,000 a year for the first three years. Therefore the Treasury surplus of free funds for 1924 will be enough to pay that year's installment on the Nation's debt to the veterans four times over. Compensation can be paid and taxes reduced $243,000,000 in 1924.

V

1. The bill now before Congress arranged for the payment of this debt in ways which would benefit not only the individuals compensated but the country as a whole.

The veteran who is entitled by reason of his length of service to more than $50 must take his compensation in one of these three ways:

(a) A 20-year endowment paid-up life insurance policy; or
(b) A contribution toward building or paying for a home or a farm or for improvements on a farm; or
(c) A contribution toward a vocational or industrial education; or
(d) If he is entitled to $50 or less, he must accept compensation in cash.

2. The options (a), (b), and (c), which would apply to the preponderant majority of the veterans, represent investments which would make for a better, more stable, and more prosperous citizenship among the 4,000,000 who would benefit by them. They offer no chance by which these values, which represent money that is owing the soldier and which the country desires shall be paid to him, may be dissipated by unwise or uneconomic use or investment. Life insurance, homes, farms, education—the money must go into these things. No sounder investments could be suggested.

3. In the transactions comparatively little actual money will change hands. Credits simply will move from the Treasury into 4,000,000 individual investments in discharge of an actual and acknowledged debt which the Nation owes to 4,000,000 men who bore arms in the World War, and as a consequence suffered an economic disability which can be and should be made good in part without further delay.

VI

1. The United States is not in the habit of repudiating its war obligations. It is an established American custom to adjust the compensation of individuals and economic groups which have sustained financial losses by reason of participation in a war effort. In the last war this custom was observed except in the single instance of the soldiers.

After the Revolutionary War President Washington asked Congress to adjust the compensation of the soldiers, and this was done. President Lincoln did the same after the Civil War. Mr. Lincoln previously had applied for and received his compensation following the Black Hawk War, in which he served as an Infantry captain.

2. During or since the World War an adjustment of compensation, in addition to their regular pay, was paid to Federal civilian employees totaling $225,000,000, and to the civilian employees of the Army and Navy totaling $100,000,000.

3. The Government drafted the railroads during the war and guaranteed them satisfactory profits, and to this end in 1922 settled upon them an adjustment of compensation totaling $764,271,000.

4. War contractors were guaranteed and paid profits which were always fair, frequently liberal, and sometimes exorbitant. Since the war contractors have been paid an additional $700,000,000 in adjusted compensation and these payments are still going on.

5. The returned soldier, despite his economic handicap, is now paying and for four years has been paying his share of the foregoing in addition to the other expenses of the war. All other war debts having been liquidated, and with a surplus in the Treasury, the soldier, who has waited four years, merely asks that what is owing to him be paid now.

CONCLUSION

There has been in some quarters some contention to the effect that this bill raises the question whether party men are going to uphold and stand by their President. I think it is wrong to put the matter in that way. I do not think that there is involved in this situation any question of standing by the President on the one hand or rebuking him upon the other for the sake of party. There is no question of party loyalty or party disloyalty. This bill is not a Republican Party measure. It is being voted for to-day by almost as large a percentage of Democrats as the percentage of Republicans. I think the opponents of the bill are going a long way, and in fact going entirely too far, when they, directly or indirectly, charge that a Republican must vote to sustain the veto or be guilty of disloyalty to his party.

Mr. Speaker, I do not admit that any man in this House is a more loyal Republican than I. I drummed a little drum in 1868 for Grant and Colfax whenever I could get out of my home. In 1872 I drummed a bigger drum for Grant and Wilson. In 1876 I marched in a real drum corps for Hayes and Wheeler, and in 1880, for Garfield and Arthur, I carried my first torch in the beautiful torch-light processions of that year, and in 1884 I was the proud young chairman of a proud young Republican county committee that followed to undeserved defeat James G. Blaine, the plumed knight, and John A. Logan, the black eagle. God bless them. I am for them yet.

And from that day to this no nights have been too dark, no road has been too rough, and no lane has been too long to prevent me from going up and down the State of Illinois from end to end and from side to side advocating the sublime principles of the Republican Party. I believed then, and I believe now, that it is the best party for you and the best party for me and the best party for the American people. I believe that this is so because it is the best business party and the best labor party and the most patriotic party. Whenever the Democratic Party is in power the country is confronted by continued menace. At times the menace has been a threat of free trade; at other times a threat of unsound money. In 1920 the menace took the form of lack of employment for 5,000,000 men. Again and again under Democratic administration we have had the soup house in the city and the tramp army in the country and famine at the fireside, and no one grew any richer but the rich and no help came to the poor. When the Republican Party is in power every furnace fire is burning and every factory wheel is turning and the people are again learning the important lesson that when the Republican Party is in power the American people eat more bread, wear more clothes, own more homes, and have more happiness. I am not deserting that great organization, the Republican Party, when I vote for this soldiers' bonus against the veto of the President. On the contrary, I consider that when I vote for the adjusted compensation I am voting in accordance with the Republican Party, its history of glory, and its bright prospects of renown.

I want it said at the end of my life that this one life, although short and full of shortcomings, was full of loyalty to this old party of Lincoln and Logan; of Sumner, Seward, and Grant; Garfield, Arthur, and Blaine; McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft; yes, and Harding and Coolidge and Dawes.

So far as loyalty to country is concerned, I am willing that the chief witness in my behalf be the American Legion. I am in receipt of a letter from the officers of that Legion, and there is nothing which could be said by any executive, even the highest, which I will cherish and treasure more than this letter of praise and confidence from the American Legion by John Thomas Taylor, national legislative committee, as follows:

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Now that Congress has adjourned, I wish to take this opportunity, on behalf of the American Legion and the ex-service men and women of the World War, to thank you for the splendid manner in which you supported the legislative program in which we were vitally interested.

The present Congress enacted into law the adjusted compensation bill which had been pending for more than four years; the Reed-Johnson bill, extending the benefits of the war risk insurance act to thousands of disabled veterans; and the Fernald-Langley bill, providing sufficient money to complete the hospital building program. These were, of course, all matters of major legislation.

We appreciate the fact that you cast your vote for the adjusted compensation bill when it was before the House, but more particularly do we appreciate the fact that you supported this legislation after it had been vetoed by the President, and in the name of the service men and women of America I wish to thank you for your undeviating adherence to the cause of the veteran. The great mass of the citizens of America desired you to take this action and they now approve it. This has been clearly demonstrated in every instance where the people have voted upon the question.

The progress of human rights in America is the history of clashes of administrative authority with the forward-looking ideas of the chosen representatives of the people. Ever since the election of the House of Burgess at Jamestown in 1619, when the right of taxation by consent of the people alone was established as a fundamental American principle, the representatives of the people have enlarged the scope of human rights only over the protests of administrative authority.

But in spite of the desires of those who would retard progress, the representatives of the people have slowly but surely made additional gains for the right of the constituents whom they represent and to whom they are responsible.

The unfairness in the methods employed by the opposition to this legislation made the task of Congress a difficult one. The avenues of publicity available to them were closed to the advocates of the measure, and the editorial comment often misleading regarding questions of fact and the motives actuating the Congress. The members of the American Legion and the veterans of the World War, understanding these facts, appreciate more deeply the sincere manner in which you supported this legislation.

The Legion will never forget its friends.

CONFERENCE REPORT—NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the naval appropriation bill for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho presents a conference report on the naval appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Idaho if that is a complete agreement?

Mr. FRENCH. It is a complete agreement; yes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

REORGANIZATION OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Speaker to lay before the House the bill H. R. 6357, with Senate amendments, and on those amendments I desire to move to concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls up a House bill with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6357) for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 3, line 5, after the word "appointment," strike out all down to and including "minister" in line 6 and insert, "to some other position in the Government service."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I suggest the Senate amendments be reported.

Mr. BLANTON. On an important matter, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the Senate amendments should be reported.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think——

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman allow the reporting of the amendments?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman this: This bill has been just brought in here, and it has been contested in the House, and we do not know what amendments the Senate has placed on it. Does the gentleman not think he ought to give us time——

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It has been printed in the RECORD for two days.

Mr. BLANTON. Has it not just been brought in from the Senate?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It has.

Mr. BLANTON. Are there additional amendments put on it?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think there are probably four or five minor amendments as to which I have consulted gentlemen——

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] agreed to it?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I do not know about the gentleman from Texas, but I consulted with gentlemen on that side, Mr. LINTHICUM, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to make a motion?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; I move to concur in the Senate amendment just read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 8, line 16, after "gathering" insert: "Provided further, That the Secretary of State is authorized to prescribe a per diem allowance not exceeding $6, in lieu of subsistence for foreign service officers on special duty or foreign service inspectors."

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 3: Page 14, line 15, strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five."

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 4: Page 17, after line 8, insert:

"SEC. 22. The titles Second Assistant Secretary of State and Third Assistant Secretary of State shall hereafter be known as Assistant Secretary of State without numerical distinction of rank; but the change of title shall in no way impair the commissions, salaries, and duties of the present incumbents.

"There is hereby established in the Department of State an additional Assistant Secretary of State who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to compensation at the rate of $7,500 per annum.

"The position of Director of the Consular Service is abolished, and the salary provided for that office is hereby made available for the salary of the additional Assistant Secretary of State herein authorized."

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the effect of that amendment No. 3, to strike out the "25" and insert "50"?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It strikes out "50" and inserts "75." When the bill passed the House it provided that contributions made by foreign service officers who retired voluntarily should be returned to them, 50 per cent, without interest. The Senate provision provides that 75 per cent shall be returned, without interest. That amendment was sponsored by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] and I have conferred with him, and I think I am authorized to state that he is satisfied with the compromise.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the amendment just read be concurred in.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable confusion in the Chamber. This seems to be an amendment creating a new position. I would like to have an explanation of it. I think the temper of the House is against creating new positions unless they are necessary.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This does not create a new position and it creates no new salary. As the gentleman knows, for many years the Director of the Consular Service has been Mr. Wilbur F. Carr. He has been treated as on a level with the Assistant Secretary of State, and he has always had the same salary as the Assistant Secretary of State, namely, $4,500. It gives him the other title and does not increase his salary.

Mr. WINGO. As I heard it read at the desk, I thought it was $7,500. I will ask the gentleman if that is not so?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It provides for a salary of $7,500 after July 1, with the understanding that this will take effect if the reorganization bill or reclassification goes through. The other Assistant Secretaries of State are to receive $7,500.

Mr. WINGO. The net result is a change of title of the man who has been discharging these duties, and makes him an Assistant Secretary, and after July 1 the salary will be $7,500, whereas it is $4,500 now?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; provided the classification law goes through.

Mr. WINGO. It will be a change of title and a change of salary from $4,500 to $7,500 a year. That is the net effect, is it not?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is the net effect.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did the gentleman from Massachusetts call attention to the fact that a member of the minority had concurred in this?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] were conferred with.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am glad to hear that. I had no knowledge of it, although I have been on the floor all the morning.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I would have consulted with the gentleman from Texas if I had seen him.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It seems to me that the gentleman from Massachusetts, in conferring with the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Maryland, has conferred with gentlemen who entertain the same view with himself, but the gentleman from Texas does not entertain the same view. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts think that is fair?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am sorry that I did not see the gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts think the gentleman from Texas should keep himself bodily before the eyes of the gentleman from Massachusetts in anticipation of having Senate amendments to a bill brought on this floor?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I did not think there were any Senate amendments in relation to which the gentleman from Texas had any opposition. The amendments were printed in the RECORD two days and were available to the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. The bill came back only to-day, did it not?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes. I tried to be more than fair with the gentlemen on the minority side.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. When was the bill messaged back from the Senate?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This morning, within a few minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have been in attendance here and have been out of the Chamber only about 20 minutes. I had no knowledge that this matter would be taken up. It may be all right, but as matters stand I can not act intelligently on the subject.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the amendment referring to Mr. Carr. I consider him as a very capable and deserving gentleman. I understand that the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] is right when he states that this amendment does not increase Mr. Carr's salary. The amendment, as I heard it read, states that it shall be changed from $4,500 to $7,500.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This is the only salary that is affected by this bill—Mr. Carr's salary.

Mr. SABATH. But it would be increased from $4,500 to $7,500?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. So that he will be placed on a par with the other Assistant Secretaries?

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I think he is the best man, anyway.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the Members of the House understand that Mr. Carr is a most efficient and hard-working gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to be heard on this amendment for a moment, Mr. Speaker.

This amendment is going to determine the question of policy of the House, in a small way, with respect to economy. This man is now rendering good service for $4,500 a year. His duties are not to be changed by this amendment. He would still perform the same duties, but by it he will have his salary increased from $4,500 to $7,500.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman from Texas where he will get such a man who will continue in the service at such a salary?

Mr. BLANTON. He is performing the service now for $4,500, and on the 1st of July this amendment increases that salary by $3,000 to $7,500. The House ought to go on record on this question. I hope the gentleman will have a roll call on this amendment, and let us determine now whether you are going to carry out the President's so-called policy of economy; whether you are going to stop this raising of salaries, and whether you are going to adopt this amendment increasing this man's salary by $3,000. It is an amendment put on in the Senate and the bill came back to the House just about five minutes ago, was called up immediately and you are now asked to pass it without anybody knowing anything about it. I think we ought to go on record on this amendment, and I intend to force a record vote on it.

Mr. TINCHER. But the forcing of a roll call on this would not help it.

Mr. BLANTON. But it would let the people of the country know who are voting to raise this salary from $4,500 to $7,500.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Who voted for the bonus?

Mr. BLANTON. I did and I am not ashamed of it, but I voted against the $11,500,000 Cape Cod bill; I voted against giving our $100,000,000 Muscle Shoals away——

Mr. COLE of Iowa. So did I.

Mr. BLANTON. And I voted against the bill for $10,000,000 German relief, as well as other extravagant propositions.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. How did this matter get before the House—by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. No; it is a House bill with Senate amendments.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In the regular course ought not these amendments go to the committee?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is not that the regular parliamentary procedure?

The SPEAKER. No; this is a House bill with Senate amendments and it can be called up at any time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I want to get some time. I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] has the floor and I ask the gentleman to yield me five minutes.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this amendment should be agreed to or not. I understand that this man is possibly the best man in the State Department, but, gentlemen, here is the situation you are facing: We are now coming to the close of this session, and I have seen this thing happen for 11 years, and you are going to get in trouble if you continue the policy that is represented by the procedure on this bill. We just had a very interesting measure up for consideration, the veto of the President of the bonus bill. There was a great deal of confusion and Members got up and left to go to lunch and a lot of them had already gone out. Amidst that confusion the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]—who, necessarily, by reason of his character and his service, commands the respect of the House—gets up and calls up this bill. No one opposed it being called up, and, as I recall, under the rules he had the right to do it though the impression was he was calling up a conference report. But the bill on which the gentleman wants action and on which we are now acting, so far as the amendments of the Senate are concerned, has just been presented to the House. Amidst the confusion of Members leaving after the roll call on the bonus bill, a message from the Senate comes in with multitudinous measures messaged over from the Senate and among the group was this bill with certain Senate amendments. The gentleman from Massachusetts immediately called it up. I contend that is not conducive to orderly legislation. If I had time to consider this matter, and the members of the committee who say they are opposed to this kind of legislation had had an opportunity to consider it and discuss it, it may be that I should vote for it. But, gentlemen, I am not going to vote for amendments which are brought up on the spur of the moment, with the ranking member of the committee, who holds contrary views to the gentleman who brings it up, absent from the Hall and not having had an opportunity to consider it and advise with those who agree with his views and his judgment on the bill. That does not look to orderly discussion and procedure by this House. It brings confusion, and if it is attempted on some other bill, however unpopular such action may be, I shall resort to every parliamentary tactic and filibuster to prevent such hasty consideration of a measure. I shall not do it now, but I shall content myself with expressing my doubt by simply voting no, although I might on consideration—and I am inclined to think I should—agree that it is a meritorious proposition.

There are a lot of men in the service, good men, who ought to have their salaries raised but they ought not to be raised by a rider put on in the Senate, one man at a time and piecemeal.

We have attempted to reclassify, and I suspect the reclassification will cover this.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. It does.

Mr. WINGO. I do not know. But the Senate, instead of picking out one favorite man and saying, "We are going to jump his salary from $4,500 to $7,500," should do it in an orderly way, so that those public servants who are less popular by reason of their not being in touch with Members of the House can get their just demands for adequate compensation considered by the House, and all of them placed on an equality. That is the way to treat these deserving public servants who are underpaid—consider all of them and not consider just a few favored ones by piecemeal amendments of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. I understand this first amendment raises Mr. Carr's salary.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment properly goes to the Committee of the Whole, because it increases salaries and therefore is a charge on the Treasury. I cite subdivision 2, Rule XXIV.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when the gentleman from Massachusetts rose the Chair had no knowledge of what his purpose was in getting the floor. The gentleman had not notified the Chair in advance and the Chair recognized him, and then he called this bill up. The Chair thinks it is now too late to make that point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the Chair will permit the gentleman from Texas to make the observation, the Chair must have been more considerate of the gentleman from Massachusetts than other gentlemen, because usually he inquires for what purpose does the gentleman rise, and I recall that only several days ago when the gentleman from Mississippi rose and the Chair courteously gave him the floor and then found out that the gentleman was making a request the Chair did not think proper, the Chair then withdrew the recognition and said that the gentleman must first consult the Chair before making such request, and in all fairness, I suggest it might be well for the Chair——

The SPEAKER. The Chair assumed the gentleman from Massachusetts had arranged with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who was entitled to recognition, to bring the matter up.

Mr. SNELL. If the Chair will allow me to make the observation, I understood it was a regular conference report and that I could not object. I object to anything else coming up except the regular unfinished business.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. I may be wrong, but it occurs to me that the Speaker is in error when he says it is now too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not sure.

Mr. WINGO. I want to refresh the Chair's mind. I may be in error, but I think it is too important a matter to pass by in this way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. WINGO. The customary procedure when a matter comes up, if it is a matter that requires consideration in the Committee of the Whole, is to ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I want to suggest to the Chair that I think it would be a very unwise precedent to establish, if it has not been already established, especially with the confusion that obtained, and while I am not criticizing the gentleman from Massachusetts, yet in the confusion that existed here the chairman of the Rules Committee really thought this was a conference report.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I thought.

Mr. WINGO. I thought that, too. If I had not thought it was a conference report, there would have been some question on my part in the absence of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] on this side. I think the Chair ought to rule now that the point can be raised at any time in reference to a bill that makes a charge on the Federal Treasury, and that it is not too late now. We have just started its consideration, and I do not think it is too late now to say that this is a charge upon the Treasury, and the House has to go into Committee of the Whole to consider it.

The SPEAKER. The parliamentary clerk is looking up the precedents.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I had not finished my citation.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to state the way this came about? The Chair did not know what was coming up, and assumed that the gentleman from Massachusetts had arranged with the gentleman from New York, who was beside him and whom the Chair had expected to recognize, to bring up this bill; and when the gentleman from Texas asked the Chair the question the Chair supposed it was a matter that did not require consideration in the Committee of the Whole. The question now is whether, once consideration has begun, it is too late. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. This is what the rule says——

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I interrupt the gentleman? Perhaps I can simplify this procedure. I frankly, Mr. Speaker, intended to do only what I thought would be the will of the House. If I have inadvertently erred in any respect, I am extremely sorry. If it is in order, I should be glad to ask unanimous consent that action upon this amendment be postponed until such time next week as it would clearly be in order under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. It might not be in order at that time without unanimous consent.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It is a House bill with Senate amendments. Is not that in order after the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. Not if the amendment must be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I took this Senate amendment to be an authorization and not an appropriation. I assumed it was privileged, but I do not wish to have any Member of this House think I am trying to crowd this matter unfairly. I ask unanimous consent, in deference to the apparent preferences of several Members, that I may be permitted to withdraw this temporarily.

Mr. BLANTON. With the understanding, Mr. Speaker, that action on the other two amendments is to be vacated?

The SPEAKER. The other two amendments have been adopted, and the Chair does not know what the purpose of the gentleman is.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if a bill comes back from the Senate that has objectionable matter with reference to the House, it ought to go into Committee of the Whole on all the amendments, and the gentleman ought to ask to vacate action on those two amendments.

The SPEAKER. That is for the gentleman from Massachusets to determine.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I do not think there is any occasion to vacate the action, although if the gentleman from Texas wishes it I will ask that also.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will say this, Mr. Speaker, in all deference to the gentleman from Massachusetts, what I have said and done was not meant as any reflection on the gentleman's intention to put anything by speedily, intentionally, or willfully. I only attribute that to his zeal in the cause. What I have said and done has been to maintain the right of the minority to be consulted about legislation on the floor of this House, and it does not make any difference whether that minority is one or one dozen, and I am referring to those who have minority views on a bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I interrupt to ask if the gentleman desires that the whole proceeding be vacated?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I think it would be better in order not to set a bad precedent.

Mr. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the entire proceedings on the Senate amendments be vacated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the entire proceedings be vacated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the unfinished business is House bill 3318, a bill to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York.

Mr. CAREW. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is not a quorum present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Faust	Lee, Ga.	Schall

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TREADWAY). On this call 332 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were reopened.

PRESIDENT'S VETO OF ADJUSTED COMPENSATION BILL

Mr. JOST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some remarks in relation to the President's veto and my vote in support thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement in regard to his support of the President's veto. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I have no objection if they are the gentlemans' own remarks.

Mr. JOST. They are my own remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOST. Mr. Speaker, following the passage of this measure by the House and as soon as I was permitted so to do, I placed of record the reasons which moved me to vote for it. Those who may be interested to the point of referring to that statement will there learn that I regarded the measure not as a bonus but in the nature of a preliminary pension, and I voted for it on that theory. Sooner or later pensions on a huge scale will be paid to veterans of the late war and their dependents. Whether the task of meeting that inevitable obligation should be begun now by some such measure as the one in hand or postponed until the existing financial burdens of the Government shall have been lightened is the question of the moment for me to answer with my vote.

From my viewpoint, the immediate solution of the problem is not of such overruling importance as to preclude me from voting to sustain the President's veto, and I shall so vote. While my vote is in agreement with the result sought by the veto, I certainly and most vigorously dissent from the statements therein with reference to the ex-service men and their relationship to the Government during and since the war. It seems to me that the language of the veto in that respect is unnecessarily harsh.

The responsibility of running this Government just now is with the Republican Party, of which the President of the United States is the titular head. He has solemnly declared that the instant measure is wrong, that ex-service men as a whole do not want it, that those who do, do not deserve it, and that the country can not afford to pay the cost which the bill will entail. To overrule his veto and thrust this measure on the Government against his protest is to furnish an excuse and cover for the failure of his administration to relieve the people and business from the heavy and distressing taxes which afflict the Nation.

The President speaks for his party. It is now certain he will be the candidate of the Republican Party at the next general election. He has declared positively and unequivocally against a soldiers' adjusted compensation measure in any form. In doing so he made an important and far-reaching decision. The responsibility is his. By sustaining his veto, this presidential policy would become the policy of his party and the subject of a solemn referendum at the next general election. In my humble judgment it is neither good business nor good politics to overrule this veto.

NANCY HANKS LINCOLN

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address I delivered at the dedication of a memorial tree-transplanted from the grave of the mother of Abraham Lincoln in Spencer County, Ind., to the Lincoln Memorial grounds, Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks, I insert a revised address I delivered April 21, 1924, at the dedication of a memorial tree transplanted from the grave of the mother of Abraham Lincoln, in Spencer County, Ind., to the Lincoln Memorial Grounds, Washington, D. C., as follows:

We are gathered here to-day to perpetuate the memory of a mother, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, a woman whose brave, honest, and kindly spirit gave cheer to many struggling pioneers who were making inroads into the wilderness of Kentucky and Indiana.

Here in the shadow of the great Lincoln Memorial, dedicated to her martyred son, we are planting a living memorial to the beloved mother.

The cooperation and enthusiasm exhibited by so many people interested in the transplanting of this tree has been very gratifying. Let us extend our thanks to Lieut. Col. C. O. Sherrill; Mr. F. R. Peters, editor of the Evansville Press; the Boy Scouts of Evansville, Ind., and of Washington, D. C., and their executives; Mr. Noah Spurlock, custodian of the Nancy Hanks Lincoln Memorial Park, at Lincoln City, Ind.; and the school children of southwestern Indiana, for their assistance in the undertaking. It demonstrates their willingness to aid the promotion of any worthy civic or patriotic enterprise.

I have long thought that the people of my district, who have a strong claim to the fame of Abraham Lincoln because he spent several years molding into manhood in Spencer County, Ind., should donate something to the grounds of the Lincoln Memorial, which has become an international shrine, visited daily by hundreds of people from all over the world. This great memorial is not complete without something to remind the traveler and sightseer of Lincoln's mother, who contributed so much to the great President's success and of whom he himself said, "All that I am or hope to be I owe to my sainted mother." Trees have about them something beautiful and attractive to everybody. Hence I could think of nothing that would be more appropriate than this white oak tree from the Nancy Hanks Lincoln Memorial Park, in which Lincoln's mother and sister are buried and of which all Hoosiers are justly proud. Here this tree will grow and expand into a mighty oak as a living memorial to the great American's youthful days spent with his mother in the backwoods of Spencer County, Ind. Only a short distance from the thriving little village of Lincoln City is the final resting place of Nancy Hanks Lincoln.

There the State set aside and maintains a beautiful park dedicated to her memory.

Every time I look at this great monument, unequaled by any in the world, costing thousands and thousands of dollars, erected to the memory of a man whose public life exhibited such brilliant talents and who has become one of the greatest characters in history, it takes me back to the quiet little park resting among the hills of Spencer County. In that vicinity Lincoln spent some of his most trying days, enduring the hardships of the rugged pioneer, endeavoring to obtain an education under the most difficult circumstances, and molding his mind and character so that in later years he was able to deal successfully with the great questions which involved the destiny of the Nation.

Let us briefly review here the history of the Hanks family and the life of Nancy Hanks herself. It seems that all the different branches of the Hanks family come from the old town of Malmsbury in Wiltshire, 96 miles from London. In the year 878, Alfred the Great defeated the Danes, who had overrun the whole Kingdom of the West Saxons. All of the Malmsbury men who fought in this battle under King Alfred were rewarded with 500 acres of land. Among these so-called "commoners" were two brothers named Hanks, whose descendants still hold the "commoner's rights" in Malmsbury, each succeeding king having given them a charter to the land.

A descendant, Thomas Hanks, moved from Malmsbury to Stop-on-the-wold, married and had three children. One, Thomas, jr., married and had a son named Thomas 3d, who is said to have been a soldier under Oliver Cromwell. He had one son, Joseph, who married; and one of the latter's sons, Benjamin, married and came to America, landing at Plymouth, Mass., in 1699.

Interwoven in the annals of New England, we find that members of the Hanks family are remarkably inventive and that it is a "family of founders."

Suffice it to say, that the mother of Abraham Lincoln belonged to a family which has given to America some of her finest minds and most heroic hearts.

One son of Benjamin Hanks, named William, migrated to Virginia. William's son, Joseph, then moved to Amelia County, Va., where Nancy Hanks was born on the 5th of February, 1784. Here she lived until she was five years of age, when her parents decided to find a new home in Kentucky, becoming thus a part of the great migration to that State—the migration which began when Daniel Boone and James Harrod founded Harrodsburg and Boonsborough in 1774–75, and which reached its height during the last 20 years of the eighteenth century.

The journeys were practically all made via the Virginia Valley, through Cumberland Gap, and thence by what was known as Wilderness Road to the Ohio River at Louisville. The Hanks family settled on a farm of 150 acres near Elizabethtown, in what is now Nelson County, Ky. The Indians were still disputing the rights of the white people to Kentucky, and it was necessary for settlers to live in stockades. Shortly after her father's death in 1793 Nancy's mother died, and Nancy went to live with her aunt, Mrs. Richard Berry.

On June 12, 1806, when Nancy Hanks was 22 years old, she was married to Thomas Lincoln, a cousin, in a log cabin in Beechland, Washington County, near the town of Springfield, Ky., by Jesse Head, a Methodist minister of Springfield. After their marriage they went to Elizabethtown, where a child was born, named Sarah, in 1807. They then moved to Buffalo, Ky., where a son was born to them, whom they named Abraham, a name common in both the Hanks and Lincoln families.

Thomas Lincoln, like his son after him, had a notion that fortunes could be made by trips to New Orleans on flatboats. It was probably about 1815 that he built a flatboat, which, because of an idea which he had about making water crafts speedy, was high and narrow and very unsuccessful at the time because of lack of ballast. He loaded this boat with a cargo of whatever he could gather from his farm, and also of deer, bear, and buffalo furs, and floated down Salt River into the Ohio, which was flushed from recent rains and full of whirlpools and snags. Before he reached the Mississippi River, however, his boat upset. He was able to save his tool chest and part of his cargo only because he was near the Indiana shore. He stored what he had saved under the bank and went home afoot, and in debt to the neighbors who had helped him. In those days, though, people never pressed a man who had lost by Indians or by water. Later Mr. Lincoln made a trip into Indiana, prospecting for new land, and returned home to sell and move to that State.

His son wrote in later years, "This removal was partly on account of slavery but chiefly on account of difficulty in land titles in Kentucky." It might be stated here that Thomas Lincoln had advanced ideas about slavery.

In the year 1816 the family prepared to leave Kentucky. They packed their household furniture and farm tools into a wagon. Whatever of stock they owned was driven behind, and the procession started. The first part of their journey probably was not difficult, for it is claimed that the road to the Ohio was good. After crossing the river and entering Indiana their pilgrimage, no doubt, became troublesome. They then had to literally cut their way through the forests to the land which Thomas Lincoln had taken up for himself and his family.

This land lay in what is now Spencer County, Ind., on Little Pigeon Creek, about 15 miles north of the Ohio River, about 35 miles east of Evansville, Ind., and 1½ miles east of Gentryville, Ind. The hardships of the Lincoln family began after Indiana was reached and their camp in the wilderness, which was to be their shelter, was built.

Their first home was what was called "a half-faced camp"—a kind of log lean-to without doors or windows.

The winters of 1816 and 1817 were spent in this camp. The next year Thomas Lincoln built a crude cabin which was sufficient shelter. The family began to find new friends and neighbors in that far-distant country. They joined the Pigeon Creek Baptist Church and gradually became associated in whatever interested the neighborhood.

Several of Nancy's friends and relatives moved to Indiana, and the new home became more interesting as it became more habitable.

History tells us that Nancy Hanks was bright, scintillating, noted for her keen wit and repartee, and withal a great, loving heart. Her gentleness and brightness she left everywhere she went, like a ray of sunshine. Such a woman, who can face and surmount difficulties with a smile and be ever willing to lend others a helping hand, is the kind which gives us our sturdy Americans and gives power and vitality to our race.

On October 5, 1818, after an illness of a few days, she died from an intensified form of malaria. Death in the home was a peculiarly intimate thing for those early settlers; for the body lay in the room where they ate and slept, and it was necessary for the family to make all the preparations for the funeral as well as to make the coffin itself. It was customary for people of the community to attend the funeral of one of their numbers; but at this time an epidemic of malaria was raging through all of southern Indiana, and people did not dare to congregate. So the little woman was laid to rest without a funeral service under the golden autumn leaves in a lonely and yet enchanted spot on top of a hill near what is now Lincoln City—there where Nancy Hanks Lincoln and her boy had often sat together and watched the gorgeous colors of the glorious sunset far over the distant hills.

Although she gave her life as a victim to the same grinding poverty in which Abraham Lincoln grew from boyhood to manhood, and although it was, no doubt, her early influence which made of Abraham Lincoln the great man that he was, no monument has been erected in Washington to Nancy Hanks Lincoln.

The appropriateness of such a monument is obvious. And what could be more fitting than this memorial oak transplanted from that hallowed soil in Indiana to this position beside the massive monument in memory of her martyred son?

While only the eve of her life was lived in Indiana, yet the story of the inroads made into the wilderness of that State by Nancy Hanks and her little family will live to eternity.

With these things in mind plans were formulated and permission was granted by the War Department for the transplanting of this tree. Mr. Peters, of the Evansville Press, proposed to secure the tree and sought the cooperation of Mr. Zion, the Scout executive. Representatives of 14 Boy Scout troops were gathered, and they started from Evansville on Friday, April 4, 1924, at 4 p. m. They reached Tennyson, Ind., without mishap, but after that they not only walked a good portion of the way from Tennyson to Lincoln City, which is 12 miles, but pushed the two cars they had taken with them. The lights on one of the cars failed and a flash light was used.

Three miles out of Lincoln City the automobiles had to be abandoned, and the party plodded through the mud on foot the rest of the trip. Lincoln's spirit must have smiled kindly upon the courage of these boys, trudging the last long miles of an arduous journey to his old home to help perpetuate the memory of the mother whom he loved so well. The muddy and tired, but cheerful, party of 14 boys and 2 men had been invited to bunk in Mr. Wayne Hevron's barn, and there they slept soundly during the remainder of the night.

Mr. Noah Spurlock, custodian of the Nancy Hanks Lincoln Park, had the tree ready for its journey to the Capital. Working in shifts, the boys started back, hoping that they would be able by the light of day to make the journey back to Tennyson without having to walk and push. The party arrived in Evansville late in the afternoon of April 5, and the tree was shipped immediately to Washington, arriving on Tuesday, April 8, where it was received by Mr. Henlock, the superintendent of the Propagating Gardens, and the Washington Boy Scouts, under the supervision of their executive, Mr. E. D. Shaw.

To-day we plant this 10-year-old white oak tree in memory of the noble woman, the products of whose hardships and perils are commemorated by this magnificent memorial dedictated to her great son.

We have taken this tree from the soil hallowed by the possession of her mortal remains, and are transplanting it on memorial grounds established for the sole purpose of bringing mankind into the great nature of her martyred son.

May this memorial oak in future years become beautiful in its majestic grandeur. May it send out its branches to the heavens and rival its ancestors which grew on the Lincoln farm in Indiana. May it become an important addition to these grounds, beneath whose shade future tourists may stop and be reminded of the woman whose strong but gentle influence played such an important part in molding the character of one of our greatest Americans.

I now christen you Nancy Hanks Lincoln Memorial Oak.

A PLAN TO PREVENT WAR

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in explanation of a joint resolution I have introduced proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. I have no objection if they are the gentleman's own remarks.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They are my own remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have just introduced a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 266) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in the following language:

Amendment —.

SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to declare war, provided three-fourths of the Members elected to and constituting each House shall concur.

SEC. 2. After a declaration of war and prior to the reestablishment of peace the Congress shall have power to enact legislation for the prosecution of such war, notwithstanding existing contracts made after ratification of this amendment.

The proposed amendment has for its purpose the prevention of war. This greatly desired end is to be accomplished by mobilizing the forces in America in an effort to prevent war rather than in the preparation for war.

The amendment, if adopted, will accomplish the following:

1. Will make it more difficult to declare war;

2. Will give Congress power to draft property and material as well as men; and

3. Will make it possible to prevent any man or interest from making profit out of war.

4. With this amendment adopted, all contracts will be made subject to "acts of God" and "declarations of war by the Congress of the United States."

At this time the majority of a quorum in each House can declare war. Under the proposed amendment such a declaration can be made only by the vote of three-fourths of the total membership elected to and constituting each House of Congress.

Congress now has power to draft and force into war boys, men, and even women; but it is not certain that Congress has the power to enact laws to provide that all the profits of war can be used in defraying the expenses of war.

Powerful interests, such as shipbuilders, armor plate and munition makers, and manufacturers of war supplies, and all who thrive on war, will oppose this amendment; but in the event of its adoption all peoples and institutions which prosper in peace and are injured by war will join in an effort to stop war throughout the earth.

With the amendment in force and in the event a defensive war is necessary, the whole resources of the country—men, money, material, and property—will be subject to mobilization by Congress to repel such invasion.

With profits withdrawn from war; with property subject to draft and mobilization the same as men; with contracts which interfere with the prosecution of war abrogated, suspended, or annulled; and with the possibility of a general moratorium being declared, warfare will be so terrible and so costly to the interests which bring about armed conflicts that war will soon become a memory of barbaric activity.

At present the United States, along with other Nations, is getting ready for the next war. We are spending hundreds of millions annually in preparation for the next "carnival of slaughter." The next war will not be confined to battles between armed and trained soldiers, but instead will be a war of destruction of property and of extermination of people, including noncombatants, women, and children.

I have introduced this proposed amendment in the hope that the attention of the people may be diverted from the preparation for war to the prevention of war, and unless this can be accomplished, this generation, without regard to sex or age, may see a conflict the horribleness of which the human mind can not now comprehend.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3318) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges for the district court in the southern district of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3318) to provide for the appointment of two additional Federal judges for the district court of New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CAREW) there were 44 ayes and 55 noes.

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll. All those in favor of going into Committee of the Whole will answer "aye" and all those opposed will answer "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 161, nays 158, not voting 114, as follows:

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3318, with Mr. LEHLBACH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judges of said district.

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the southern district of New York comprises the counties of New York, Westchester, Columbia, Dutchess, Greene, Orange, Putnam, Rockland, Sullivan, and Ulster. The population of this district, according to the census of 1920, is 3,801,364, and the population of this district has increased considerably since the taking of the 1920 census.

The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York has six permanent judges. This bill proposes that two additional permanent judges shall be appointed for this judicial district.

At the close of June 30, 1923, there were pending in this court 24,724 civil and criminal cases.

The following is a statement of business transacted in the United States district court, southern district of New York, during the fiscal year ending on June 30, 1923:

Cases	Commenced during year	Terminated during year	Pending June 30, 1923
Civil suits to which United States is not a party:
Equity	845	477	1,151
Law	648	566	2,184
Admiralty	787	819	3,518
Civil suits to which United States is a party	1,159	750	3,773
Bankruptcy proceedings	2,471	1,615	5,262
Total civil suits and proceedings	5,610	4,227	15,888
Criminal cases	2,919	2,559	8,836
Total civil and criminal cases	8,529	6,785	24,724

In addition there were on the motion calendar of this court during this fiscal year 15,084 motions, divided as follows:

General motions	4,117
Motions in bankruptcy cases	5,306
Final hearings in naturalization	5,661

During the six months from July 1 to December 31, 1923, the net increase in the cases awaiting trial, exclusive of prohibition and bankruptcy cases, was as follows: (This was the net increase in cases added to the general calendar from cases disposed of during that period):

Equity	70
Law	38
Admiralty	324
Criminal	482

I am reliably informed that a case on the equity calendar in this court is reached in not less than 16 months; a case on the law calendar, two years and four months; a case on the admiralty calendar, two years and six months. Many criminal cases have been on the calendar more than two years. The jury, admiralty, and equity calendars are about two years behind and on account of increased litigation the situation is daily growing worse. This congestion amounts to a denial of justice.

There was a hearing on this bill before the Committee on the Judiciary on February 13, 1924. At this hearing Mr. Henry D. Williams, representing the New York Patent Law Association, appeared and spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Williams informed the committee that because of the congestion many patent cases are not brought in the southern district court, for it is impossible to get the amount of care and thought and attention that such patent cases require, and that citizens residing in this district are compelled to bring the patent cases in Chicago, Pittsburgh, and sometimes in San Francisco. You can appreciate that the expense incident to the bringing of witnesses from New York to Chicago, to Pittsburgh and San Francisco, makes this litigation unnecessarily expensive. This additional expense to the litigants is of no benefit to anyone and is an inexcusable waste of money.

Hon. Henry Wade Rogers, senior United States circuit judge, second judicial district, wrote to Representative OGDEN L. MILLS, the introducer of this bill, as follows:

I am writing you in reference to a bill now pending either in the House of Representatives or before the Judiciary Committee of the House which relates to the appointment of two additional Federal judges in the southern district of New York.

The situation in the southern district is one of the matters which came before the judicial conference at its meeting in Washington in September, 1923. The judicial conference, as you know, is composed of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the senior circuit judge in each of the nine circuits of the United States.

After a full consideration the conference voted in favor of the appointment of two additional judges for the southern district and two additional circuit judges for the eighth circuit. This action was taken by a unanimous vote.

In the southern district of New York the situation is most serious. On the 1st of July, 1923, there were 25,000 cases on the docket. This means that a case is on the docket for two years before it can be heard. We have been doing everything in our power to relieve that congested condition and brought in during the preceding year such district judges from other districts as we could find free to come. With all our efforts in that year, instead of reducing the number of cases on the docket, there were a thousand additional cases at the beginning of the next year.

That being the condition, it is evident that in many cases a situation exists which amounts to a denial of justice.

This is a condition which ought not to be permitted to continue. Perhaps better than any other person, I know the difficulties of bringing in additional judges, and I am entirely satisfied that there is no way out to remedy the existing situation except through the appointment of at least two additional district judges in the southern district of New York.

Col. William Hayward, United States attorney for the southern district of New York, recently wrote as follows:

There is no question that the two judges asked for in this district is a most modest request. We are two or three years behind on our calendars, and although the chief justice has tried to get us additional judges to help out from other districts, they are few and far between. We have so many mail-fraud cases awaiting trial that I despair of ever reaching them. Each case takes several weeks, sometimes as much as six weeks, consuming the entire time of judge and jury. The Sherman Act cases are equally long. The prosecution of the Cement Trust, which resulted in a disagreement, took seven weeks. We ordinarily have one or at best two of the Federal judges assigned for criminal work. Judge Mack, who has been of great help to us, I understand is going to Cincinnati. We could use four times the number of judges suggested for the next two years and then only catch up with our calendars. I think Judge Hand, who makes the assignment of the judges, has done the best for me he can without neglecting or interfering with the very important work of the judges. Of course, you know of the burden of admiralty, patent, and other civil litigation they have. On the question of additional judges I feel like yelling, "Help, more help, and still more help."

There are now sitting in this district 10 Federal judges. Next month we are to have 11 judges.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERLMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The four extra judges come from other districts?

Mr. PERLMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And they are allowed additional compensation?

Mr. PERLMAN. Yes.

Since January 1, 13 judges from outside of the southern district of New York were assigned to the southern district of New York. Each received, in addition to his salary, $10 per day computed from the day the judge left his home to the day he returned to his home, and railroad and Pullman fares. The judge takes with him his stenographer, who, in addition to his salary, receives $4 per day, plus railroad and Pullman fares.

Now, in respect to the cost of the two additional judges the salaries of these two judges will be $15,000, and the salaries of their stenographers will be $3,680, making a total of $18,680 per year.

In this connection permit me to read a statement of the cost of the assignment of outside judges to this district, submitted to the Judiciary Committee by Mr. George E. Strong, chief clerk of the Department of Justice. It is as follows:

From January 1, 1921, to June 4, 1923, expense of travel and per diem for judges assigned to the southern district of New York from without the second circuit, under the provisions of the act of October 3, 1913 (38 Stat. 302), is $17,088.12; expense of stenographers to judges is $8,104.23; total, $25,192.35; in addition, there are stenographic assistants and incidental expenses which it is impossible to compute. There is also an item of expense due to loss of time on the part of judges when traveling to and from New York City.

The expense for the other assignments which are authorized by the act of September 14, 1922, is not available at the present time, as same would require a search of records by the marshals of the several districts.

The estimated expense for two additional judges in the southern district of New York is as follows: Salaries of judges ($7,500 each), $15,000; salaries of stenographers ($1,840 each), $3,680; total, $18,680.

It is only fair to add that in view of the general congestion throughout the United States it is most difficult to secure an available judge, and often delays occur pending the consent of the senior circuit judge and the district judge; furthermore, whenever the congestion is of a permanent nature same should be cared for by the creation of additional judges, and the provisions for assignment from one circuit to another should only be utilized to relieve congestion of a temporary character, where the general business of the district would not be sufficient to occupy all the time of an additional judge. However, if it were not for these assignments the congestion in the southern district of New York would be even more serious than exists at present.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Is it not a fact that in addition to the judges' salaries we will have to get them court rooms and various attendants?

Mr. PERLMAN. No. The court rooms are there now. Last year for five months the Department of Justice paid to the outside judges and their stenographers for their per diem allowance the sum of $25,192.35, and in addition their Pullman and railroad fare. At that rate it cost the Government nearly $70,000 a year, while the cost of these two additional judges, including stenographic service, will be $18,680 per year.

Yesterday the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] spoke in opposition to this bill, stating that there was no need for any additional judges in this district. The gentleman's district is not in the southern district of New York. The gentleman lives in and represents a district in the eastern district of New York, where there is no congestion. Permit me to read to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] and to the other Democrats from New York, all of whom are opposing this bill, the testimony of one of their colleagues [Mr. WELLER], who is a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WELLER is an attorney and has practiced extensively in the southern district court. Until yesterday he advocated the passage of this bill. To-day he is not participating in the debate, and I believe he will vote against the bill. I wonder who changed his mind. Permit me to read his testimony at the hearings before the Judiciary Committee on February 13, 1924:

Mr. WELLER. I only want to supplement, Mr. Chairman, the remarks of Mr. Williams in reference to the condition of business and to indicate that in communications in writing from all our judges in the southern district, including the circuit judges, we have letters from all the judges approving additional judges, and up in my office I have possibly more than 150 letters from members of the bar who, like myself, practice especially in the Federal courts.

On December 31, 1923, there were approximately 25,000 actions pending in the southern district, of which 7,000 are matters which we call ex parte matters, or matters which can be threshed out by the lawyers before referees in bankruptcy, and all kinds of patent cases in which a sitting court is not required, there being 13,143 cases on the docket on December 31, divided into 561 equity cases, 1,647 law cases, 1,803 admiralty cases, 6,495 criminal cases, exclusive of prohibition cases, cases under the prohibition law, 2,610, making a total of 13,143.

The condition of the calendar is little short of a scandal.

Mr. MICHENER. Those 6,000 plus criminal cases—are many of those cases—cases which have been on the calendar a long time and are carried along?

Mr. WELLER. I dare say 25 per cent have been on the calendar for five years.

Mr. MICHENER. Those will not be tried, will they, the criminal cases?

Mr. WELLER. In all probability, no. Many of those cases consist of what we call mail-fraud cases, and the average time it takes to try a mail-fraud case is over two weeks and as long as eight months, and those cases have been piling up, and I might say we have tried, the Chief Justice has tried, and the senior circuit judge of our district, Judge Rogers, has tried to get out-of-town judges from other States to come and dispose of the so-called fraud calendar. Inasmuch as they are prolonged cases there is no disposition, I might say, for out-of-town judges to come and take up that calendar. Not only is there no disposition on the part of the judge, but on the part of the senior circuit judge of the court of which he is a member, to permit him to sit there any length of time.

The matters that are attended to by judges, especially bankruptcy hearings and the motion calendar, keep a judge busy practically all day and all night. I am not stressing the statement when I say—and I think my colleague, Mr. PERLMAN, will concur in what I say—that on the motion call in room 231 of the Post Office Building it is almost impossible to get to the door, let alone to get inside of the door. The people who are in the court at that time are not litigants; they are lawyers and lawyers' clerks who have come up to answer matters ready for argument, and time is fixed during the day when certain parts of the calendar may be taken up and lawyers able to get to a point before the bar where they can be heard by the judge.

I am not going to take up any further time. Mr. MILLS's bill has the recommendation of the Chief Justice, the President of the United States, the Attorney General, the district attorney, and all of the circuit judges of our district.

I would like to file in the record, Mr. Chairman, just a few letters—one from Judge Rogers, one from Judge Goddard, and one from Mr. I. Maurice Wormser, who is the editor in chief of the New York Law Journal and professor of law, and then the letter of the district attorney, Colonel Hayward.

I think that on the merits of this question the Democrats from New York ought to be guided by the testimony of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WELLER], a member of the Judiciary Committee, rather than by what has been said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

It occurs to me that the Democrats who are opposed to this bill, especially those from the city of New York, are not concerned about the congestion in this court and the denial of justice. I think that they are opposed to this bill because if it is enacted into law President Coolidge will appoint the two judges. I am certain that the people of the United States and the people of New York have confidence in President Coolidge and are satisfied that he will appoint conscientious, honest, and competent judges.

I believe that it will be of interest to you to know the comparison of the business of the southern district court with that of the district courts having the next largest amount of business:

Business of United States district courts

Since June 30, 1923, the calendar of prohibition cases in this court has been greatly increased. This particularly is due to the fact that prior to that day the New York State Legislature repealed the Mullen-Gage law, which was New York State's prohibition enforcement act. The repeal of this law transferred to the United States district court all prohibition cases. The following is a telegram which I have just received from the chief clerk of the southern district court:

Replying to your second telegram, 511 prohibition and 106 other criminal cases on calendar Monday, May 12. On Monday, May 19, we will have 611 prohibition cases and 97 other criminal cases on calendar in court room 331.

Recently the naturalization service in New York County was reorganized, and since May 12, 1924, nearly all naturalization cases are heard by the United States district court judges of the southern district of New York. This has added considerably to the work of the judges of this court. I recently wrote to Mr. Charles M. Weiser, deputy clerk of the United States District Court of the Southern District of New York, to ascertain the volume of naturalization work of this court. Mr. Weiser replied to me as follows:

Final hearings in naturalization are conducted once a week and the calendars are increasing in length as the months progress. Since talking with you on Saturday it has developed that the local bureau of naturalization contemplates confining naturalization activities at this point to United States courts, which will mean naturalization calendars of 400 cases each final-hearing day. The demand this will impose on the time of the judiciary is apparent.

It has always been possible to keep the naturalization calendars precisely up to date in this court, whereas in the State courts in this county and Kings they are a year and two years, respectively, in arrears. With our present complement of judges, under the conditions the contemplated changes will bring about, this court will soon reach the condition of chaos which now obtains in the several State courts.

Mr. HARDY. And will the employment of these two judges help to enforce the prohibition law?

Mr. PERLMAN. If we do not have these two additional judges, it will be difficult to speedily try all cases.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] said that if there was a willingness to work on the part of some of the judges of this court that the equity docket would be cleared quickly. I am very much surprised that the gentleman makes this statement, for he ought to know that the judges of this court are the hardest-worked judges in the United States. Every one of them is either in his chambers or in a court room from about 9 o'clock in the morning until late in the evening. All of them have at all times done more than their share of the work of this court. I have no doubt that the outside judges will substantiate my statement, for they, too, when sitting in this district, are at work from early morning to late in the evening. The business in this court is so great that six judges working continuously every day from 9 in the morning until 6 in the evening could not keep the calendars up to date. That is why I urge the enactment of this bill.

WHO WILL BENEFIT BY THE DEFEAT OF THIS BILL?

The confidence men, who have been indicted and are awaiting trial for using the mails to defraud the people of millions of dollars by selling fake stocks and bonds; the postal thieves, who are pilfering your mail and my mail, who have been indicted and are now awaiting trial; all other criminals who have been indicted for violating Federal statutes—they favor the congestion in this court, because the congestion means delay. They know that delay will give them time to intimidate and spirit away Government witnesses. They know that delay gives them an opportunity to continue violating the law while they are out on bail. Others who benefit by the defeat of this measure are the thousands who are the defendants in civil suits brought against them by the United States Government. They do not want speedy trials, for delay means much to them, and they know that less judges than are necessary means more congestion and more delay before they can be brought to pay their debts to the Government. Defendants in civil actions brought by individual citizens also favor the defeat of this measure, for in most cases they have nothing to gain by a speedy trial and most of the time considerable to gain by delay.

WHO FAVOR THIS BILL?

President Coolidge, who, in his first message to Congress, recommended the enactment of this legislation.

Chief Justice Taft and the judicial council, who adopted a resolution recommending this legislation.

The Attorney General, who is anxious that there be speedy trials in all criminal prosecutions and all actions in which the Government is a party.

The judges of this district, who want and need help to clear the calendars of this court.

The United States attorney for the southern district of New York.

The Bar Association of the State of New York, the New York County Lawyer's Association, the New York Patent Law Association, and all the lawyers in this district.

The people of the United States are in favor of this bill, for without sufficient judges the laws of the United States can not be enforced and the people can not get the justice which is guaranteed by our Constitution.

I appeal to you to vote for this bill, for justice should not be sacrificed and slaughtered at the altar of partisanship.

Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, something has been said by the last speaker about the prohibition question in New York. On yesterday our friend from New York [Mr. CELLER] had something to say along that line, and, inasmuch as that matter has been brought up, I am going to read what Mr. CELLER said. In assigning one of the principal reasons why we should not have additional judges in New York he said:

> We read in the record given by some of the proponents of the bill that the criminal cases have flooded the courts, and that they have so many criminal cases as a result of prohibition violations that it was utterly impossible to get any cases disposed of; but I will tell you something, my good friends, about that. The judges themselves in the southern district have only themselves to blame for this condition; and why? They have passed a resolution, the six of them, in concert with one, I believe, of the judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals, that they will not fine first offenders for violation of the prohibition law. What has been the result of that particular position which they have assumed? We find that none of the attorneys who represent these offenders in the prohibition cases will file pleas of guilty when assured of jail sentences only for their clients—

And so forth.

In other words, he tells us that these judges up there, six judges, are attempting to enforce the prohibition law, and he tells us that these judges will not promise to let men off with fines, but tells us that they passed a resolution providing that a man who violates the prohibition law will be sent to jail. He goes further and tells us that in order to get around jail sentences they are bringing into New York outside judges, and when those judges come in they exercise more leniency and let these men off with fines. He favors this system. I am quoting the substance of the speech of the gentleman made on the floor yesterday, and in concluding his thought along this line he said:

> I say, my good friends, they have no right in New York, considering the public opinion of New York's population, to impose imprisonment in cases of first offenders when in most parts of the country the Federal judges refuse to imprison and only fine; and I will say that if they will be more lenient in their attitude concerning prohibition cases, perhaps they would not have so many violations of the prohibition law.

Now, gentlemen, this should not be a question of politics or prohibition. This is simply a question of having enough suitable judges to enforce the law. Then, again, yesterday, when a gentleman was on the floor discussing this measure, something was said about the trouble in selecting a judge to fill the last vacancy and the time it took. Gentlemen, I am ready, and I believe the country is ready, to say to the President of the United States, "You may take all the time that is necessary, but you must select a judge in New York who believes in enforcing the law. You must select a man who will stand up and enforce the law." Now, it is a well-known fact—and I defy my good Tammany friends to deny it—that some of your judges in the New York State courts were elected on a wet and dry issue——

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Does not the gentleman know that such questions do not come up in our State courts?

Mr. MICHENER. I know they do not come up at this time and that you have repealed your prohibition enforcement law, but some judges were elected on that platform.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MICHENER. I can not. In answer to that question, I want to go a step further. This gentleman from New York tells us that because of the attitude in New York the law should not be enforced. I appreciate that there is a strong sentiment along that line in New York, and I appreciate that within the last year the chief executive of that great State signed the repealing act giving expression to that sentiment by saying that he would sign any law that brought back the foam on the glass and the brass rail.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield for one question? Did the gentleman read the opinion of the governor on the repeal of the act?

Mr. MICHENER. No; I am quoting what the governor said in his explanation of the signing of the bill. If this is the attitude in New York to-day with reference to this question of having more judges to enforce the law, it seems to me that it is our duty to supply sufficient judges to enforce the law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, at first I was strongly inclined to support this bill. It seemed to me to be a respectable measure, having for its purpose the enlargement of a very important court for the facilitation of public business. But the longer I have listened to the arguments in its support the more convinced I am of the lack of good faith behind it. I see in it now nothing but a sordidly partisan attempt to gather under the wings of the Republican organization in New York City the district court of the United States.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Pardon me, not now; a little later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GRIFFIN. You can gather almost any argument you need from statistics, or philosophy, or history in support of a bad measure. The cloven hoof is disclosed in the speech of the last speaker when, to support a sordid patronage grab, he rails against Tammany Hall. Now the best test is the opinion of the people of New York City, who regard the Republican organization in New York City as without conscience—corrupt and venal—and having so lost the confidence of the people that at the last election they beat it by over 200,000 votes.

The real animus behind this bill is no longer a secret. It is confessed on page 3 of the report, in this language:

> It has developed that the local bureau of naturalization contemplates confining naturalization activities at this point to United States courts.

Now, if the district court in the southern district of New York is so far behind in its business, as the sponsors of this bill would have us believe, why are they so anxious to saddle this naturalization work upon it, a work that has been done and done satisfactorily by the local county clerks through the New York State Supreme Court?

Is it not manifest that they do not need the judges so much to do the naturalization work as they need them to furnish an excuse to take the naturalization work from the State courts? In other words, to build up another patronage nest in the naturalization bureau in the city of New York they planned to enlarge the office of the local naturalization examiner, take the naturalization cases out of the New York Supreme Court, and send them into the United States district court. And the fact that the United States court already had its hands full did not deter them even from attempting to inaugurate the change this year.

They had progressed so far as to have made commitments for additional floor space and other outlays to carry out the scheme, when it was blocked in the Committee on Appropriations by the prompt and manly, straightforward stand of the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE]. He saw through the scheme and, without a thought of partisanship, but acting wholly in the public interest, he put his foot down on the brazen, partisan patronage adventure. Of course, it was not known at that time that the next step in the campaign was to be an appeal to Congress to enlarge the district court to take care of the increased naturalization cases. That feature was kept in the background. In fact, when, in the hearings, some doubt was expressed as to the ability of the United States district court to take care of the business, Mr. Crist, the naturalization commissioner, quite confidently assured us the court was fully competent to handle the increased business.

I quote from page 107 of the hearings of the Committee on Appropriations before the Subcommittee on Labor. Mr. Crist, Commissioner of Naturalization, was testifying:

Mr. GRIFFIN. Then, how do you account for the congestion in the Federal courts?

Mr. CRIST. I do not know that there is any.

* * * * * * * * *

Mr. OLIVER. Let me ask at this point, if they confine themselves to naturalization cases alone, what will become of the regular cases on the calendar, which is entirely congested, in so far as the southern district of New York is concerned? It is so much congested that they are seeking new judges, and are asking Congress to give them new judges down there to help them in their work so that they may keep their calendars clear.

Mr. SHREVE. It is very necessary that we differentiate between these two lines of activities so that we know what is being done by the department over here. If I grasp your thought, the situation is this: The court is so congested with legal business that it is your contention that they would possibly be handicapped and not be able to handle naturalization business.

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. CRIST. As to that, I can only say this: The three judges in New York, or the United States judges for the southern district of New York, Mr. Sturges, the chief naturalization examiner, and the special deputy clerk of the court having charge of naturalization work had a conference, and as a result of that conference, and of the presentation of the plans of the Bureau of Naturalization to the judges, the judges said, "We will take care of all the cases that arise in Manhattan in our jurisdiction."

From that is the inference unreasonable that the enlargement of the naturalization office in New York and the increase of the United States district judges were both essential interrelated parts of one deep-laid scheme to build up a large local patronage machine?

Now, I take it that the Members of this House will consider the local situation and what the people of the city of New York want, instead of what a patronage-hunting machine may want. The Republican organization there does not stand for the principles of the Republican Party at large throughout the United States.

Furthermore, the people of New York are opposed to this bill because they do not want to see the district court of the United States enlarged until there is some improvement in its personnel and procedure. How pleased do you imagine the people of New York will be to learn that this bill is passed granting an increase of two more judges who will doubtless be of the same type as those who are already on the bench of the district court—men who come from the bosom of reactionary social strata——

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Men whose sympathies are invariably with the corporate interests of the city, the railroads, and other public-utility corporations; men whose reputation throughout the country among members of the bar is that they are dominated by the corporations? An eminent lawyer in New York, one of the ablest men practicing in the United States courts, the author of a valuable Federal practice work, once told me in the presence of witnesses that it was a well-known fact then—three years ago—that the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York was practically owned by the railroads and the big corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I need five minutes. May I proceed for five additional minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. He said that whenever there was a judge to be appointed for the southern district of New York either the Pennsylvania Railroad, the New York Central Railroad, or some local public-utility corporation was sure to dictate the appointment.

Take the New York Times of to-day. Here we find a judge of this particular district asked to lend his support to the granting of an injunction designed to put the burden of an increased tax on the people of New York in increased telephone charges.

The New York Telephone Co. makes an application to the district court for an interlocutory injunction restraining the public service commission of the State of New York from interfering with its increase of telephone rates. Attorney General Carl Sherman, representing the State, said in his brief that the proceedings of the telephone company were practically an invitation to the Federal courts to usurp the functions of a State body. He continues further:

"Never before has there been a case," he said, "where a matter was pending before a State body that the Federal judges had been asked to prevent the State officers from even making a decision in a matter pending before them. Heretofore public utilities have had the good grace to wait until either a temporary or final order had been made by the State officers before appealing to the United States courts."

The administration of receiverships in the southern and eastern districts of New York has long been a public scandal, and if a citizen, or even a public officer, dares to open his mouth in protest he is fined or slapped into jail for contempt. You remember the case of Comptroller Craig. He made a criticism of a certain judge that every fair-minded citizen in New York knew to have been absolutely true. He was haled before the court and actually punished with a jail sentence, and it required the intervention of the President with an Executive pardon to keep this high-minded, public-spirited official out of prison. The only saving circumstance in the whole ridiculous travesty was that the Hon. Martin Manton, a judge of real sterling merit, ability, and courage, intervened at one stage in the proceedings to prevent the fall of the judicial ax.

The New York World some time ago made an exhaustive study of the receivership scandal in connection with the United States district courts. Frank L. Hopkins and Henry F. Pringle, of the World staff, made an analysis of 233 separate cases.

They found that the courts of the southern district of New York in the last seven years have been carrying on various businesses through receiverships, involving a turnover of about $60,000,000 and having nominal assets of over $750,000,000. The patronage in all of this has been enormous—receivers, special masters, auctioneers, engineers, accountants, all designated by the court.

The fees paid to all of these have been prodigious; $7,695,498.46 of payments authorized have been analyzed as follows:

Compensation to receivers	$3,405,086.96
Paid to attorneys for receivers	2,610,636.83
Paid to other attorneys	883,780.82
Paid to special masters	151,731.49
Paid to appraisers, auctioneers, accountants, engineers, and others for special services	644,262.36
Total	7,695,498.46

It appears also from this analysis that out of the 233 concerns taken over by the court only 35 reorganized or will be able to reorganize. The practical, net result of the court's intervention, owing largely to the red tape and the heavy mulcting of the concerns for exorbitant fees, has been the liquidation of most of the concerns that are intrusted to the tender mercy of "judicial" supervision.

Dickens in Bleak House, has been equaled, if not outdone, Dickens in "Bleak House," has been equaled, if not outdone, in the United States district court; and well might the warning be put above the door:

Abandon hope all ye who enter here.

The aim of everyone connected with these receiverships seems to be to prolong the proceedings as far as possible and to get as much as possible out of the "assets," even if the creditors never get a cent. Only too often the lawyers get the oyster and the creditors are left the pleasure of drawing lots for the two parts of the shell.

For instance, in the cases analyzed by Messrs. Hopkins and Pringle, where the creditors got nothing, the receivers and their counsel collected allowances and fees of $234,000.

Here are some of the fees paid in cases where something has been realized or where it is hoped something will be realized:

In the Aetna Explosives Co. case:
Governor Odell and former Judge George C. Holt received	$609,000
Winthrop & Stimson	347,500
Stanchfield & Levy Ingraham, Sheehan & Moran, and Thorndyke, Palmer & Dodge	185,000
Other lawyers	89,700
Total	1,213,200

All of these men appear as drawing large fees in many other receiverships. They are all, or have been, active in politics. Benjamin B. Odell was former governor of New York State. Henry L. Stimson served as United States Attorney for the southern district of New York from 1906 to 1909, and ran unsuccessfully for governor in 1910. Later he went into the Cabinet of President Taft as Secretary of War. The records show that while they may have been politicians, they are by no means pikers. They seem to have got the cream.

The receiverships of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Co. and the New York Railways furnish another example of the liberal patronage dispensed by this court:

Receiver Lindley M. Garrison and his counsel, Carl M. Owen, received as fees	$475,000.00
And as expenses to Owen	12,622.00
Larkin, Rathbone & Perry, fees	75,000.00
Larkin, Rathbone & Perry, expenses	21,831.78
E. Henry Lacombe, special master	52,500.00
P. J. McCook, special master	15,000.00
Job E. Hedges, receiver	125,709.68
Winthrop & Stimson, attorneys for receiver	245,100.00
Winthrop & Stimson, expenses	12,985.66

In addition to this were big allowances to engineers, certified accountants, and more special masters, and so forth, too numerous and too tedious to mention.

I do not blame a single judge in distributing this patronage, nor a single man who received it. They were simply cogs in the wheels of an obsolete legal machine which ought to be abolished.

The moral of my story is that they should be content with the patronage and power they have for the brief time, I hope, they will have it. They ought not to be reaching out to take naturalization matters out of the control of the State courts as an excuse to come to Congress asking for an increase of judges in their court. The judges of the New York Supreme Court are not complaining of the work. They are willing to do it and are doing it ably and satisfactorily. They ought to be permitted to continue in this and the United States district court ought to be satisfied with the judges, the jurisdiction, and the powers that it has.

This is a measure affecting the city of New York, and I ask you gentlemen who come from the farming districts of the West and South to consider our needs as you ask us to consider yours, and not give ear to specious arguments for the enlargement of a court, the main purpose of which is the aggrandizement of political interests which are largely hostile to the welfare of our city. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERLMAN] desire to use any more of his time at this time?

Mr. PERLMAN. Not at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the question very clearly is whether or not there should be added two judges to the southern district of New York. I desire to direct the attention of the committee to some statistics with regard to the condition of business in that district as shown from the hearing before the Judiciary Committee on this bill.

On June 30, 1923, there were pending 1,151 cases in equity.

On December 31, 1923, six months thereafter, there were pending 561 cases in equity.

On June 30, 1923, there were pending 2,184 law cases.

On December 31, 1923, there were pending 1,647 law cases.

On June 30, 1923, there were pending 3,518 admiralty cases.

On December 31, 1923, there were pending 1,830 admiralty cases.

The records of this court further show that during the year 1922 there were filed 607 equity cases, and during 1923 only 545 equity cases.

In 1922, 1,002 law cases were filed; in 1923, 648 law cases.

In 1922, 1,386 admiralty cases were filed; in 1923, 787 admiralty cases.

It is to be borne in mind also that a vacancy in the list of judges, exclusive of those provided for in the omnibus bill of September 14, 1923, had obtained from October 5, 1921, to March 2, 1923. In other words, there had been only three regular judges in this district during that period, and the two additional judges provided for by the act of September 14, 1922, were not appointed until the first part of the year 1923, so that these three new judges were sitting somewhat less than six months during the year 1923, through which period this reduction in pending business is shown.

That district which from October, 1921, to March, 1923, only had three regular judges now has six regular judges.

It is said there is a row on between the organized Republicans of New York and the organized Democrats of New York as to these judgeships. But the question for us to decide is, What shall the House of Representatives do in regard to putting two additional judges upon the pay roll in New York for life and for the lives of their successors? The people of the United States have got to pay the taxes. This bill proposes to give that district two additional permanent judgeships. Gentlemen, we have enough Federal judges. It is claimed now they are not properly placed. They say now that outside judges ought not to be sent in from districts where they are not needed to clean up this district. Nothing will do now but two more permanent resident judges, they say. Gentlemen, there are some things we all must stand for, and one of those things is the Federal judiciary shall be kept, as nearly as we can keep it, free from the influence of partisan politics. [Applause.]

When this administration came into power there were 106 district judgeships. That is correct, approximately. In one bill this administration—in an omnibus bill that no administration ought ever to pass, whether Democratic or Republican—added 22 district judges. I opposed that bill then, and you gentlemen will recall that in the discussion of that bill here it was shown beyond doubt that there were judgeships being provided for districts where the business would not justify their appointment. They were not needed there. It was a pork-barrel judgeship bill.

It was then argued on the floor of this House that those judges appointed in the districts where the business would not justify their appointment would be shifted to take care of just such conditions as obtain now in the southern district of New York. That is the fact. That is the record. That is what was argued until these 22 judges were safely attached to the pay roll for life. That was bad business. That sort of business does not help to hold public confidence in the Federal judiciary. If it is evident that politics enters into the creation of a position it is not possible to convince the public that political considerations end short of the appointment. And now when the facts show that a goodly number of these judges are not needed in their respective districts, and that they might be moved into the southern district of New York, the whole argument is reversed. The contention is now made that such a use of these judges is not desirable; that such a use is expensive, and so forth. Nothing will do, we are now told, except to add two new judges. In other words, having stuffed the Federal judiciary from one end and provided 22 jobs at one time for the faithful on the theory that those not needed in the districts where they reside could be used abroad, it is now proposed to stuff the judiciary from the other end on the theory that it is not desirable to so use these idle judges, and we must have some new resident judges.

We gave a new judge to the northern district of Texas because we had a congested docket. I read this clipping from a paper published in my home city which came in just the other day. It states that Judge Atwell is being assigned to the southern district of New York, and this is the concluding part of the statement:

> Judge Atwell came on the bench from the northern district of Texas with a congested docket and within the 12 months' period he had brought the docket up to date.

I doubt not, gentlemen, that what is true of this docket is happening with regard to dockets in other sections of the country. I know it is happening in these courts where the judges work as does Judge Atwell.

In considering this matter of congestion in the Federal courts you gentlemen should bear in mind that after you got control of both branches of the Congress during the last two years of Mr. Wilson's administration you permitted very few judgeship bills to pass. You did not even permit the filling of vacancies which occurred in districts.

You permitted congestion to increase through a failure to provide the judges required by law and required by the business of the country in order, I think it a fair assumption, that a Republican President might fill these places after the next election. Maybe you can justify that procedure, but unquestionably it added to the congestion and it helped this administration to make a record for appointing Federal judges unequaled, unapproached in the history of this country. In addition to the 22 district judges provided for in the omnibus bill, this administration in three years has appointed 26 district judges, making a total of 47, approximately one-half of the total number authorized by law on September 1, 1922, and now you want the opportunity to appoint two more in a district which already has six regular judges and into which you can send a half dozen or a dozen of these omnibus judges, at least some of whom you knew at the time they were appointed were not needed in the districts where they were appointed. I do not like to make these statements, but they are facts. I tried to keep you from doing what you did at the time. You acted with your eyes open.

Besides this, of these 22 judges provided for September 14, 1922, in the omnibus bill, it is shown by the records of the Department of Justice that all the political kinks had not been straightened out when the list of judges was published the last of January of this year; there were two appointments yet to be made. But they have all been made now, and for the balance of their lives they are safely and permanently attached to the Federal pay roll.

What are you going to do with them if you are not going to use them to help clean up the docket of the southern district of New York? Of course, you will have to pay their traveling expenses and $10 per day in addition to their salaries when they are out of their districts. But you knew that when you created their jobs and when they were appointed.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. We also provided a judge for the State of New Mexico and for the State of Arizona among the 22, did we not?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And the record shows that Judge Duval West, of the San Antonio district of the western district of Texas, tried more cases last year than those four judges down there.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I suppose there is no doubt about it. And these are not the only districts where unnecessary judges were located. Gentlemen, I do not care whether it is a Democratic administration or a Republican administration; I say to you as one man who believes that he is a patriot as you believe you are patriots that you can not afford to juggle and play politics with the Federal judiciary of this country.

You can not afford to come in here and create judgeships for districts like New Mexico and justify your attempt to do it in the first instance by saying that you will shift them to districts where congestion obtains, and then when the judges in New Mexico, Arizona, the eastern district of Illinois, and in a number of other districts which could be enumerated, are not needed, you propose to give jobs to two more judges in the southern district of New York on the plea that these other judges can not be satisfactorily shifted.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I was influenced by the statement made by Chief Justice Taft when he said that the southern district of New York is absolutely congested in its business, which really results in a denial of justice. That statement by Chief Justice Taft influenced me in bringing this proposition to the floor of the House, and further, I was definitely informed that there was actual need for these judges. I never heard anything about the political proposition until yesterday afternoon. I want to make my position absolutely plain to the Members of this House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We understand the position of the chairman of the Rules Committee. There is not a Member of this House for whom I entertain a higher regard. Now, gentlemen, we put a man in New Mexico where there was already a Federal judge who had tried in the preceding year but 44 cases, criminal and civil. With all respect to the Chief Justice of the United States, he came before the Judiciary Committee when this omnibus bill was pending, and recommended 18 judges who should be moved around over the United States in order to clean up exactly such conditions as obtain in the southern district of New York.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Was New Mexico included in the 18?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. MICHENER. And Arizona was not included in the eighteen?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. MICHENER. Those two were put on by the Senate, and the recommendation for the two did not come from the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. New Mexico was put in in the Senate, and over my protest the House agreed to accept.

Mr. MICHENER. And they did not have Chief Justice Taft's recommendation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; but the point I make is that Chief Justice Taft advocated 18 judges who should be moved over the States in order to take care of congested conditions in particular districts.

I want to call your attention to this particular district. I am not going to charge, gentlemen, that this situation has been juggled with. I am going to state the facts and let them speak for themselves. It is a fact that a vacancy was held open there for one year and a half—I mean of one of the four regular judges—while they were trying to straighten out the kinks in the Republican organization in New York, and no man on the floor will contradict that.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I wonder whether the gentleman has any suspicion as to whether or not this bill came in here to help solve the problem that was then presented to them.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know. I do not like to deal in suspicions when we have so many plain facts.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. What was the trouble? Could they not find a judge up there who would enforce the prohibition legislation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I will tell you what was the trouble. There were three or four Republicans who wanted jobs and you had but one job created by the elevation of one of the judges to the circuit bench, and you held that job open, while congestion increased, until you stuffed two more men into the omnibus bill, which gave you three jobs, and then you were able to straighten out the kinks with three judgeships when you could not handle them with one. That is the absolute fact about it. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, it seems to me that these 22 new judgeships in less than three years ought to be about all that any group of Republicans solicitous for the record of their party with reference to the Federal judiciary ought to be willing to stand for. They were provided for in September of 1922, and when the good year 1924 rolled around they had not yet all been appointed. They had a vacancy in the southern district of California, only recently filled. I see my friend from California smiling. They had one in Oklahoma, and they juggled around with important Republican politicians until very recently before that place could be filled. But the question is: What are we going to do this afternoon with regard to attaching two additional Federal judges upon the pay roll of this country, when many of these 22 judges have nothing to do—at least a number of them?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is there any dispute about these two facts: First, that it will take two years and a half to reach certain classes of cases in the southern district of New York, and second, that it costs $70,000 a year to reduce the calendar, as the gentleman has described, by importing these outside judges, whereas it can be reduced in the same way at an expense of $18,000 by adding these two judges?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to answer the gentleman, and this is my idea about it: If the statement of gentlemen favoring this bill is correct, you need in New York to move into that territory a number of these omnibus judges put on in 1922, that have nothing on earth requiring their presence in their respective districts except to try to entertain their associate judges in their districts. [Laughter.]

You ought to move them in there and put them to work and clean up that docket and then the judges now there—six of them—should keep it clean.

I want to say, gentlemen, the time has about come when we have got to let some of these Federal judges, who think that their chief business is to attach themselves from now on to the Federal pay roll—I do not know about these men up here—know they must work if they are to hold their jobs. Nobody has a right to draw money from the Treasury under the false pretense that he is earning his salary. The judge of my district works.

What are you going to do with these extra judges out in New Mexico and Arizona and other districts now supplied by the omnibus bill? They have nothing else to do. What are you going to do about that? Let them stay at home and do nothing, and appoint other permanent judges to clean up the temporary congestion?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It does seem to me that you ought to do it in a businesslike way, and if it is going to cost four times as much to import these judges as it will cost to appoint two additional judges, you ought not to get your remedy by paying $4 where $1 will answer the purpose.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield just one moment further?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think you ought to pass a measure to lessen the number of judges where you do not need their services, but you ought not to deny relief in the city of New York where you need the additional judges.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. You gentlemen ought to have acted on that policy when I plead with you to do it in 1922, but we are not denying them where they are needed. We have all sorts of district judges that will be getting rusty. They have got to keep in practice because once in a while they will get a case in their district and must know how to handle it. And you must bear in mind that for a year and a half you had but three judges in this district of New York, where you now have six, and bear in mind also that when you passed the bill in September, 1922, you were not able to straighten out your kinks in New York until the next year when you put the other two judges on and also filled the protracted vacancy. You had three vacancies from September, 1922, until January, 1923, one of which vacancies had extended from 1921.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Of course, during all that time, if the gentleman pleases, the business was piling up in New York.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. If the gentleman will yield, the difficulty, if any, existing in New York now is only temporary and yet you are providing here a permanent remedy and when the situation clears up you will still have the judges appointed who will be doing nothing.

Mr. PERLMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. For a very brief one.

Mr. PERLMAN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact, as a matter of information, that not only have the number of cases increased, but the naturalization work now has to be done in the Federal courts.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman will yield me such time as he consumes of my time?

Mr. PERLMAN. I will yield the gentleman as much time as I take. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the naturalization work in New York has been transferred to the Federal court because the Supreme Court of New York that had the work was 10,000 cases, or over two years, behind. This is additional work on the Federal court which they did not have before and should require at least one judge in daily attendance all the time in order to handle the naturalization work in New York.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that the new naturalization bill will relieve them somewhat of that work?

Mr. PERLMAN. No.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Does not the gentleman think we ought to be a little charitable? This is about the only thing the President asked for in his message that he is likely to get from that side. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield just a minute?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LOWREY. I just want to say that the gentleman is at least consistent, because I have approached him twice about a new judge in my State, and he has answered me positively that he will not favor it in the committee, because he is not willing to be piling up new judges for life when temporary judges can go in and relieve the dockets, and that he will not favor the appointment of new judges for a lifetime under such condition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Gentlemen, seriously, I do not think this bill can be justified. I do not think it can be justified by anybody under the present circumstances.

You have these six judges there now. The statistics show a decrease in the filings in that district; and no gentleman will stand in his place on this floor and say that there are not enough idle district judges now in the United States to move into the southern district of New York and clean up that business.

I say that no gentleman will stand in his place now and make that statement because he would not be justified. With that situation, gentlemen, confronting you, with the heavy public expense, with the record already that you have added 22 new judges by one bill, increasing by 20 per cent the existing number of Federal judges, with these idle judges, how can you gentlemen face your constituencies demanding reduced expenses? What can you offer in excuse except that you are trying to give jobs to somebody? It is not true in your heart that you want to do that; you are not built that way. You have enough to face in the omnibus Federal judiciary bill.

Now, I do not want to take any further time.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman think that the Democrats are fighting this bill because they want Al Smith to make the appointments?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Here is what I think about it. I will be candid with the gentleman. I do not speak for Tammany—Tammany might not fight the bill if out of the two one Democrat could be appointed.

Mr. TINCHER. I understand that is the proposition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That might be so. I assume from their position, if that is true, that it is understood that no Democrat is to be appointed if the bill passes. I am assuming that.

Mr. TINCHER. I do not know.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am assuming that. I do not speak for Tammany. I speak for myself and in a sense for this side of the House. I give the gentleman my own views. There are already four Republicans on the bench of that district. I understand there are two Democrats—I do not know how much democracy they have in their systems. But as between the contention of the two New York political organizations, the Republican and the Democratic, which is correct if you are going to understake to preserve any semblance of nonpartisanship in your judiciary?

I say that there ought to be in that court not more than two to one of any political party. That is what I think about it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judges of said district.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, while I was in the lobby I believe the gentleman from New York stated that probably I did not know much about the situation, because I did not happen to be a resident of that part of the judicial district covered by this bill to create two additional judgeships for the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. I live just across the river from that district in Brooklyn, and I do know something about the district court for the southern district of New York, because I have practiced in that court for the last 10 years. I know something about the complexion of its judges, the character of the judges, and the particular kind of judicial procedure in that court. I believe it was rather in bad taste on the part of my good friend from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] to use Governor Smith's remarks on prohibition as a stalking horse for the logic and argument. It is unfair to bring in the governor and his attitude toward prohibition and thereby raise dust to becloud the issue. Governor Smith, one of the finest executives of the Nation, is not an issue in this bill.

The question is whether there is a necessity for the two judges and whether this Congress shall approve some wretched practices obtaining in that court. Yesterday I pointed out that the calendar of that court was not as congested as the proponents of this bill would have us believe. But furthermore there is the rotten system that now exists in this particular court with reference to equity receiverships. I believe you should know something about it. If you will take the trouble to examine carefully into the equity receiverships in that court and the practices of the judges now resident in that court apropos thereof, you will not put the seal of approval on those practices by voting for these two judges, so that you might thereby have two more judges to augment and continue the practice. I know for example that there is one particular judge on that bench who has been a flagrant offender in this regard, although every one of the six judges of that court are not without guilt.

Mr. PERLMAN. A point of order, Mr. Chairman; the gentleman is not speaking to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh yes he is.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. CELLER. We find that it costs the people of the city of New York millions of dollars that have gone into the pockets of certain attorneys and certain receivers and certain custodians and certain auctioneers, and all the many other attachés of receiverships who have only been dyed-in-the-wool Republicans, and just because they happen to be on the Republican side of the political fence receive emoluments far in excess of what their labors entitle them to. Governor Odell was the receiver in two cases and received $373,500. The judge who appointed him had some years ago received from Odell a State nomination in New York. The receivership plums were the redemption of the political debt. There is no man living who could really earn $375,500 in any two receiverships. The whole business, as is said in Hamlet, "smells to heaven."

Former District Judge Holt acted as receiver in one case and received $304,500, and the law firm of Winthrop & Stimson, the latter of whom was the Republican Secretary of War, received as attorney's fees for a receiver in one case $593,450. Gentlemen, are you going to countenance that kind of practice? I could go on and on and show you situations which really constitute a menace. Until this menace is destroyed let us not appoint any more judges who are bound to be selected from the political party that thrives upon these rotten equity receiverships.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Under such leave I desire to insert extracts from a very illuminating and instructive article upon these equity receiverships written by Mr. Frank L. Hopkins under the auspices of that liberal and forward-looking newspaper, the World, of New York. The World has rendered a splendid service in inducing the writing and publishing of these articles:

INTRODUCTION

In an effort to ascertain the extent to which the Federal courts have been engaging in business through receiverships, the World has made careful investigation of the entire subject, 238 separate cases having been analyzed by Frank L. Hopkins and Henry F. Pringle, of the World staff.

The articles setting forth the results of their inquiry, republished herewith after their appearance in the World had provoked wide and approving interest, have no other purpose than to present the facts concerning the system which the Federal judges are called upon to administer. Whether the system is good or bad is a question which can best be determined by a study of the conditions which have arisen since it came into operation.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN BIG BUSINESS HAVE ANNUAL TURNOVER OF $60,000,000

This is the story of equity receiverships in New York City; the story of the Federal courts going into big business.

It is the story not so much of individuals as of a system to which eight Federal judges in New York City and scores of others throughout the country are compelled by existing laws to bow. Some of the judges approve the system. Some do not. Many of them find the work that is involved, embracing as it does business administration more than law, distasteful.

Under the procedure, as it has been dictated by Congress, the courts of the southern district of New York for the last seven years have been carrying on businesses through receivers with an aggregate annual turnover of approximately $60,000,000—as large as that of the Lehigh Valley Railroad.

One judge alone has supervised commercial dealings as large as those ordinarily handled by the administrative officers of a city of 600,000 people—and this in addition to the ordinary run of other court business.

The patronage that is involved, as is freely conceded by the judges themselves, is enormous. There are receivers to be appointed, attorneys for receivers, special masters, auctioneers, engineers, accountants, all subject to designation by the court. There are fees and frequently very large fees, which it is the province of the court to award to each of these participants in the conduct or liquidation of the commercial concerns.

There is a touch of romance in the story. In the gloomy chambers of the old post-office building sits a judge to whom is paid what many regard as a pittance of $7,500 a year. Yet with one hand he may be touching the wires which pull the copper out of Mexican mountains, direct the operations of ships on the seven seas, or control the work of negroes on southern sugar plantations, while the other runs a street railroad or two in New York City, and a dozen or so miscellaneous manufacturing enterprises.

All this is made possible because the courts, under the law as it exists to-day, are called on to do what ordinarily successful business men acknowledge they can not do—take a failing business and revive it. A friendly creditor or a group of friendly creditors complains that the X. Y. Z. Co. can't pay its debts, although its books show assets in excess of its liabilities, and that diversity of State citizenship between the corporation and one or all of the creditors makes it necessary to seek the jurisdiction of the United States court. The X. Y. Z. Co. acknowledges these allegations are true.

The concern may be in fact bankrupt. The judge may believe it to be bankrupt. But unless one of the creditors will make an affidavit that such is the case, thereby involving liability to himself if he has guessed wrong, the court has virtually no other course than to appoint an equity receiver to take over and operate the X. Y. Z. Co. In practice, the only accepted justification for refusing is a suspicion of attempted fraud or on the ground that the allegations of the complaint do not themselves set forth a cause of action.

RECEIVER MERELY AN ASSISTANT

Having appointed a receiver the judge occupies a position not dissimilar to that of the president of a large company. The receiver is the assistant to the president—sometimes also the business manager. It is with the success or failure of this system in operation, the patronage, the character of the appointments, the awards for services, that the World inquiry has dealt. Among the chief facts disclosed are these:

1. That between January 1, 1917, and December 1, 1923, the Federal courts of the southern district of New York have taken over 233 separate business enterprises, with nominal assets in excess of $750,000,000. These figures have not included unimportant ancillary receiverships.

2. That through receivers the judges have carried on a business for which, based on the receipts from operations, a minimum of $428,000,000 can be fixed. This does not include the completed transactions of several receiverships concerning which up to date reports were lacking in the files.

HUGE PAYMENTS AUTHORIZED

3. That in connection with their operations eight judges have authorized payments of which clear record was found either in judicial orders or receivers' reports of $7,695,498.46, divided approximately as follows: $3,405,086.96 as compensation to receivers; $2,640,636.83 as allowances to attorneys for receivers; $883,780.82 to other attorneys, including those for the petitioning creditors; $151,781.49 to special masters; $644,262.36 to appraisers, auctioneers, accountants, engineers, and others called on to perform services. A negligible proportion of these payments included reimbursement for expenses.

4. That the great majority of the receiverships have resulted not in saving the business but in liquidation, and that of the 233, only 35 reorganized or will reorganize on a basis to give the general creditors nominal payment in full.

5. That even where there has been nominal payment in full, it has almost invariably been not in cash but in stock or notes, the value of which has depended on the future success of the reorganized company.

6. That there has been the repeated appointment of certain lawyers to positions as receivers, attorneys for receivers or special masters, out of which the recipients have made large and in a few instances enormous incomes.

7. That receivers frequently have conducted operations for the court at a loss, thus further depleting the assets which on the records at the inception of the receivership are available for distribution to creditors. It is contended in justification for this practice that such operation, even at a loss, is frequently advantageous to the creditors, since it sometimes makes possible the sale of a business as a going concern instead of at junk value.

8. That in some of the liquidations there have been allowances to receivers and attorneys which, taken with the other expenses of the receivership, have exhausted from 50 to 100 per cent of the funds that otherwise would have been available for the unsecured creditors.

9. That receivers' certificates, issued under the stamp of approval of the Federal court, have been dishonored because when the receiver got through with his operations there was not enough left to pay them.

NEW CREDITORS CREATED

10. That in several instances receivers have incurred obligations in the conduct of the business which they were unable to meet, thereby adding to the first group of creditors, who got nothing, a second group who got next to nothing. In seven shipping cases the receiver was able to pay only 1 per cent of his own liabilities, amounting to many thousand dollars, although the attorneys who figured in the cases had large compensation, as did one receiver.

11. That there is in the mind of at least one of the judges a belief that the system is bad and should be changed, and that in the minds of several there is a feeling that the whole big question of overhauling the Federal receivership law merits earnest consideration.

In considering the significance of the above statements it should be remembered that they set forth only the conditions that actually have been found in the southern district of New York. But what has been going on in New York is being repeated—probably in lesser scale—in judicial districts from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In fact, the World found a record of one receiver to whom a judge in a western district made an allowance of $240,000 a year.

In the aggregate the business of the Federal courts of the United States is reaching into undreamed millions; their direct patronage, as indicated by the results of the survey in this district, probably being greater than that of all the governors of all the States in the Union, with a few mayors and sheriffs added.

In considering the question of patronage it is necessary to distinguish between the various classes of allowances. The receivers are appointed directly by the court, and their fees are fixed by the court. Sometimes a man connected with the business or an individual selected by the creditors is put in as receiver. Often the judge places a receiver of his own selection in sole charge of a business. Often he takes one man suggested by the creditors and adds one of his own appointees as coreceiver, giving to each an equal fee. There has been wide variation of the practice of the different judges in this matter.

The attorney for the receiver also is subject to direct appointment by the court. It is the practice for the receiver a few days after his appointment or on the same day to submit an application for permission to employ a certain law firm as counsel, together with an order to be signed by the judge confirming the appointment. Although attorneys for the petitioning creditors sometimes are taken, it is well understood that certain judges occasionally suggest the lawyers who are to be employed.

The judge does not himself ordinarily appoint lawyers other than those of the receiver, although he does fix the amount of compensation they are to receive. Special masters, appraisers, special accountants, auctioneers, and others usually are appointed by the court.

MORE JOBS FOR LAWYERS

In a large proportion of the cases the receivers are lawyers, but, no matter how small the receivership may be, it appears that the lawyer-receiver is virtually never able to handle the legal end of it. About his first step is to get another man on the pay roll by asking the judge to appoint an attorney. Next in order come the special accountants and special masters and finally the appraiser, who is called in to view the corpse before it is consigned to the auctioneer.

On going through the papers in a good many cases where the assets are small one wonders just what there is left for the receiver to do after he has hired the various assistants. Cases are on record of the appointment of two firms of lawyers for one receiver in one day.

Incomplete returns in the Federal files have made it impossible to determine exactly how much the creditors have received in comparison with the $7,700,000 allowances for service made to the other important figures in the receiverships. It is, however, possible to present an approximately accurate picture of what has happened to the creditors in each of the 233 cases which were studied.

Because he is the outsider, whose claim is not protected by any sort of a mortgage or other lien giving him a prior claim on the assets of the estate, the general creditor has been taken as a standard. It is found that in 26 out of the 233 cases the general creditor has received nothing, and the indications from the reports are that he will receive nothing. Twenty-eight additional cases ended in an adjudication of bankruptcy, which means generally that the general creditor's chance of recovering any substantial portion of his claim is slight.

CREDITOR'S CHANCE SLIM

There were 42 cases where a study indicated that the general creditor will not receive more than 75 per cent of his claim as allowed—in most of them very much less than this, the prospective or actual payments running as low as 1 per cent. In 24 cases the reports indicate the general creditor will get something in excess of 25 per cent and less than 100 per cent, while in 29 others he had not been paid in full and there seemed no prospect of his being paid in full on the records available, the available data being insufficient to warrant even a guess at the exact amount.

In 40 cases not the slightest indication was found in the papers of what is going to happen to the creditor, while there were 35 receiverships in which the general creditor nominally was paid in full or the promise was made he would be paid in full. What he actually received in nearly all of these cases was a small percentage of his claim in cash and a gamble on the future prospects of a reorganized company through issuance to him of stock or notes in the new company for the balance of his claim. Actual cash payments in full have taken place only in an insignificant number of cases.

In the receiverships where the general creditors got nothing the allowances to receivers and counsel have amounted to approximately $234,000.

SOLVENCY ALWAYS CLAIMED

In order to understand the significance of the above figures it is necessary to know that almost invariably the judge appointed a receiver only after an allegation had been made to him that the person or corporation going into receivership was solvent. Frequently the order of appointment referring to the defendant company notes that the company appears to be solvent. The company itself in consenting to the receivership has filed a sworn statement in effect claiming solvency.

And yet in only about 15 per cent of the cases are the general creditors of nominally solvent companies getting payment in full in either cash or the promises of a reorganized company. Company after company is being operated by the receiver for a few weeks or a few months and then liquidated for a small percentage of the assets claimed when the receiver was appointed.

Thus it appears that one of two things must be true in the majority of the cases: Either the courts are appointing equity receivers for companies which are bankrupt at the time of the appointment or the receivers' operations are on the whole a miserable failure.

No ordinary business man has the advantages of carrying on business which fall to the lot of the court. The creditors who may be pressing for the collection of sums long due them are blocked. The order of appointment carries with it an injunction forbidding any creditor to begin any action at law against the receiver to collect the amount which is past due.

HARD TO COLLECT JUDGMENT

It is true that the receiver himself may be sued in any court for damages which the receiver may have caused in the operation of the business. But even if a judgment is obtained in such a suit, collection may be difficult, since the appointing judge himself may decide, in case of doubt, whether any funds in the possession of the receiver are subject to prior liens on the estate or whether they are available for the new claims. Thus the court in business has a distinct advantage over its corporation rivals. Instances where creditors have been hung up for some three to four years before getting anything have not been unusual.

The essential facts which have been set forth above have been presented to each of eight judges, who have managed all but three of the receiverships. Their answer is that almost invariably they have been acting in accordance with the wishes of the creditors, emphatically expressed to them, in appointing the receivers, in continuing the failing businesses, and that where a receivership has not turned out well it is the fault of the creditors themselves in not seeking speedy liquidation through bankruptcy proceedings.

JULIUS M. MAYER, AS JUDGE AT $8,500 A YEAR, RUNS ENTERPRISES OF $300,000,000

Judge Julius M. Mayer, now a circuit judge, but none the less active in handling the big receiverships started while he was a district judge, is the "big business" man of the Federal courts.

Through receivers he is shown in the compilations that have been made in the course of the world survey to have carried on a business extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to Mexico, and including some of the islands of the Atlantic, for which a minimum can be fixed of $298,000,000. In view of the business done since the filing of the receivers' reports from which the records were taken, it is certain the total business was well in excess of $300,000,000.

MILLIONS TO COURT OFFICERS

In view of the magnitude of the operations carried on under Judge Mayer's direction, it is only natural that his allowances to those who assisted him were far in excess of those of any other judge. His own salary as circuit judge is $8,500 a year. There have been dispensed in allowances to receivers, receivers' attorneys, special masters, and other attorneys in cases over which Judge Mayer had control, a total of $3,519,254.04, of which $107,500 was in the preferred stock of a reorganized company or notes.

Special accountants, engineers, and other special appointees approved by the court received $443,490.50, making total payments found in Judge Mayer's receiverships of $3,962,744.54. A few of these allowances have been specified as covering expenses. The amount so specified is not a large item in the total.

HOW FEES ARE DISTRIBUTED

Here is approximately the way they have been divided:

To receivers appointed by Judge Mayer, $1,619,733.33, including the preferred stock and note allowance noted above.

To attorneys for receivers appointed by Judge Mayer, $1,241,694.89.

To other attorneys who have figured in the cases over which Judge Mayer (in the receivership cases only), $95,400.

To appraisers, $3,500.

These were the payments authorization for which either was found in court orders or which were shown by receivers' reports to have been made. The figures of the payments to receivers and their own attorneys are subject to readjustment, inasmuch as in one or two instances the order merely specified the amount to be paid to the two individuals, without stating how it was to be divided.

O. K'S THE WORLD'S FIGURES

It may be stated that Judge Mayer himself has seen the records of the World compilations, and without referring to his own records has conceded that they are substantially correct. In one instance allowances which came not from the estate but from the reorganization managers were included.

Here are some of the allowances made by Judge Mayer:

To former Gov. Benjamin B. Odell, who acted as Judge Mayer's receiver in two cases, $373,500.

To former District Judge George C. Holt, who acted as receiver in one case, $304,500.

To the law firm of Winthrop & Stimson, who have been appointed regular attorneys in two cases and for special service in one receivership, $593,450 up to September, 1923.

In fairness it should be stated that these men all performed continuous, extensive, and extremely important services, for which their allowances were in remuneration.

AETNA CASE EXPENSIVE

In one of Judge Mayer's receiverships, that of the Aetna Explosives Co., there was allowed for a period of approximately four years $1,244,200, of which $609,000 went to Messrs. Holt and Odell, and $347,500 to Winthrop & Stimson. Orders were found on file making allowances of $185,000 to be divided among three other law firms—Stanchfield & Levy; Ingraham, Sheehan & Moran; and Thorndyke, Palmer & Dodge. Numerous other lawyers who figured in the reorganization of the company got allowances of $89,700.

Twenty years ago, when Odell was governor and the big Republican boss of the State, Judge Mayer was an active figure in city and State politics. In 1904, when Odell backed Senator Platt off the map by nominating Higgins to succeed Odell as governor, the Odell convention nominated Mayer for attorney general and the latter was elected.

One of the members of the firm of Winthrop & Stimson is Henry L. Stimson, who also was an active political figure when Mayer was in the ring, having served as United States attorney for the southern district of New York from 1906 to 1909, and made an unsuccessful run for governor in 1910, later going into the Cabinet of President Taft as Secretary of War. The other members of his firm, which is acknowledged to be one of the best in the city, include Bronson Winthrop and Edgerton L. Winthrop, jr.

ODELL'S SECRETARY A RECEIVER

Nor is ex-Governor Odell the only man from Newburgh on whom Judge Mayer has called for service. James G. Graham, who was Odell's secretary, and who was later appointed by Mayer as a deputy attorney general, was picked as receiver in a series of shipping cases, out of which he got an allowance of $25,000. It is interesting to note in this connection that records are on file showing that in the Brooklyn Union Gas Rate case—in no way related to equity receiverships—Mayer ordered an allowance of $42,500 to Graham, taxed against the public, for acting as special master.

Ex-Governor Odell had an almost continuous job as receiver in two big cases from April, 1917, to March, 1923. His final report in the Aetna Explosives case was dated May 22, 1920, although the final order in the case was not issued until sometime later. On March 16, 1921, Odell was appointed as receiver of Gaston Williams & Wigmore (inc.), a big exporting house, for liquidating which the ex-governor got allowances of $69,000, the last of which came in the order to pay himself $36,500 in February, 1923.

In addition to their allowances in the Aetna case, Winthrop & Stimson got a picayune $850 for some special services rendered the receiver of the D. & C. Co., a flour concern, and $245,000 in the New York Railways receivership, which will be treated in another story.

NOMINAL ASSETS $30,000,000

No story is more illustrative of the immense scope of the business undertakings of the Federal court than is that of the Aetna Explosives Co. When this company got into difficulties seven years ago it had nominal assets of $30,000,000 and controlled or directly operated munition and explosive plants in 16 cities. When the receivers took charge there was not sufficient money to meet the current pay rolls, and creditors on all sides were pressing for payment of their bills.

In 23 other court districts ancillary receivers were appointed by other judges to take over the various properties and stave off legal actions in these States. By virtue of their position here Holt and Odell themselves were appointed ancillary receivers in most of the other districts. In their final report to Judge Mayer the only comment made on the fees in the other districts is the following:

> "The accounts of all the ancillary receivers have been passed, their compensation paid, and they have all been discharged and their bonds canceled."

Thus Judge Mayer began the operation of one of the largest explosive concerns in the country. Plants which had been wrecked were rebuilt. A new TNT plant was erected by the receivers at Mount Union, Pa. A war was on. The sale of explosives was easy. The receivers, with the approval of Judge Mayer, made 30 separate contracts with the United States Government and France for delivery of picric acid, TNT, smokeless powder, guncotton, and benzol. In their final report the receivers' record they did a total of more than $82,000,000 in business. It was done at a profit.

MANY CLAIMS CONTESTED

Meanwhile an attack was opened on the claims against the company. In this connection it should be stated there are three ways in which the justice of a claim against a company in receivership may be adjudicated. It may be settled by negotiation between the receiver and the creditor. Or if no adjustment is reached, it may be decided directly by the judge having charge of the receivership, or a special master who is himself an appointee of the judge and whose findings are subject to review by the judge.

Except on an appeal to the circuit court or by the express permission of a Federal judge court the creditor can put his claim before no other tribunal. Nor can he get a trial by jury unless the court directing the receivership assents. Many believe that these considerations give a receiver a tremendous advantage in negotiating with claimants.

Messrs. Holt and Odell record in their report that they adjusted claims of $4,600,000 for $137,000. Another claim of $3,000,000 was settled for $900,000. Other claims were adjusted for new contracts, and finally when the reorganization of the company came the allowed claims were all paid in full with interest. From the standpoint of the acknowledged creditors it was undoubtedly one of the few completely successful receiverships. Judge Mayer is known to be immensely proud of it and the big business which he directed.

FEES DECLARED JUSTIFIED

The extent of the business itself has been advanced to the World representative as a complete justification for the size of the awards. It is explained that such a large business naturally involved an immense amount of litigation and that the Winthrop and Stimson record of their services is itself a volume of two or three thousand pages. The other lawyers were said to have conducted successfully litigation which saved the company several times the amount of their fees.

It has been pointed out to the World that in bankruptcy cases where more than $10,000 is involved a receiver is entitled to a fee of 1 per cent on everything that he collects. A similar fee goes to the trustee in bankruptcy who follows the receiver; and if they carry on the business, they are each entitled to a fee of 2 per cent. A referee before whom a bankruptcy estate is administered is entitled to from one-half to 1 per cent on the amount that is paid to creditors. The total allowances made to receivers and lawyers in the Aetna case amounted to approximately 1¼ per cent of the actual business done.

But this was not the only receivership that Judge Mayer was running in 1917 and 1918. In addition to some which had their inception prior to 1917, he also ran the D. & C. Co., whose receiver did $1,000,000 in business, made money, and then lost all his profits; the Batavia Rubber Co., whose receiver recorded sales of $472,000 from June to September, 1918, and a few lesser operations.

BIG EXPORT HOUSE TAKEN OVER

The second receivership in which Odell figured was started in 1921, and its outcome was far different from that in the Aetna case, although the receivers and their attorneys got fees of $132,000. Gaston, Williams & Wigmore (Inc.) was a big exporting house whose books showed assets of $16,000,000 when they went to the wall.

But the receiver found that the real value of the assets was only $4,680,000, of which more than $3,000,000 were pledged. After making other deductions and settlements the receiver reported the total assets at the time of the receivership were $633,145, plus certain contingent claims against the United States and Russian Governments on which little appears to have been realized.

On the basis of this figure the allowances amounted to about 20 per cent of the assets, although the amount actually passing through the hands of the receivers was much more than this. Up to November 9, 1921, they had taken in $904,000 and disbursed $508,000.

By way of business in this case, the receivers carried out some old contracts. Their report of October 8, 1921, showed receipts from liquidation of $225,000 and receipts from sales of merchandise of $230,908. As against this there was an operating expense of $201,000 and $202,000 for the cost of the merchandise sold. Of the expenditures $137,000 had been for salaries, although these were said to have been greatly reduced.

CREDITORS GET 25 PER CENT

In the final order of Judge Mayer creditors' claims of $2,226,000 were ordered transferred to Wilbur L. Ball, as nominee of the Guaranty Trust Co., on the payment of the receiver of $66,000, thus releasing the receiver. The general creditors got 25 per cent on allowed claims. The sum of $793 in preferred claims was paid in full. Oscar A. Lewis, the attorney, received allowances of $41,500.

February 19, 1923, there were payments to the receiver and his counsel in this receivership of $56,500 out of total allowances of $132,000. The 25 per cent dividend to general creditors which was paid about the same time, amounted to $53,334. The balance in the receivers' hands just before the payments amounted to $292,070.55, the difference going in the payment of the $66,750 on the claims transferred to Ball and in various other adjustments under the settlement.

Judge Mayer is said to regard this as a very successful receivership on the ground that at its inception it looked as if the general creditors would get almost nothing, and it was only through the hard work and good business judgment of ex-Governor Odell and Mr. Lewis that they received as much as 25 per cent. The settlement undoubtedly involved a large amount of executive and legal work. Mr. Odell is said to have given virtually all his time to the case for many months.

RECEIVERSHIPS COST CITY TRANSIT LINES $1,700,000, CHIEFLY "SPECIAL SERVICES"

As a result of its inquiry into equity receiverships the World is able to disclose to-day some of the things that have taken place while the receivers of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Co. and the New York Railways have dragged their slow way toward the reorganization of these corporations.

These two receiverships have, according to the accounting standards set up by the transit commission, cost to date more than $1,700,000, of which $1,499,000 was in payment of some form of special service. Included in these items is $444,000 for engineers and accountants, questioned by some of the auditors as being a distinct receivership expense.

Among the facts brought to light are these:

That from the inception of the receivership until his death in September, 1919, the late Theodore P. Shonts was carried on the pay roll of Job E. Hedges, receiver of the New York Railways Co., at a salary rate first of $30,000 and later of $20,000 a year.

HEDLEY ALSO ON PAY ROLL

That Frank Hedley, who has a big job on his hands as president and general manager of the Interborough Rapid Transit Co., is still continued general manager of the New York Railways in receivership at $12,000.

That although Receiver Hedges has employed regular counsel at an expense of $266,000 to November 30, James L. Quackenbush, chief attorney of the Interborough Rapid Transit Co., has been receiving $15,700 a year additional from the receiver, his special function being to direct the legal work of the bankrupt railroad as distinguished from the litigation arising particularly out of the receivership.

Some of the payments made by the receivers of these two lines are:

Brooklyn Rapid Transit Co.:

To Receiver Lindley M. Garrison and his counsel, Carl M. Owen, $475,000, in addition to expenses of Owen of $12,622.68.

To Larkin, Rathbone & Perry, allowance of $75,000, and in addition expenses of $21,831.78.

To E. Henry Lacombe, special master, $52,500 allowance.

To P. J. McCook, special master, $15,000 allowance.

APPRAISAL COST $140,627

To Stone & Webster, engineers, who made an appraisal of the property, $140,627 (shown in an accounting independent of the court records).

To Price, Waterhouse & Co., certified public accountants, $51,968.41 (also shown in an independent accounting).

For printing, $80,783.09.

New York Railways Co. (to September 30, 1923):

Job E. Hedges, receiver, $125,709.68.

Winthrop & Stimson, attorneys for the receiver, $245,100, in monthly payments and allowances under court order, and $12,985.66 for expenses.

Price, Waterhouse & Co., $23,750.

Stone & Webster, $229,485.43.

Francis M. Scott, special master, $1,600.

E. Henry Lacombe, special master, $2,200.

Guaranty Trust Co. as trustee, $3,500 for services and $96,195.82 for covering expenses.

The Hecla Press for printing, $30,230.94.

Nor do these items represent the total expense to be attributed to the receiverships. Receiver Garrison and Receiver Hedges and their attorneys have not yet received their final allowances. These may be substantial. And the matter of reorganization may prove more expensive than the receiverships themselves.

REORGANIZATION PLAN EXPENSIVE

The B. R. T. reorganization plan contains an item of $6,484,119 to adjust claims and liabilities of the receivership not otherwise provided for, to provide for past-due taxes in litigation, to pay expenses of foreclosures and sales and cash expenses of reorganization, including compensation and expenses of committees, allowances, counsel fees, court costs, master's and referee's fees, services of experts, commissions of underwriters and syndicates, costs and taxes on incorporation and reorganization, disbursements, and miscellaneous requirements, "any balance to go to the new company for working capital."

One of the lawyers informed the World that the amount turned over for working capital would be $2,000,000. The three banking houses underwriting the reorganized company will receive approximately $1,300,000 for their services. Other allowances will be fixed by Judge Mayer after the work has been completed.

But it is not alone on the basis of expense that objection is made to Federal equity receivers for rapid transit and street railroad companies. A receiver in bankruptcy may not, under the law, be appointed for such corporations. The business must be kept running in the interest of the public.

STATE LAWS MADE INOPERATIVE

Objection is made, however, that by going to the Federal courts for the appointment of such receivers the companies avoid the operation of State laws, which would still be binding were the receiver to be appointed by the State court. Corporation Counsel Nicholson has pointed out, for instance, that without the permission of the Federal judge the city may not bring suit to revoke a franchise with the terms of which the receiver fails to comply.

It is largely to deal with this situation that a bill already has been introduced in Congress forbidding such companies or their creditors to go to the United States courts until the resources of the State court have been exhausted.

It will be noted that the two receivers, Stone and Webster, for their appraisal work have had total payments in excess of $370,000. It is also recalled that Winthrop & Stimson, who received $245,000 for services to Receiver Hodges, were also awarded $347,500 by Judge Mayer for their services to the receiver of the Aetna Explosives Co.

The Aetna Explosives Co. (Inc.) went into the hands of Receivers Benjamin B. Odell and George C. Holt in 1917, and the final report of the receivers was not rendered until May, 1920, their actual discharge coming in June, 1921. It thus will be seen that over a considerable period Winthrop & Stimson were serving both companies. The year 1920 appears to have been their most profitable year, since the records indicate them to have received in that period $53,200 from Mr. Hedges, in addition to nearly $200,000 from Messrs. Odell and Holt, receivers of the Aetna.

MANAGES COMPETING LINES

The retention of Mr. Hedley as a general manager is all the more interesting in view of the fact that at certain points the New York Railways and the Interborough are competitors for the short-haul traffic.

The payments to Mr. Shonts will no doubt be a surprise even to the city administration, which thought it had made a careful examination of the transit situation. When Hedges became receiver Mr. Shonts started on the pay roll at $30,000. This lasted for about two months. In May, 1919, Shonts received a payment of $2,083.33, which is at the rate of $25,000, and the following month it was dropped to $20,000. There it remained until Mr. Shonts's death in the following September. The total payments recorded to him amount to $13,194.42.

It is interesting to compare these payments with the fate of the general creditors in the case of the reorganized B. R. T.—now the B. M. T.—and their probable fate in the case of the New York Railways. The former road illustrates well the fallacy of the theory that creditors are paid in full when they get back stock in a reorganized company.

When the reorganization plan of the B. R. T. came out last March everybody was shown exactly what he was going to get except the general creditors. Opposite their names appeared an estimate of $1,600,000, as the amount of their allowed claims, and after that a series of blanks. Elsewhere it was explained that they might turn in their claims if they assented to the plan of reorganization and provision would be made for them.

OPERATING CLAIMS PREFERRED

Later they were divided into two classes. First, were the operating claims—put forward by those who had sold materials to the road shortly before the receivership and who were in a sense preferred. They got an option of 100 per cent cash, or 87 per cent cash and 40 per cent preferred stock, the last to cover 13 per cent of the claim and interest which had been piling up for four and one-half years. Most of them took cash.

The general creditors, however—those who had no preference—got 25 per cent in cash and 102 per cent preferred stock. On the face of it, this looked like a fine adjustment. The preferred stock, however, on January 12 was quoted at 50¾, which means that the general creditor who had a claim of $1,000 and is still holding his stock has, after his long wait, $250 in cash and stock worth approximately $516.

The tort claimants—those with claims for damages against the railroad, including the relatives of the victims of the Malbone Street wreck—were placed in a class by themselves. The 3,106 tort claims were filed with the receiver for a total of $21,013,828.25. Of these 2,950 were reduced and settled for $2,030,775. After waiting four and one-half years for the reorganization they were paid in full in cash without interest.

Yet the manner of dealing with the tort claimants is declared to have been particularly liberal. They were given a chance, should they desire, of bringing a suit in the State courts to fix the amounts, with the alternative of settling them either by negotiation or before a special master. Most of them chose either negotiation or a hearing before

Philip H. McCook, the special master assigned particularly to this work. His findings were subject to review on appeal before Judge Mayer or the circuit court of appeals.

FEDERAL OFFICIAL SQUEEZED

Much worse was the fate of some of the stockholders. The World representative was told of one important Federal official who held Brooklyn Rapid Transit stock that had cost him $1,200. He held on to it throughout the period of the receivership because he feared that its sale might be misinterpreted. He was offered the opportunity of going into the reorganization if he would put up $35 a share in cash. He didn't have the $600 which would be required. The result was that he took the stock to a broker and sold it for $17.50.

In view of the fact that the city has a vital interest in the B. R. T. receivership expense by virtue of its relation to contract No. 4, under which the city hopes some time to get a return on its huge investment in subways, the World made efforts to learn just what decreases there had been in company salaries to offset the big increase brought about by the receivership.

Those in a position to know reported there had been one decrease in the pay roll, brought about by dropping as president Timothy S. Williams, with his salary of $75,000 a year. As against this the allowance to receivers and lawyers, excluding the engineers as an expense which might possibly have been incurred anyway in connection with the transit commission proposal to take over the lines, have amounted to well over $125,000 a year.

TEN LAWYERS ON LIST

There has been no public allotment as between Mr. Garrison and Mr. Owen of the $475,000 already paid them, but the surmise is it will be divided about equally. But, as in the case of the New York Railways, this has not been the only legal expense of the railroad in receivership. Its ordinary legal business has been looked after by a staff of lawyers in the Brooklyn office. Last May, before the receivership ended, there were, the World is informed by those in a position to know, 10 lawyers in that office on a pay roll amounting to about $90,000 a year.

Early in the receivership an effort was made to tax the entire expense of the B. R. T. receivership against operating expenses, which would have meant that it would have militated against the time when the city would get a return. The transit commission objected to this form of accounting and arbitrators have been selected to determine how much of the receivership bill will be charged against operating cost.

It is generally agreed that from the standpoint of the B. R. T. security holders Mr. Garrison handled the road in masterful fashion. He made many improvements, costing millions, expanded the power-house facilities, purchased additional cars, improved the operating methods, and the operating revenues from increased passenger traffic steadily increased in volume, so that on April 30, 1923, he showed a net corporate income of $25,000,000 from rapid-transit and street-car operation.

COMPANIES PREFER MAYER

It has been rumored from time to time that many lawyers and executives of the big companies have preferred to have the receiverships administered before Judge Mayer. In the case of the B. R. T., the World is reliably informed that a distinct move was made to get the receivership before him.

From a reliable source it was learned that late in December, 1918, some of those who were contemplating the receivership went to Judge Learned Hand, who it appeared might be sitting in the motion term when the matter came up, and asked him if he had any objection if the matter were presented to Judge Mayer. Judge Hand is described as being somewhat surprised at the attempt to dodge him. He, nevertheless, gave his consent and the matter was presented to Judge Mayer, who ordered the receivership on December 31, 1918, the papers not being filed in the clerk's office until after the New Year's holiday.

One thing which made the examination of the New York Railways receivership difficult was that many payments to counsel had been made without the usual allowance orders being on file in the records. It was learned subsequently from Special Master Lacombe that authorization for monthly payments to counsel was contained in a letter written by Judge Mayer to the receiver in July, 1919. Since that date Winthrop & Stimson have had a regular salary of $3,600 a month—more than $100 a day—in addition to special allowance of $61,500. Mr. Hedges has received $2,000 a month plus three extra orders totaling $17,000.

DECLARES PROPERTIES IMPROVING

Is the property of the New York Railways Co. depreciating or improving under receivership? Are conditions better than they were on the date of the receivership? Receiver Hedges presents convincing figures that they are. His reports to the transit commission to November 30, 1923, show deficit in his receivership operations of $1,118,270.03, and in the estate account, which includes all the unpaid interest on securities, of $13,244,267. But in these figures is included a reserve set up for maintenance and depreciation of $5,979,258.52.

Excluding this reserve and including $3,200,000 interest payments on underlying obligations authorized by the court to prevent foreclosures, Mr. Hedges shows a net income from March 21, 1919, to date of $1,538,811.

At the same time the latest report shows the receiver has spent nearly $5,000,000 on the maintenance of way and structures and a similar amount on maintenance of equipment. Although a preliminary plan has been put forward for reorganizing the New York Railways, it is yet too soon to say when and how much water is actually to be squeezed out of the securities and how soon the receivership will end. The plan does, however, call for the wiping out of the present stockholders. Outside the various classes of bondholders, the creditors' claims against the New York Railways amount to about $1,800,000.

Mr. CAREW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. GRIFFIN], who spoke heretofore on this bill, may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 1, line 6, after the word "shall," insert the words "be residents of the district when appointed and shall thereafter."

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Very well; I shall waste no time upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Virginia: Line 4, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one," and in line 5, strike out the word "judges" and insert "judge."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, of course I believe in equipping the courts sufficiently to enable them to transact business, and in the proper administration of all of the laws within the jurisdiction of the courts. I am not concerned about any political controversy in the city of New York, or about any controversy that may exist between the two party organizations that function there. But here is a proposition to appoint two new judges forthwith, and I do not think that any harm, so far as I have been able to analyze the statistics and understand the arguments, can come from limiting the number to one at this time and delaying the appointment of the other, if it should become really necessary to appoint another, until a little later on. We can not rely too implicitly upon the alleged facts, as our experience shows. At least I can not feel the same certainty that my friend from New York [Mr. MILLS] has expressed. In 1922, what was the situation? The committee and Congress then dealt with the entire country so far as the matter of appointing additional judges was concerned. It rested its conclusions largely upon the views of the Chief Justice and the Attorney General, Mr. Daugherty; and now the views of those gentlemen are presented as a reason for adding to the number of judges then apparently deemed sufficient. At that time the southern district of New York was given two additional judges, and now two more are proposed. To show how much at fault opinion as to these matters may be, I recall that it was assumed in 1922 at the outset that in the eastern district of Virginia, where I live, there should be an additional judge. I took the matter up at once with the judge there—he does not belong to my political party, but he is a man whom I hold in the very highest esteem and honor—and he informed me that it was absurd to think that the condition of business in that court necessitated another judge, and the suggestion was abandoned. We were told at the time of the enactment of the law of September, 1922, that we might look forward into the future and assume that for a considerable time it would not be necessary to provide any new judges. Two years have not elapsed, and we are now advised that there is the most urgent necessity existing in a certain district, notwithstanding there is authority now to make use in that district of judges appointed for other districts and for other courts, and which we were told was going to operate materially to take care of all of the necessities. The President has just appointed, or is just about to appoint, our friend from Illinois, Mr. GRAHAM, a judge of the Customs Court of Appeals, and under the express terms of the law of 1922 Mr. GRAHAM will be eligible to be sent to New York to handle the business in the southern district, and many other judges not remote from New York will be eligible. I think the House should pause and consider whether the taking of one step at a time is not best, selecting one additional judge instead of two, if there is to be any increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Virginia) there were—ayes 78, noes 88.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. PERLMAN and Mr. MOORE of Virginia to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 91.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of speaking out of order, if I may have permission to do so, for about two minutes, because I shall have to leave the Hall before I have another opportunity to do so.

There is no more conscientious and hard-working committee in the House than the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

In reporting the Johnson bill the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation has done a splendid piece of work. The members of this committee are to be congratulated upon the efforts which they have put forth to conserve the interests of our disabled ex-service men. I hoped that the bill which has been reported might be passed by the House at the earliest possible moment. A similar bill has already passed the Senate. There is one provision in the Senate bill which has not been included in the House bill to which I wish to call the attention of the House in the hope that when the bill goes to conference that the House conferees may agree to accept it, and that is section 202, paragraph 2, Senate bill 2257, providing:

Where a tuberculous disease is diagnosed as other than that of complete arrest compensation shall be on a permanent and total basis, which shall not be changed until one year after such ex-service man has reached an arrested stage, at which time a permanent rating for life shall be granted, which shall not be below $50 per month during the remainder of his life.

This is the provision in which I am particularly interested, and unless such a provision is adopted our Government, in my opinion, will not have met its obligation to our disabled veterans who have this unfortunate disease. I am not a doctor, but I have devoted considerable study to the tubercular ex-service men, as there is in my district one of the largest sanatoriums in the country. Experts are agreed that there is no permanent cure for tuberculosis, the disease being diagnosed as either active or arrested. By arrested is meant the germ is temporarily inactive, but will become active upon the slightest provocation. The degree of resistance of each tubercular determines the period of life. Those with a great degree of resistance naturally survive the longest. The handling of this class of ex-service men has been very unsatisfactory, due to inadequate laws, which the above provision, in my judgment, will tend to correct.

The conditions under which the tubercular patient may live, together with the resulting mental ease or mental disquietude, largely affect his power of resistance. If, when the patient's tubercular condition is marked arrested his compensation is cut, he is forced again to begin to work to support himself and family. He knows also that at best his life has been shortened and consequently worries about making suitable provision for his wife and children after his death. The result is that the tuberculosis though once arrested soon becomes again active and the veteran must again be hospitalized. A majority of the patients in the National Sanatorium are readmissions, that is, men who were once marked with arrested cases again became active and who had to be readmitted. A recent contact made for approximately 1,000 ex-service men shows that over 75 per cent of the men contacted had been forced to return to hospitals from two to eight times. These men had been either in training and broke down, or had been given arrested cases and returned to civil life, compensation cut, and on account of having to return to strenuous work, to provide for themselves and families, had become active tuberculars. If these men had been given a permanent rating by the Veterans' Bureau so that they could have lived in peace and quiet without worry of the future, doubtless most of them would not have again become active. The Director of the Veterans' Bureau has submitted the following letter, estimating the cost of this provision:

MAY 16, 1924.

Hon. B. CARROLL REECE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. REECE: In accordance with your request of this morning for an estimate of the cost of provisions under S. 2257, affecting ex-service men suffering from tuberculosis, you are advised that it has been estimated that the cost for the first year of extending the presumptive period from three years to five years for automatic service connection, would involve an expenditure approximating $11,380,000.

The additional amendment included under section 202, paragraph 2, providing for a permanent rating where tuberculosis disease is diagnosed as other than a complete arrest, and a rating of not less than $50 a month for the remainder of his life where tuberculosis has reached an arrested stage, is estimated to cost for the first year as applied to cases rated under existing legislation, $10,468,500, and when further applied to the cases estimated to come under the five-year presumption, assuming that the distribution of these cases will be on the same basis as are the total tuberculosis cases at the present time, it would increase the estimate of cost for this presumptive period by $3,900,000. The total estimated cost therefore of S. 2257 as applied to tuberculosis cases is approximately $25,748,500 for the first year of award.

In this connection it is to be borne in mind that there is no experience other than the recorded experience of the Veterans' Bureau to determine the probable development on many of these proposed changes, and it is further true that the recorded experience, while accurately showing the trend of certain activities of the Veterans' Bureau in the past, can only in a general way be used to determine what may be the result with relation to future claims. However, it is possible to apply certain broad general assumptions based upon past experience and existing records and the above cost figures are a result of this application and are considered indicative of probable future cost.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

This shows the yearly cost of providing a permanent rate of compensation to these men to be around $14,000,000 yearly, but when the expense of training is deducted from the cost and when mortality is figured, it will be seen that there will be no cost, but will result in a saving, if such things can be figured in the life of a veteran.

A system of permanent rating for the tuberculars must be adopted if their problem is to be solved and I hope that it may be included in the pending bill. [Applause.]

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 3318, had directed him to report the same back with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered by the rule. Is a separate vote demanded on either amendment?

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Moore amendment.

The SPEAKER. The first vote is on the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Virginia: In line 4, strike out the word "two" and insert "one" and in line 5 strike out the word "judges" and insert "judge."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, there is another amendment adopted previous to the Moore amendment, an amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] that has to be voted on by the House. It is a separate amendment.

Mr. BEGG. There are three amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed there are only two as two are of the same substance. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just reported by the Clerk.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Virginia) there were—ayes 105, noes 95.

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, before the roll call starts I would like to propound a parliamentary inquiry. In case the House adjourns will this vote be taken on Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on that.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 117.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand now that we come to a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The yea-and-nay vote has been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 151, answered "present" 4, not voting 121, as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 1, line 6, after the word "shall," insert the words "be residents of the district where appointed and shall thereafter."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CAREW. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is called for.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, is this on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the reading of the engrossed copy.

The SPEAKER. It has been read.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 131, noes 145.

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the passage of the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 160, answered "present" 2, not voting 121, as follows:

Mr. Porter (for) with Mr. Byrnes of South Carolina (against).
Mr. Gallivan (for) with Mr. O'Sullivan (against).

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay." I have a pair with the lady from Californin, Mrs. NOLAN. I wish to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote.

The SPEAKER. A motion to adjourn is a preferential one.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEGG) there were—ayes 111, noes 146.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was defeated and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I call up the privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington offers a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 320

Resolved, That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 1 of the printing act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to have printed 900 additional copies of the hearings before said committee of the Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, on bills relating to the McNary-Haugen bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. PERLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to these requests? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, under the privilege granted me by the House, I wish to say without equivocation or apology to any man or corporation, I declare my exquisite pleasure in canceling my most important speaking engagement of the year, before the Southern Baptist Convention, 8,000 strong, in Atlanta, and rushing all the way to Washington to help "spank" the President for going back on his own party promises concerning the soldier bonus. It is not so much the worthiness of redeeming this long-delayed pledge for which I have voted three times that brought me, but a vigorous protest against five years of acrobatic evasion and partisan duplicity. I have seen it at close range, and here is the proof: With ample majority to do the thing, the Republicans waited until the 20th of May, three days before the Sixty-sixth Congress adjourned, before passing the bonus bill in the House, when they knew it was legislatively impossible to carry it through the Senate. On this tardy House action they went successfully after the soldier vote, saying, "See what we have done for the defenders of our country; we will complete the job for you when Congress convenes in December."

But President Harding, who had declared himself in favor of "adjusted compensation for the ex-service man," acting on the advice of Secretary Mellon and his doleful tale of a Treasury deficit of $800,000,000, came before the Senate and urged postponement—not defeat, mind you, but postponement of action. And then when a new bonus bill was brought out, the President demanded by veto that it should pay for itself through a discredited revenue plan which his own party dared not bring on the floor for action. Broken pledge No. 2. And now behold President Coolidge, who declared before high heaven that he was going to "carry out the Harding policies," vetoes even a "tombstone tip" to the ex-service man to whom his predecessor had pledged "adjusted compensation," and does it with a nonchalant, standpat, "big business" bravado that flatly declares the soldier deserves no bonus.

Shades of Frank Mondell, Phil Campbell, and Frank Murphy! The first two, with all their fervid hair-raising eloquence in behalf of "the soldier defenders of the flag," have been gathered, alas, to the limbo of all naughty Republicans, while FRANK MURPHY, who bravely fought and filibustered for the American doughboy, lives yet in the House to testify that I have told the incontestable truth about his vanishing reactionary comrades.

Let it be remembered that when Secretary Mellon, sitting on his throne of hundreds of millions—much of it made distilling and selling liquor—wanted to defeat the bonus to the soldiers who had made his fabulous fortune secure, he declared a deficit of eight hundred millions, but when he wanted to show how smart his administration had been with the Treasury he showed a surplus of three hundred millions. This is my indictment: If the bonus was right, it ought to have been passed five years ago when it would have been a godsend to the vast majority of returning soldiers who found their former business shot to pieces; if it was wrong, it should have been promptly repudiated and not used as a vote getter in two congressional elections before this final climax of presidential repudiation by the reactionary representative of big business in Pittsburgh, Wall Street, and Boston.

INTEMPERATE, UNFORTUNATE WORDS

I honor our President personally, but I marvel at the following intemperate, unfortunate words:

> We must either abandon our theory of patriotism or abandon this bill. Patriotism which is bought and paid for is not patriotism. * * * There is no moral justification for it.

In other words, in common parlance, the President tells party pledges and the ex-service men to "go where it doesn't snow."

Take this—and no man will dare deny; everybody knows that the whole country would have applauded if Uncle Sam had met every soldier at the ship when he came back with a handclasp of benediction containing a crisp $500 bill, saying: "My boy, I am not paying you for your patriotism—I am just reaching out to you the hand of good fellowship to help you get on your feet. Civilian employees have drawn many times as much as you, and millionaires have become billionaires while you protected them. You stood amid the mud and misery, the ice and lice, the dearth and death, the horror and hell of war for them and for me, and with this check—not solos and anthems and cheers and tears—but with this check I help you to start life again in the land you have defended by every inch and atom of your loyal arms."

Ah, fellow Americans, you know that such a practical deed by Uncle Sam to his heroic defenders would have brought more than a hundred million Americans to their feet with a continent of ringing, singing approval.

If it would have been right to do it then, who dares to say—except a few reactionary administration defenders—that five years of pitiful double-dealing has canceled this grateful obligation? It is a poor brand of personal or national honor that hides behind "the statute of limitation."

All honor to the brave young fellow who nobly says, "I do not want any compensation for my patriotism"; but he and his friends must not indict the patriotism of his comrades who feel the need of help and the sting of neglect. One equation is certain; Republican leadership, through its five years of evasion, equivocation, and final repudiation of party pledges, has forfeited all right to the soldier vote in America.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, an early study of the adjusted-compensation proposal convinced me that it was a measure extending justice to the men who served and sacrificed. One of the reasons for this conclusion was the fact that during the late war the Government paid a bonus to practically every civil employee, and most of these bonus payments have been continued to the present day. Every employee in the classified service with a salary of $2,500 or less receives a bonus. Thus, prohibition agents, customs employees, janitors of public buildings, clerks of all kinds in Washington and throughout the country come under the bonus provision of the law. During the past six years we have paid over $250,000,000 as a bonus in addition to regular salaries; $30,000,000 of this went to the civilian personnel of the Army and Navy.

In fact, a bonus was paid to nearly every employee during the war except the fighting man of the Army and Navy, the man who left gainful employment, who suffered untold hardships, who went into places of danger carrying proudly the flag of his country that we might continue to exist as a nation and civilization be saved. I felt that this great Nation might well treat these men who were willing to sacrifice all as well as the civilian employees were treated in the matter of adjusting compensation. These civilian employees were doing their duty and no criticism attaches to them.

Feeling the justice of the proposal, it was made one of the issues of my campaign for nomination as Representative. The issue was discussed at practically every meeting, and I endeavored to make my position clear. What I said was in the nature of a promise of action, if elected, and was made before the attitude of the President was known.

My vote on this question has given me more concern than any other since I have been a Member of the House. Personal friends and supporters have urged me to vote to sustain the veto. My great desire is to follow the lead of the President, but I can not bring myself to disregard my pledges made in good faith. Common honesty requires the carrying out of campaign promises. Failure to do so justly sacrifices the confidence of friends and forfeits self-respect.

It was my privilege to serve in the World War at home and abroad. I entered the service before the declaration of war, leaving a business and my wife and children to serve my country to the best of my ability. My State, with commendable pride, desired to send a regiment of its own across the seas and in furtherance of that purpose I traveled its hills and its valleys seeking volunteers. As a result some twelve hundred joined the colors voluntarily. I knew them, their families, their ancestry. It was my endeavor as an officer to keep close to these men and to be of help to them in every way. Twenty-five hundred of the men of the regiment in which I went overseas were from the State of Tennessee, and I came to know them and to appreciate the sterling quality of the patriotism of these men of the South. I think I can speak for service men quite as well as some of the gentlemen who have addressed the House on the question now before us.

Speaking for them, I am not in sympathy, Mr. Speaker, with the criticisms of the veto message that have been uttered in this debate. It has been charged by able men, some of them my personal friends for whom I have the highest regard, that the message is an insult to the service men. These statements made for the purpose of partisan advantage are not substantiated by the text of the message. It is not a challenge. It is rather the honest statement of the objections of a courageous Executive in the faithful execution of the duties of his office.

Service men appreciate and honor a man with courage. They may differ with him in his conclusions, but if they are true to honest impulses they admire the man who stands out in the open and in an upstanding manner states his case. That is just what the President did.

A careful study of the message shows it to be a splendid appreciation of the high motives that brought millions of the best of our manhood to the service. The very highest tribute is paid when the President says, "The first duty of every citizen is to the Nation." The veterans of the World War performed this first duty. And again, "No way exists by which we can equalize the burdens or give adequate financial reward to those who served the Nation both in civil and military capacities in time of war. The respect and honor of their country will be rightfully theirs for evermore." When he stated "patriotism can not be bought nor sold. It is not hire and salary. It is not material but spiritual. It is one of the finest and highest of human virtues," he expressed truths to which every human heart responds.

In the message the President speaks for all the people in accordance with his duty as he sees it. No service man will criticize the performance of duty. The courageous statement of objections without regard to political effect should commend the message to every man and woman who served the Nation.

The President came from a people who put duty and patriotism above all other things. His forbears after service in the Revolution became pioneers in that undeveloped land of the Green Mountains, where the settlers were battling for independent existence. These forbears joined the men of valor who had fought against Canada and Great Britain, and were then defying the Continental Congress and all the other colonies. They established their own independence and maintained it against all the world for 13 years, and until the Union would accept admission as a sovereign State.

These pioneers were silent, God-fearing men, who made plain duty the test of citizenship. They labored with a stubborn soil, eked out a scanty existence, all the time molding character, until they wrought out of the wilderness a wonderful little State and peopled it with men and women who have been the strength of our Nation. You are all familiar with the work and service of Edmunds, Morrill, Proctor, Morton, Arthur, Hayes, Taft, and scores of other national figures whose forbears are of the common heritage of our President.

The characteristics of these pioneers have come down the generations. They have furnished the defense of the principles of the fathers at every crises of our history. They wrote into the law that memorable resolution of 1799, the guiding principle that made possible the continued existence of this Republic. They repelled foreign invasion. They stood firm as the rock against the assaults of the brave men of the South at Gettysburg. They helped swing open the gates of the Orient to the civilization of the West. One in twenty of the population of Vermont served in the World War, 75 per cent being volunteers. These pioneers and their descendants have written a record of service unmatched by achievements of other men in this country.

Calvin Coolidge is of these men. Born and reared amid humble surroundings, he knows the meaning of work, hard work on the farm, because he has done all of it. He knows the full meaning of earning an education, because he had a struggle to gain one. He knows what it means to earn money with which to pay taxes, because he has helped dig it out of the soil. He knows the value of honest service, because he has always rendered it. He has experienced the worries and faced the problems of the common people, because he is one of them. He speaks their language and gives voice to their ideals. The message is their call to a higher standard of patriotism.

We are passing through a period filled with great dangers. We need a President of calm judgment and fearless action, a man who will not turn from the straight pathway for personal advancement or cater to any group for political power. Such a man is now at the head of this Nation. No man better fitted by training, temperament, or experience ever occupied that position.

Born and reared where men do the day's work and live within their means, he has brought to the office a plain integrity and honesty of purpose which the people understand and embrace. His sense of duty, his patriotic zeal gives them a singular sense of security in their country and its institutions. They feel safe with him at the helm. The outstanding points of his character have won him the confidence of the American people to an extent that makes it one of the most striking things in all American political history.

In his native State, where he is known as a man is known by his friends and neighbors, he will have the support of the service men, both Democrats and Republicans. They accept the message as that of an honest Executive, standing courageously for what he believes to be right, and doing his duty without regard to its effect on the vote of any group.

When all this tumult has subsided and a proper appraisal can be made of this day there is one figure that will stand out in bold relief typifying the honesty of the people, the honor and conscience of the Nation, and that is our President, Calvin Coolidge.

BEER OF 2.75 PER CENT ALCOHOLIC STRENGTH

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, the question of the control of alcoholic beverages is a very old one in the United States and in other countries. I wish to state, in the first place, that my own personal attitude as a physician and law-abiding citizen with regard to the use of strong alcoholic liquors, meaning whisky, brandy, and other stronger alcoholic liquors, is and has been that they should be used with great moderation and in proper quantities and under proper conditions. I wish further to emphasize that any argument and statement that has been or will be made by me on this whole subject is made from the viewpoint of a law-abiding citizen who has been and always intends to be a sober man with respect to indulgence in alcoholic intoxicating liquors, and also from the viewpoint of a physician of long experience in the special study and treatment of the diseases known as alcoholism and insanity and other diseases complicated with excesses in the use of intoxicating liquors.

While I am, of course, aware that during the age-long discussion of the evils of excessive alcoholic indulgence a great moral question has been injected—and very properly so—into this whole question by well-meaning reformers and professional temperance advocates, I shall not, for the purposes of a purely medical presentation of this whole matter, discuss or refer to any moral or political aspects of this question, so important in its moral, sociological, economic, and health aspects. I shall confine my statement to the naked question of the leading medical facts, and particularly to the question of whether or not ordinary, well-brewed beer made of hops, barley, and malt, and containing 2.75 per cent alcoholic strength, is in fact intoxicating from a strictly medical and legal standpoint.

As to the medical use of the so-called stronger alcoholic liquors, like proof whisky, brandy, and so forth, I wish to refer to the fact that the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States specifically provides that "no intoxicating liquors shall be manufactured, transported, or sold, except for medicinal and sacramental purposes." Under the ruling of former Attorney General Palmer there existed no prohibition against the use for medicinal purposes in reasonable quantities of spirituous or intoxicating liquors—that is, whisky and brandy and wine and beer or other malt liquors of sufficient alcoholic content to be intoxicating—if in the good and honest judgment of the attending physician they should be used in the treatment of disease. This contention of the medical profession has been since upheld in two different decisions of the United States district courts, and the question will be finally settled, it is to be hoped in the near future, by the United States Supreme Court as to whether physicians shall be permitted, within the spirit of the eighteenth amendment, to prescribe such intoxicating liquors without any regulation of the prohibition enforcement and other departments of the United States Government. It is obvious that if physicians can legally prescribe and furnish, as they may do under the Volstead law, to any one patient in any period of 10 days as much as one-quarter of a gallon of vinous liquor—that is, wine of 24 per cent alcoholic content by volume—and can also furnish or prescribe for any one person within the same period of time any liquor that contains as much as 1 pint of intoxicating liquors, such as the strongest whisky or brandy, there would be no violation of the spirit of the prohibition amendment if physicians were permitted—as they are not permitted under the Volstead law—to prescribe beer and malt liquors of much less alcoholic content.

The leading medical authorities in the United States and Europe indorse the use, in all their textbooks and teachings for physicians and medical students from time immemorial, of beer, stout, porter, and ale as types of malt liquors to be used in the successful treatment of various diseases.

Prof. Hobart Amory Hare, professor of therapeutics and materia medica at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in his textbook of Practical Therapeutics, seventeenth edition, 1918, says on page 82:

> Stout and porter and well-brewed beer are of value in wasting diseases and in convalescence from acute diseases and for nursing women. Most of the beer in America contains about 4 to 6 per cent of alcohol.

George Butler, A. M., M. D., and so forth, professor of therapeutics and pharmacology, Chicago College of Medicine and Surgery, and so forth, in his textbook of Materia Medica, Pharmacology, and Therapeutics, sixth edition, says:

> Alcohol in the form of beer or ale, taken before or during meals, is an efficient stomachic [meaning a good medicine and tonic for the stomach]; a tonic for dyspepsia and weakened digestion attendant on or upon convalescence from acute diseases. Convalescents are often greatly benefited by some form of alcohol as it is contained in beer and ale. When the digestion becomes impaired as the result of physical or mental exhaustion the drug (alcohol in the form of beer and ale) serves a useful purpose as a tonic.

Prof. Oliver T. Osborne, department of medicine, Yale University, is also authority for the following statement:

Strenuous exercise and hard labor will allow a man to take more alcohol without harm than can be used by a man of sedentary habits. There is no doubt alcohol can be used as a substitute for food in the place of sugar and starch. In emergencies it may thus sustain and give life.

This particularly applies to the use of malt liquors, beer, ale, stout, and porter, and it also proves that alcohol, particularly the small percentage contained in malt liquors, is a food as well as a reconstructive tonic, stimulant, and tissue builder in wasting and other diseases.

Prof. Otis Larch, medical department, Tulane University, at New Orleans, in his standard textbook on Medical Diagnosis, page 39, says:

Malt beer is rich in carbohydrates and is frequently prescribed.

Sir Victor Horsley, M. D., and Doctor Sturge, the authors of the well-known book "Alcohol and the Human Body," and who violently oppose the use of intoxicating beverages and whose book was written solely against the use of strong alcoholic drinks as beverages, in discussing the effect of malt liquors on the human digestion, page 212, state:

These beverages (malt liquors) contain only from 4 to 6 per cent of alcohol, so that the alcohol contained in them could scarcely ever on its own acount produce any bad effect.

Note that the claim is made by this most widely read and extensively quoted medical authority on the effects of alcohol on the human body that the effect of malt liquors, which include beer, porter, and stout, of the small alcoholic content of from 4 to 6 per cent, could scarcely ever on its own account produce any bad effect, except through the effects of large quantities of such beverages, if taken with meals, causing dilution of the food in the process of digestion.

Everyone knows that too much water, coffee, tea, and so forth, taken with meals would retard digestion in the same way, and also that digestion is not only not interfered with but that it is aided by reasonable quantities of good malt liquor, beer, ale, porter, or stout. The existing Volstead law permits regularly licensed physicians to legally prescribe for their patients whisky, brandy, wines, beer, and malt liquors of such alcoholic strength as to be intoxicating. But with the excuse of preventing the abuse of prescribing beer, by a very small percentage of physicians, the pending measure (H. R. 7294) proposes arbitrarily and without reason to prohibit physicians from prescribing beer and malt liquors of standard alcoholic strength of 3 to 6 per cent. This bill, notwithstanding this prohibition as regards the prescribing of such beer, permits physicians to legally prescribe for medical purposes spirituous and vinous liquors—wines—that contain not more than 24 per cent of alcohol by volume, provided that not more than one-fourth of a gallon of such vinous liquor is prescribed or furnished for use for any one person within any period of 10 days, and also so permits the prescribing or furnishing by the physician of any liquor that contains as much as one-half pint of alcohol—grain alcohol—for the use of any one person within a period of 10 days.

Both the existing Volstead law and the amendments to it now proposed constitute a grave interference with the rights of both the physician and his patients, for whom he should at all times have the right to prescribe any drug or agent which, in his honest and good judgment, is really needed. Under the Harrison narcotic drug law and under all of the laws of the respective States intended to regulate the prescribing of dangerous narcotic and other drugs, the physician is permitted to prescribe most poisonous narcotic drugs, under proper regulations, but he can not under the pending measure prescribe any beer of the weak alcoholic strength of from 3 to 6 per cent. How inconsistent and absurd. It is also a matter of fact, from the medical point of view, that this proposed law will not meet the needs of the physician and his patients in respect to the alcoholic and vinous liquor which the physician may legally prescribe or furnish. I as a physician practicing for over 30 years in the specialty of treating alcoholic and drug addicts, know of my own knowledge and experience that many alcoholic and other cases require for the most scientific treatment of their diseases, particularly in the so-called tapering treatment of alcoholism and delirium tremens cases, from 2 to 3 fluid ounces of proof whisky, diluted, every three of four hours, one patient thus requiring more whisky in 24 hours than the physician is allowed to legally prescribe in any period of 10 days.

This amount would be actually necessary in many such cases to save a valuable life or to prevent an outright attack of insanity. The only way, legally, the physician could obtain a greater amount of spirituous liquor—that is, the equivalent to about 1 pint of proof whisky or brandy which he could prescribe in a 10-day period—would be for him to prove to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the circumstances in a given case would constitute an extraordinary reason. This would mean, according to the experience of many physicians who may have dozens of such cases under treatment, that either the physician would incur a risk of a prison term in a Federal prison if he took the law into his own hands in order to save the life of his patient, or if he obeyed this unjust law, allow his patient to die because of the lack of proper medical treatment.

These restrictions are all the more unjust because they not only allow the prescribing of too small quantities of liquors, as just pointed out, but because they limit the physician to 100 prescriptions in 90 days, although a busy physician might have honest and urgent reason to use many more than this number of prescriptions in this period of time.

After a study of this whole question from the viewpoint of the ultimate welfare of our country, I believe that the deplorable conditions as regards increasing drug addictions and bootlegging, and the increasing contempt for the laws that are causing these conditions, could be rapidly relieved if the Congress would pass reasonably liberal laws for the enforcement of the prohibition amendment; if, instead of fixing arbitrarily one-half of 1 per cent of alcoholic content for beer, an alcoholic content were fixed sufficient to make decent beer—to prevent the fermentation of the vegetable ingredients contained in the beer, this would satisfy the masses of people and bring about more real temperance and more respect for law and order. If respect for law and order is not restored in this country, it would be difficult to predict the consequences.

As a protest against these conditions and against the enactment of new blue laws of repression and oppression, the people of the district I have the honor to represent here, the borough of Queens, New York, will parade, to the number of many thousands, made up of law-abiding citizens of all classes, to-morrow night.

I hope my esteemed colleagues, particularly those of the majority party who control the committees which have reported this un-American, unreasonable, unjust, and repressive measure, will agree that I have made out the case, at least from the medical side, as to the usefulness of beer and malt liquor in the practice of medicine, and that is strictly the issue drawn in the most important section—section 2— of the pending bill.

Appended are the scientific opinions of Noble P. Barnes, M. D., chairman of the council of the American Therapeutic Society, Arlington Hotel, Washington, D. C., and also resolutions of the American Therapeutic Society:

THE ARLINGTON,
Washington, D. C., Saturday, June 25, 1921.

Mr. J. J. KINDRED, M. D.,
House of Representatives of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KINDRED: The secretary of the American Therapeutic Society, Dr. Lewis Taylor, is not in the city, but will return to Washington Monday morning. I have left instructions for him to get into communication with you at once upon his return.

The mental note I have of the resolution of the American Therapeutic Society is as follows: "That physicians and surgeons should have the unimpaired right of prescribing this drug (alcohol) without any foolish restrictions."

The society does not approve of liquor-prescribing doctors, the society does not wish to interfere with or violate the eighteenth amendment, but the society does want to go on record as maintaining that no legislative body or enforcement authority should limit or hamper a doctor of medicine in the legitimate exercise of his functions as a physician.

Alcohol, per se, is a drug, and should be classed as such. It has a definite physiological action and a wide range of therapeutic application. It is not only useful but absolutely necessary in the treatment of certain conditions and in the manufacture of other drugs.

The restrictions, regulations, and taxation placed about and upon this drug to-day makes an enormous cost to the sick, who are usually poor. The limit in quantity—e. g., a pint of whisky every two weeks—and other regulations that are effected by ignorant if well-meaning clerks and Government officials are little short of insults to the honest, scientific members of the medical profession.

Alcoholic products constituting the so-called intoxicating liquors should likewise be classed as drugs. Just here I will add that the proper persons to determine the toxicity of drugs are recognized scientific physicians, chemists, and physiologists.

There are many conditions where light wines, beer, ale, stout, porter, etc., are needed, and if the articles contain an intoxicating amount of alcohol they, too, should be classed as drugs, and the physician should be given the privilege to practice his profession with as little red tape as possible. An active scientific physician with his mind occupied in important problems does not want to be annoyed by excessive clerical detail.

I am inclosing a published letter written by Dr. C. E. de M. Sajous. Doctor Sajous is a member of the council of the American Therapeutic Society and one of the recognized leaders in the American medical profession. His deductions are well worth serious consideration.

Thanking you for your courtesy to me and your interest in matters pertinent to the medical profession, I am, with every good wish,

Yours fraternally,

N. P. BARNES, M. D.,
Chairman of the Council of the American Therapeutic Society.

AMERICAN THERAPEUTIC SOCIETY,
June 27, 1921.

Hon. JOHN J. KINDRED.

DEAR MR. KINDRED: At the request of Dr. Noble P. Barnes, I am sending you the resolution adopted by the American Therapeutic Society at its last annual meeting, which is as follows:

"Whereas the use of ethyl alcohol and its preparations for medicinal and surgical purposes is not only justified but also indicated by observations made by laboratory investigations and clinical experience: Be it

"Resolved by the members of the American Therapeutic Society in convention assembled, That alcohol has a proper place in the treatment of disease; and be it further

"Resolved, That the least possible restrictions in the use of this drug compatible with the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment be imposed on the members of the medical profession; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the proper authorities."

Very truly yours,

LEWIS H. TAYLOR,
Secretary American Therapeutic Society.

According to my own personal experiments as a practicing physician of more than 30 years' experience, and also in accordance with the experience of many other physicians in this and other countries who have studied the question from a purely scientific point of view, beer made of hops, malt, and barley of 2.75 per cent alcoholic content, have concluded that such beer of such alcoholic content is not intoxicating, either in a legal, scientific, or other sense.

What do we mean by intoxication?

There are first, second, and third degrees of intoxication.

The first stage of intoxication from alcohol would cause the same symptoms or signs as would the exhilaration that is caused by strong tea or coffee in a person of average susceptibility to either one of these agents. The symptoms of the first stages are a slight acceleration or increase of the heart action, a slight increase in breathing, or respiration, and a subjective feeling of well-being or mild exhilaration.

These symptoms of the first stage of intoxication, which is not intoxication at all in a scientific sense or in a legal sense, would be exactly the same whether they were caused by one or two pints or a stomach full of beer or by one or two cups of strong coffee or tea.

The second and third stages of intoxication or poisoning by alcohol, such as the mental symptoms of hallucination and other mental disturbances, like extreme mental exhilaration, deepening into more or less stupor and coma, and the physical symptoms, such as muscular relaxation, weak and failing heart action, cool, moist skin, noisy breathing, livid lips, are scientifically and legally intoxication.

It is absurd and entirely unfounded both from a legal and scientific standpoint to claim that the full capacity of the human stomach, which would amount to about two pints, or a quart, of 2.75 per cent beer under the ordinary condition of the stomach, could cause intoxication in a scientific sense or in a legal sense.

This brings us to the all-important questions of the percentage of alcoholic strength in a given alcoholic beverage that will cause intoxication as defined by the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States and by medical science.

I have made actual personal experiments with myself and my friends which conclusively prove that beer of 2.75 per cent alcoholic content consumed by us to the full capacity of the stomach would not and could not cause intoxication.

Two pints of bear, which is about the capacity of the stomach under its ordinary condition, meaning about six modern beer glasses full of beer, contain not enough alcoholic content or anywhere near enough to cause intoxication.

Two pints of beer, meaning 32 fluid ounces, would contain, in the strength of 2.75 per cent alcoholic content, only about 3½ dessert teaspoonfuls, or less, or ethyl alcohol or grain alcohol, which is certainly not enough to intoxicate any normal adult.

As to whether or not this amount of beer or any other amount of beer which the human stomach is capable of taking would intoxicate must be considered both from a legal and medical standpoint of the susceptibility or immunity of the average, normal human being under normal conditions of life in a state of civilized society.

The observations and experiments to which I have referred in my verbal statement before the Judiciary Committee and which statement here follows are fully borne out by the sworn medical statements of such eminent physicians as Dr. Amory Hobart Hare, for many years past the distinguished professor of materia medica in the Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia; and also of Dr. Smith Ely Jelliffe, a distinguished specialist and professor of materia medica in the College of Physicians and Surgeons—Columbia University—city of New York; and also of Dr. A. A. Brill, a distinguished specialist in mental and nervous diseases, of the city of New York.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN J. KINDRED, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF NEW YORK, SECOND CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, BEFORE THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JUNE 4, 1924

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire to discuss the naked fact as to the intoxicability of beer containing 2.75 per cent of alcohol. My conclusions are founded upon extensive reading and investigation of the whole subject of the physiological effects of alcohol and the various concoctions or beverages containing alcohol.

My observations and conclusions are particularly founded on personal observations, personal experiences of myself as a sober man, and on others as to the actual effects of beer containing 2.75 per cent alcohol, with a view to observing whether it were possible that any quantity of beer of this alcoholic content that could be contained in the average human stomach could cause intoxication in any sense of the word.

In discussing the question of alcoholic intoxication we must, of course, be guided by what may be called both a medical and legal definition of intoxication.

Mr. DYER. Doctor, will you allow an interruption for a moment?

Mr. KINDRED. Certainly, Judge DYER.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the members of the committee will be needed on the floor in these closing days of Congress, and I think we should be there. I ask that the witness, my colleague, and such other men as have statements file them with the committee.

Mr. KINDRED. I can conclude very quickly.

The CHAIRMAN. Doctor, as your statement is a scientific statement, would it not be possible, as well as proper, that you submit it in writing and let it be added to the record?

Mr. KINDRED. I readily agree. If you will allow me to make in conclusion just one or two remarks, I should like to do so.

My conclusion, based on medical facts to be herewith filed with your committee, is that beer of 2.75 per cent alcoholic content is not intoxicating, based on experiments with myself as a sober man and as an average normal being, in which experiments I included many other normal men who tried their best to get drunk on 2.75 per cent beer. Their stomachs were not capable of containing enough beer of that two and three quarters of 1 per cent alcoholic content to produce even the first stage of intoxication as defined by medical science.

No more effects could be produced from that quantity of 2.75 per cent beer than are produced constantly by one or two cups of strong coffee or tea.

With that statement I shall be glad to file my further statement.

Mr. PERLMAN. How many drinks were taken in, say, five hours?

Mr. KINDRED. About six or seven or eight modern beer glasses, which would contain, speaking more accurately, about 32 fluid ounces, and 32 fluid ounces of beer with 2.75 per cent of alcoholic strength could contain about seven small teaspoonfuls of ethyl alcohol or grain alcohol, which would not make any normal being drunk, especially in such diluted form as 2.75 beer. This would be absorbed so slowly by the stomach and circulation that it would not have even the intoxicating effects of that amount of alcohol taken in undiluted form, as I will show by the testimony of reliable medical authorities.

The CHAIRMAN. The hearings are now closed, except that all statements of Members of Congress which they desire to file may be submitted to the committee for addition to the record.

Mr. DYER. I ask an amendment to that, that Mr. Volstead may be permitted to file a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection to that. I think it is magnifying an incident as to the recollection of what was said at that time, and it does not require a statement, because he explains it in his testimony afterwards.

Mr. DYER. As a courtesy to a former chairman of the committee, I should like to ask that.

The CHAIRMAN. As a courtesy to a former chairman, we will permit it, although I think it is utterly irrelevant.

Mr. DYER. I move we adjourn.

Professor Hare, in a sworn statement on this subject, deposes as follows:

IV. It is not generally known that there is produced in the human body every day certain quantities of alcohol, not infinitesimal, but in very definite amount, and for this reason alcohol can not be considered a foreign substance, and therefore can be considered as being practically at all times present in the human body. This alcohol is produced principally, if not entirely, by fermentation processes in the intestinal tube; it is absorbed and is contained in the fluids and tissues of the body in general.

It appears, therefore, that the body is accustomed daily to the utilization or oxidation of a certain percentage of alcohol, which is utilized or oxidized in exactly the same manner as alcohol which is produced outside the body and then swallowed in ordinary quantity. For these reasons alcohol can not be considered as a foreign substance to which the tissues are entirely unaccustomed, and the effects which it produces are governed entirely by the quantity ingested and by the ability of the body to deal with a substance with which it is qualified to deal. If taken in such quantities as to be beyond the power of the body to utilize it or oxidize it, it, like every other substance capable of being swallowed, is capable of producing evil effects. This is true, for example, of water and ordinary table salt. In other words, the question of the power or influence of a given substance introduced into the body is determined by the quantity and concentration of that substance. In general terms the greater the quantity and the greater the concentration the greater the effect, and, conversely, the smaller the quantity and the greater the dilution the less the effect. Salt, if taken in strong solution, irritates the stomach and causes vomiting or, if not vomited, causes such an outpouring of liquid from the tissues of the body into the stomach and intestines as to cause diarrhea. So, too, it is generally known that a considerable quantity of 50 per cent solution of alcohol when taken undiluted may, by its irritant action on the stomach, produce injury, or by its rapid absorption into the blood may produce a condition which is commonly called drunkenness. On the other hand, it is generally recognized that the same quantity of alcohol when diluted with water, so that the alcohol content by per cent is low, is absorbed so slowly as to be deprived of its power or influence in direct ratio with the degree of its dilution. This is due to the fact that the dilution results in a greater volume of fluid having to be absorbed, with a consequent slow or delayed entrance of the alcohol into the blood, so that there is at no time a very large quantity in that fluid. During the time of this slow absorption the system is busily engaged in oxidizing or destroying the alcohol as it enters in comparatively small quantities, with the result that the total quantity of alcohol present in the blood at a given moment is comparatively small. In one instance the alcohol may be said to be toxic, because it overwhelms the ability of the body to deal with it, just as water may be toxic when taken in such quantity that the body can not deal with it. On the other hand, if alcohol is taken so that the body can deal with and destroy it, minute by minute, there is never a time at which it can act as alcohol and, therefore, can not exercise any intoxicating properties.

It follows from the foregoing that if a man drinks a considerable quantity of alcohol of such concentration as to equal 50 per cent it will enter his blood more rapidly than if it is in dilute form and therefore more rapidly than he can deal with it, whereas if he drinks a liquid containing a comparatively small percentage of alcohol, or, in other words, alcohol in a highly diluted form, it may be delivered to those parts of the body which utilize or oxidize the alcohol so slowly that it will never be present in sufficient quantity to produce any of the definite effects caused by alcohol which has escaped oxidation. The rapidity with which an alcoholic fluid is swallowed and the degree of its dilution to a large extent determines its effects, or, in other words, a man in one or two swallows, or one drink, of a 50 per cent solution would take as much alcohol as would a man who ingested about 1 pint of beer. The dilution in the pint of beer results in so slow an absorption of the alcohol content present as to give the body an opportunity to deal with or oxidize it as it is absorbed.

As illustrative of the delaying effect of dilution upon the absorption of alcohol, attention may be called to the well-known fact that all the strong alcoholic beverages commonly used produce their effect much more mildly if food is taken with them than if they are taken without food.

These deductions are supported by the following practical observations:

1. I have in times past taken as much as 1 quart of beer in one hour without any manifestations of intoxication, the said beer containing a higher percentage of alcohol than 2.75 per cent, by weight, although I am not an habitual user of beer or other alcoholic beverages.

2. I have frequently observed many other persons do likewise.

3. I have given whisky and brandy containing amounts of alcohol far in excess of the quantity of alcohol contained in 2.75 per cent beer in a quantity that a person can ordinarily drink several times a day without noticing symptoms of intoxication.

4. A careful study of the report of the Central Control Board of Great Britain (liquor traffic), published in 1918, which board was composed in part of men recognized the world over as authorities upon the influence of drugs or medicines upon the living body, confirms the opinions reached by me from personal experience and observation.

From these personal experiences and observations and considerations of the literature on the subject I am of the opinion that beer containing not to exceed 2.75 per cent of alcohol by weight is not intoxicating under the legal definition of that term.

Dr. Smith Ely Jelleffe also says:

III. I first became interested in the action of alcohol while I was an instructor at Columbia University. I made special experimental studies for four or five years, psychological investigations, as well with students and animals, and made a number of extensive experimental studies with animals and men on changes in the nervous tissues due to acute and chronic poisoning, alcoholic and otherwise, some of the results of which have been incorporated in some of the articles referred to, especially studies on multiple neuritis and Korsakow psychosis, and the mentality of the alcoholic, morphine, heroin, alcohol, and other drug addicts. In addition I have seen thousands of acute and chronic alcoholic cases in the wards of the City Hospital, Bellevue, Bloomingdale Hospital, the Government Hospital for the Insane, Binghamton State Hospital, Hospital of La Salpetriere in Paris, and the Charity Hospital in Berlin, and to a great extent I have made psychological investigation in private practice of patients addicted to the various grades of alcoholism.

IV. Practically all of the older data relative to the subject of alcoholism and the taking of beer or light wines pertain to solutions of from 4 to 12 per cent of alcohol, and there are practically no available data that can be said to be scientific or medically reliable on beers containing less than 4 or 5 per cent of alcohol by weight.

V. A very wide investigation of the literature of the subject reveals that nearly all of the statistics concerning beer drinking dealt with beers of from 6 to 10 per cent in strength. The extensive psychological and neuro-muscular experiments of Kraepelin were conducted on beers and alcoholic beverages of far greater alcoholic strength than 2.75 per cent by weight. In some of these cases the alcoholic percentage was not stated and the results of these experiments are thereby entirely vitiated.

VI. From my personal experience and investigation and from observations made upon others, as well as from my study of the experiences, investigations, and experiments recorded by others in the scientific literature of many countries, I am of the opinion that beer or any beverage which contains not to exceed 2.75 per cent of alcohol by weight, when consumed by an ordinary man or woman in such quantities as the human stomach can ordinarily hold, is not intoxicating.

Dr. A. A. Brill makes a sworn statement, as follows:

V. I have for many years taken a keen interest in the subject of inebriety, especially in its psychological aspects, and have examined a great number of persons suffering from various manifestations of alcoholism.

VI. I am acquainted with the substance now known and sold as "war beer," both from my own consumption of the same and from being in company of others who have drunk it; which substance, I am informed and verily believe, has an alcoholic content not to exceed 2.75 per cent by weight; and from my experience and observation I am of the opinion that such beer which is now made and sold would not tend to cause inebriation or alcoholism in any average, normal adult drinking the same; but, on the contrary, it exerts a very beneficial effect, and in my opinion it would be impossible for any such person to drink a sufficient quantity of this substance to cause drunkenness.

From both the medical and legal viewpoints, therefore, it will be evident to any person who is possessed of good common sense and who is without prejudice that well-brewed beer of 2.75 per cent alcoholic strength is not intoxicating within the meaning of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore a pure wholesome beer of 2.75 per cent alcoholic strength should be permitted, under the provisions of the eighteenth amendment, to be manufactured, transported, and sold as a matter of constitutional right.

COMPARISON OF LABOR PROVISIONS OF THE TRANSPORTATION ACT WITH THOSE OF THE BARKLEY-HOWELL BILL

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Barkley-Howell bill by printing in parallel columns a synopsis of the present provisions of the transportation act and corresponding provisions in the Barkley-Howell bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I am inserting a brief analysis and comparison in parallel columns of the labor provisions of the transportation act of 1920 with the provisions of the bill prepared by representatives of the railway brotherhoods and known as the Barkley-Howell bill:

COMPARISON IN GENERAL OF PROVISIONS OF LABOR PROVISIONS IN TRANSPORTATION ACT WITH THOSE IN BARKLEY-HOWELL BILL

TRANSPORTATION ACT	BARKLEY BILL
SEC. 300. The term "carrier" includes: (a) Any express company. (b) Any sleeping-car company. (c) Any carrier by railroad subject to the interstate commerce act, except a street, interurban, or suburban electric railway not operating as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation.	SECTION 1. The term "carrier" is enlarged to include the provisions of section 300, but also the following: (a) Interurban and suburban electric railways operating as independent units. (b) Bureaus, associations, committees, and institutions, etc., in furtherance of interest of carriers. (c) Barges, boats, tugs, bridges, ferries. (d) Other transportation facilities, whether electric, gas, or steam.
SEC. 301. Duty upon carriers and employees to settle: "It shall be the duty of all carriers and their officers, employees, and agents to exert every reasonable effort and adopt every available means to avoid any interruption to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees or subordinate officials thereof."	SEC. 2. General duty: "It shall be the duty of all carriers and all officers, agents, employees, and subordinate officials to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, and working conditions, and to settle all disputes arising out of the application of said agreements in order to avoid any interruption to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees or subordinate officials thereof."
SEC. 301. Disputes first decided in conference: "All such disputes shall be considered and, if possible, decided in conference between representatives designated and authorized so to confer by the carriers or the employees or subordinate officials thereof, directly interested in the dispute. If any dispute is not decided in such conference, it shall be referred by the parties thereto to the board which under the provisions of this title is authorized to hear and decide such dispute."	SEC. 3. (A) (1) The provision is substantially the same as in the transportation act: "All disputes arising out of (a) grievances, or the application of all agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, or working conditions, or (b) proposed changes in rates of pay, rules, or working conditions between a carrier and its employees or subordinate officials shall be considered and, if possible, decided, with all expedition, in conference between representatives designated and authorized so to confer, respectively, by the carriers and by the employees or subordinate officials thereof interested in the dispute." (This provision is followed by provisions relating to the designation of representatives, time, and places of meeting which are not in existing law.)
SEC. 302. Boards of adjustment are permissive and the representatives are paid by their own group, not out of the public Treasury. "Railroad boards of labor adjustment may be established by agreement between any carrier, group of carriers, or the carriers as a whole, and any employees or subordinate officials of carriers, or organization or group of organizations thereof."	SEC. 3 (B) There are established four adjustment boards, as follows: No. 1. Consists of 14 members, 7 from carriers and 7 from employees, from engineers, firemen, conductors, and other operating employees. No. 2. Consists of 14 members, 7 from carriers and 7 from shop employees, such as boilermakers, other mechanics, and helpers. No. 3. Consists of 6 members, 3 from carriers and 3 from clerks, station workers, laborers, etc.

TRANSPORTATION ACT—CON.	BARKLEY BILL—CON.
	No. 4. Consists of 6 members, 3 from carriers and 3 from marine workers, such as masters, pilots, longshoremen, marine engineers, etc.
Appointed by employees and management as they agree.	Appointed by President from nominees by employee organizations and managements. Only "nationally organized crafts" of employees can send in nominations.
Salaries of members and employees to be met by the parties, not the public.	Salaries $7,000 per year, payable out of Public Treasury. "Can employ and fix salaries of such employees as may be necessary."
No specific provision as to powers.	Are given extensive powers as to conducting hearings, including right to require access to all books and papers.
ADJUSTMENT BOARDS	ADJUSTMENT BOARDS
SEC. 303. Jurisdiction applies only to disputes involving grievances, rules, or working conditions.	SEC. 4. (A) "Has jurisdiction only as to grievances or application of agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, and working conditions."
Provision is made as to instituting proceedings before adjustment boards, including petitions by unorganized employees.	No mention of how proceedings are to be commenced.
SEC. 304. Establishes a Railroad Labor Board, composed of nine members, as follows: (a) Three from labor group. (b) Three from management group. (c) Three from public generally. All are appointed by President. Salary, $10,000.	Repeals provision as to Labor Board.
	Establishes Board of Mediation and Conciliation, composed of five. Salary, $12,000. All appointed by the President. No member can, while an active member or officer in employee organization, or an officer of or pecuniarily interested in a carrier, shall be eligible. Salary, $12,000.
Subject to civil service; has power to appoint and remove employees.	Can employ as see fit and fix salaries.
SEC. 307. Has appellate jurisdiction as to grievances, rules, and working conditions from adjustment boards.	SEC. 5. Has appellate jurisdiction as to grievances or out of application of agreement relating to rates of pay, rules, or working conditions.
Has original jurisdiction as (1) to above if adjustment boards not organized; (2) as to wages not agreed to in conference upon request of either side or on own motion if likely to substantially interrupt commerce.	Has original jurisdiction to mediate only as to (1) changes in rates of pay, rules, or working conditions when not agreed on in conference when request for amicable adjustment is made by either party.
(3) May suspend agreements in conference if agreement for increased wages likely to necessitate a substantial readjustment of rates. Take testimony. As to this latter decision, one of public must concur.	(2) No jurisdiction whatever if parties agree. No power of suspension. Confined merely to mediation and conciliation.
Decisions and reasons to be published as required.	No power of decision.
	In event of failure to get parties to agree, only recourse is to request voluntary arbitration. Expressly made not illegal to refuse to arbitrate. Board names arbitrators if parties unable to agree. One of its members on request may sit in and observe.
	Award of arbitrators made final and conclusive as to the facts and as the merits of controversy and that both shall faithfully perform. This is qualified as to employees as follows:

TRANSPORTATION ACT—con.

BARKLEY BILL—con.

"(8) Nothing in this act shall be construed to require an individual employee or subordinate official to render labor or service without his consent, nor shall anything in this act be construed to make the quitting of his labor or service by any employee or subordinate official an illegal act; nor shall any court of the United States or of any State issue any process to compel the performance by any employee or subordinate official of such labor or service without his consent."

In other words, the award binds the carrier but not the employees, who have voluntarily agreed to arbitrate.

In the meantime the carrier is prohibited from changing rates of pay, rules, or working conditions prior to final action or without notice.

"(B) Any attempted change of rates of pay, rules, or working conditions by the carrier without notice, or prior to final action as hereinfore provided, shall be void, and the offender shall be liable in damages to each and every party aggrieved to the amount of double any loss occasioned by such unlawful action. Such damages shall be recoverable by appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district wherein the offense was committed, which proceeding may be brought by individuals or by representatives of classes of individuals aggrieved."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GALLIVAN, for 3 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. DYER, for 3 days, on account of very important business.

To Mr. FLEETWOOD, for 10 days, on account of business.

To Mr. GIBSON, for 7 days, on account of business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the immigration bill. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are they the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. RAKER. Well, public records and matters which I have gathered together.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, May 19, 1924, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

490. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Treasury Department under date of May 5, 1924, submitting claim of Rev. S. T. Matthews in the sum of $97.85, which has been adjusted and which requires an appropriation for its payment (H. Doc. No. 291); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

491. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1924, $45,000, and for the fiscal year 1925, $8,330,100; in all $8,375,500; also, a proposed authorization to use an existing appropriation (H. Doc. No. 292); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

492. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting two communications from the Postmaster General, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $3,023.72, to pay claims for damages to or losses of privately-owned property, which he has adjusted and which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 293); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

493. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Green Bay Harbor and Fox River, Wis., from Oshkosh to its mouth (H. Doc. No. 294); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with three illustrations.

494. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation "to authorize the appointment of Machinist Henry F. Mulloy, United States Navy, as an ensign in the regular Navy"; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SNELL: Committee on Rules. H. Res. 317. A resolution providing for the consideration of H. R. 9033, a bill declaring an emergency to exist in agricultural commodities, etc.; without amendment (Rept. No. 775). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FISHER: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 7909. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the construction, maintenance, and operation by the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., its successors and assigns, of a line of railroad across the southwesterly portion of the Fort Logan Military Reservation in the State of Colorado; without amendment (Rept. No. 777). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LITTLE: Committee on Claims. S. 1253. An act to reimburse J. B. Glanville and others for losses and damages sustained by them through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture; without amendment (Rept. No. 778). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PATTERSON: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 7018. A bill for the relief of Joy Bright Little; without amendment (Rept. No. 779). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. EDMONDS: Committee on Claims. H. R. 9080. A bill for the relief of Christina Conniff; without amendment (Rept. No. 780). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JACOBSTEIN (by request): A bill (H. R. 9292) to prohibit the collection of a surcharge for the transportation of persons or baggage in connection with the payment of parlor or sleeping car accommodations; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GIBSON (by request): A bill (H. R. 9293) to extend the commerce of the United States by creating the world commerce corporation and authorizing the establishment of foreign trade zones; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CASEY: A bill (H. R. 9294) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Nanticoke, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9295) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building at Plymouth, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RICHARDS: A bill (H. R. 9296) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Las Vegas, Nev.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PORTER: A bill (H. R. 9297) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Government of the Dominican Republic on account of the death of Juan Soriano, a Dominican subject, resulting from the landing of an airplane belonging to the United States Marine Corps at Guerra, Dominican Republic; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. COOPER of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 9298) to abolish the Railroad Labor Board, to provide for the settlement, mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of railway labor disputes between carriers and their employees and subordinate officials, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LAGUARDIA: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265) for the purpose of outlawing war and to establish permanent peace in the world; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 266) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JACOBSTEIN: Resolution (H. Res. 318) providing for an inquiry into the policy and methods of the Post Office Department in leasing private property for public purposes, and specifically the leasing of the Fitzhugh Street property in Rochester, N. Y., for a new parcel-post station; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. COOPER of Ohio: Resolution (H. Res. 319) for the consideration of H. R. 8578, to amend the act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, etc.; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. O'CONNELL of New York: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of New York for liberal appropriations for the National Guard and the Organized Reserves; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of New York urging Congress to provide a liberal appropriation for carrying out the spirit of the national defense act; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLACK of Texas: A bill (H. R. 9299) for the relief of John W. King; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURDICK: A bill (H. R. 9300) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Winsor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 9301) for the relief of W. J. Laffoon; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 9302) granting an increase of pension to Emma F. Niles; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL of Washington: A bill (H. R. 9303) for the relief of C. H. Reynolds, assignee of the Bitu-Mass Paving Co., of Spokane, Wash.; to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE

MONDAY, May 19, 1924

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who inhabitest eternity, we bless Thee that Thou art pleased to dwell with him of an humble and contrite heart. We beseech of Thee that such may be our qualifications that each of us may have Thee enthroned in our being, directing our every movement, influencing every decision and helping us to realize constantly that Thou art the judge of all things in human estate and destiny. Hear us, we beseech of Thee. Bless our land and all who have to do with its administration for the highest interests and holiest welfare. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, May 14, 1924, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

WORLD COURT

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a statement in the nature of a petition with respect to the adherence of the United States to the world court, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A STATEMENT WITH RESPECT TO ADHERENCE OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

To Members of the Senate of the United States:

The introduction by Senator LODGE, May 8, of a resolution to create a new world court throws into bold relief the fact that American public opinion overwhelmingly demands the prompt adherence by our Government to the protocol of signature of the Permanent Court of International Justice on the conditions formulated by Secretary Hughes, vigorously championed by President Harding, and approved by President Coolidge. The hearings on April 30 and May 1 before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations indisputably prove our people's support of the existing court.

More than 50 State and national organizations were interested in the hearings. Seldom, if ever, has any great public question received so nearly a unanimous indorsement as has this suggested adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice on the basis suggested by the Secretary of State and urged by President Harding in February, 1923, and by President Coolidge in his first message to Congress. The widespread and profound character of this popular demand was officially voiced on behalf of all of the following organizations whose representatives appeared before the subcommittee and categorically appealed for immediate action by the Senate to enable the administration to adhere to the permanent court:

American Bar Association, George W. Wickersham; American Federation of Labor, Edgar Wallace; Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Walker D. Hines; Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, Bishop Charles H. Brent and Rev. Sidney L. Gulick.

Official church bodies: American Unitarian Association, Rev. Edward Cummings; Central Conference of American Rabbis, Rabbi Abram Simon; Congregational Churches, Rev. Jason Noble Pierce; Methodist Episcopal Church (South), Rev. W. W. Pinson; Methodist Episcopal Church, Mr. F. P. Turner; Northern Baptist Convention, Rev. John M. Moore; Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, Rev. Arthur J. Brown; Presbyterian Church in the United States, Rev. Samuel H. Chester; Protestant Episcopal Church, Rev. Charles N. Lathrop; Reformed Church in United States, Rev. Charles E. Schaefer; Southern Baptist Convention, Rev. F. W. Boatwright; United Synagogue of America, Rabbi Adolph Coblenz; Society of Friends, Thomas Raeburn White.

Religious organizations: Church Peace Union, Prof. William I. Hull; Conference of Foreign Mission Boards, Mr. F. P. Turner; Council of Women for Home Missions, Mrs. Samuel Semple; World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches, Dr. Nehemiah Boynton; Connecticut Federation of Churches, Prof. William North Rice.

Women's national organizations: Young Women's Christian Association, Miss Agnes Peter; National League of Women Voters, Miss Ruth Morgan; General Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. Kate T. Abrams; National Council of Women, Mrs. Glen Swiggett; National Federation of Business and Professional Women, Miss Mary Stewart; National Congress of Mothers and Parent Teachers' Associations, Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton; American Association of University Women, Mrs. Martin Hutchins; American Federation of Teachers, Miss Selma Borchard; Girls' Friendly Society in America, Mrs. Reginald B. Stevenson; National Service Star Legion, Mrs. Henry F. Baker; Women's World Court Committee, Mrs. Raymond Morgan, chairman; California League of Women Voters, Miss Marian Delaney; Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, Mrs. James Morrison; New York Council to Prevent War, Mrs. Anna Garland Spencer; National Council of Jewish Women, Mrs. Alexander Wolf.

New York State Bar Association, Thomas S. Butler; League of Nations Non-Partisan Association, Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw, Everett Colby, Charles C. Bauer; World Peace Foundation, president A. Lawrence Lowell; Foreign Policy Association, James G. McDonald; Maryland Organizations, Dr. William H. Welsh, Theodore Marburg, John H. Latane.

In addition to the organizations actually represented at the hearings the following have officially in convention approved the adherence of the United States to the permanent court:

House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church.
National Council of the Congregational Churches.
Annual Conference Methodist Episcopal Clergy.
United Society of Christian Endeavor.
International Missionary Union.
National Association of Credit Men.
Baptist World Alliance.
Union Ministers' Meeting.

The following are among the well-known persons who either appeared at the hearings as individuals or sent approval of the Harding-Hughes permanent court plan to be filed in the records:

Nicholas Murray Butler, president Columbia University; Paul D. Cravath, New York; Charles W. Dabney, ex-president University of Cincinnati; Edward A. Filene, Boston; William D. Guthrie, New York; William B. Hale, Chicago; John Grier Hibben, president Princeton University; Manley O. Hudson, Harvard University; Charles Keyes, president Skidmore College; Right Rev. William Lawrence, bishop of Massachusetts; Samuel McCune Lindsay, New York; Samuel Mather, Cleveland; John H. McCracken, president Lafayette College; Charles A. Richmond, president Union College; Mrs. James T. Rourke, Bridgeport; Henry L. Stimson, New York; Isaac M. Ullman, New Haven; William Allen White, Emporia, Kans.; Ray Lyman Wilbur, president Stanford University.

The precise relation between the Permanent Court and the League of Nations was clearly explained.

The only argument against the United States adherence to the court which has impressed any considerable number of people—that the court may in some way be made a tool of the League of Nations—was completely refuted.

The opponents of the court have urged:

(1) That it is the creature of the league.

(2) That the judges are chosen by the league.

(3) That the court's expenses are paid by the league.

(4) That the court serves as private attorney of the league, because, in the discretion of the court, it may give advisory opinions.

All of these points were decisively answered in the course of the hearings:

(1) The court is in no sense the creature of the league. The statute of the court was originally drawn by a committee of jurists, of which Elihu Root was a member, and was given its final form as a result of mature deliberations in the council and assembly of the league. But the statute was not promulgated by the assembly and does not draw its force from any act of the assembly. It rests upon an independent, distinct, and separate treaty, called the protocol of signature of the Permanent Court of International Justice. This protocol has been signed by 47 powers. The United States can adhere to it without in any way becoming tied up with the League of Nations and without assuming any league obligations.

(2) The judges are elected by the council and assembly voting separately. This is the only arrangement ever worked out to overcome the hitherto insoluble problem of giving due weight to the voice of the great powers, while at the same time recognizing the equal sovereign rights of the smaller powers. The special interests of the great powers were recognized in the composition of the council of the league. Members of the league, great and small, have equal voice in the assembly. The United States could cooperate with these two bodies for the one purpose of electing judges without in any way being drawn into further cooperation. As the election may not be held oftener than once in nine years, except when a vacancy is to be filled, it is not an onerous obligation for the United States to assume.

(3) The budget of the court forms a separate part of the budget of the league. When a dollar is paid to the League of Nations 12 cents of it are put aside for the expenses of the court and can be used for no other purpose. But the United States could pay its contribution directly to the registrar of the court at The Hague. It need not pass through Geneva. This connection between the court and the league is merely administrative and does not in any way subordinate the judges to the influence of the league. One might as well argue that the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States are not independent of Congress because the funds for their salaries must be voted by Congress.

(4) It is true that in addition to cases directly submitted by the nations for adjudication the court may give advisory opinions to the council and assembly of the league. But this jurisdiction is not new to American lawyers, and a similar jurisdiction is possessed by our State supreme courts in about 10 States. The Massachusetts Supreme Court has had such jurisdiction since 1780, and has given about 140 opinions to the governor and legislature of the Commonwealth. The international court has shown by its refusal to render an advisory opinion in the case of Finland against Russia that this function will be exercised in an independent judicial way, while in several cases where the court has exercised it, as in the Tunis-Morocco dispute between Great Britain and France, such action has led directly to a settlement. It is clearly absurd, therefore, to speak of the court as the private attorney of the League of Nations.

We submit that the Permanent Court of International Justice represents the logical development of an essentially American movement under way for a generation. It is built on the foundation of the Permanent Court of Arbitration established in 1899, and on the work of the two Hague conferences. It is precisely this for which the United States was contending when the second Hague conference met in 1907. The court is now firmly established. It has begun its work. It has functioned for more than two years. Forty-seven peoples of the world are giving it their cordial support. Whether the United States acts or not, the court will go on. Nevertheless, the United States, the most powerful country in the world, one which has most eloquently argued for the settlement of international disputes by judicial means, and whose citizens have contributed in a unique way to the creation of this court, should not, in its own interest, stand aloof.

It is apparent from the almost universal support given President Harding's proposal to join the Permanent Court that favorable action by the Senate would meet with widespread approval throughout the country. Why, then, should there be further delay?

We submit that the organized churches, organized labor, organized women voters, organized members of the bar, organized university women, organized merchants, organized business and professional women, organized women's clubs, and organized teachers represent a vast majority of the voters of the United States and are expecting approval of the Harding-Hughes-Coolidge-Root permanent court plan before the recess adjournment.

In conclusion, we beg to quote from the address made by Secretary of State Hughes before the American Society of International Law at Washington, December 27, 1923:

> "It is not too much to say that there will be no world court if this court can not be made one, and whether or not it is to be in the fullest sense a world court depends upon our own action."

For the committee on arrangements:

JOHN H. FINLEY,
Chairman Commission on International Justice and Good Will, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.
WILLIAM PEIRSON MERRILL,
President Church Peace Union.
JOHN H. CLARKE,
President League of Nations Nonpartisan Association.
WILLIAM H. P. FAUNCE,
President World Peace Foundation.
Miss RUTH MORGAN,
Chairman Committee on International Relations, National League of Women Voters.
Mrs. RAYMOND MORGAN,
Chairman Women's World Court Committee.
JAMES G. MCDONALD,
Chairman Foreign Policy Association.

MAY 19, 1924.

THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, under the call for petitions and memorials I wish to file a paper, and I ask the permission of the Senate for a minute or two to explain it.

There have been some matters appearing recently in the National Republican, a paper that has been reading out of the party I think most of its good men, and I thought it would be interesting to get just a little idea of where the National Republican secured its funds and how it gets its subscribers. Thousands and thousands of people are getting it every week and wondering who pays for it. I have here a statement which, incidentally, is not up to date, but which shows contributions made for subscriptions to that paper by individuals and corporations between the 2d day of January, 1920, and the 23d day of September, 1920. As I understand it these subscriptions were made and the paper was sent to the persons for whom the money was contributed.

It is a list of 20 pages, naming the contributing corporations and individuals in various parts of the country, together with the amount of money they have sent in between those two dates. It is interesting to note, for instance, that Mr. Sinclair, of Teapot Dome fame, on the 26th of January, 1920, contributed $1,096, which I suppose paid for a year's subscription for 1,096 people. I am not going to comment upon the corporations which have made contributions, but I ask as a part of my remarks to insert the entire list in the RECORD, showing between the dates I have mentioned a total contribution of $70,178.16. I also ask that a list of the stockholders at about that time be printed, following the list of contributions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The capital stock of the National Republican Publishing Co. is $200,000—1,000 shares of preferred stock, at $100 par value, and 1,000 shares of common stock, at $100 par value. There are still held in the treasury 270 shares of preferred and 133 shares of common stock. The above is a list of the stockholders, together with their addresses and the amount of individual holdings. The common stock was issued as a bonus.

This statement is made to supplement, and in some respects to correct, testimony of Mr. George B. Lockwood, given from memory as to stockholders, and is taken from the records of the company.

R. H. FULLER,
For the National Republican Publishing Co.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator any information as to whether the circulation of the paper is larger now than it was at that time?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not know.

Mr. KING. My information is that it has increased in circulation very considerably, and I was wondering if the Senator had any information as to who paid for the increased circulation or for the ordinary circulation?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not at the present time any information beyond the last date which I have mentioned, September, 1920.

Mr. KING. I suppose the Senator is one of the able Republicans who have been read out of the party by this Republican organ?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, I suppose so; I have been told that is the case. I have not read it myself and do not care enough about it to read it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is the Senator able to advise us whether, upon subscriptions of that character, 1,096 names sent in by one individual accompanied by a payment of $1,096, they should be legitimately counted as subscriptions for the purpose of entitling the paper to reduced postal rates?

Mr. NORRIS. I assume the various amounts contributed by the various corporations and companies and individuals and committees named in the list I have sent to the desk were contributions made for subscriptions. I understand the subscription price is $1 a year, and that for every dollar contributed a name was sent to the paper and the paper was sent to that name for a year. However, I may be in error in regard to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is a matter upon which I desired to get information. It has been represented to me that subscriptions of that character do not form a proper basis under the law for according to a paper the favored postal rates, and that this paper is enjoying those postal rates notwithstanding that method of securing subscriptions. I wonder if it would not be appropriate to refer the matter to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for consideration?

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to referring it to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and, if the practice is contrary to the law and the Post Office Department has never before had any notice of it or found it out, I hope it will take notice of what has happened here to-day and will do its duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers presented by the Senator from Nebraska will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CUMMINS (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair), from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1869) for the incorporation of the Grand Army of the Republic, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1042) to provide for the establishment of a probation system in the United States courts, except in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2178) to relieve United States district judges from signing an order admitting, denying, or dismissing each petition for naturalization, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PEPPER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 2172) to amend section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 750), and to provide fees for executing applications for passports and for issuing the same, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 564) thereon.

Mr. LADD, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 3047) authorizing joint investigations by the United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of Soils of the United States Department of Agriculture to determine the location and extent of potash deposits or occurrence in the United States and improved methods of recovering potash therefrom, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 697) providing for the disposal of certain lands on Crooked and Pickerel Lakes, Mich., and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 563) thereon.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3236) to regulate the practice of optometry in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRELD, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2799) to provide for quarters, fuel, and light for employees of the Indian field service (Rept. No. 565); and

A bill (H. R. 5416) to authorize the setting aside of certain tribal lands within the Quinaielt Indian Reservation in Washington for lighthouse purposes (Rept. No. 566).

Mr. HARRELD also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3111) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Stockbridge Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 567); and

A bill (H. R. 4835) to pay tuition of Indian children in public schools (Rept. No. 568).

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FERRIS:

A bill (S. 3329) granting an increase of pension to Mary Edna Peirce; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DALE:

A bill (S. 3330) granting a pension to May H. Colby;

A bill (S. 3331) granting an increase of pension to Emma M. Bowman; and

A bill (S. 3332) granting an increase of pension to Melissa S. Lee; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3333) for the relief of Thomas W. Morgan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3334) granting a pension to Lizzie C. J. Cluett (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3335) granting a pension to Ray D. Ingersoll (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3336) granting a pension to Nettie J. Davis (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3337) granting a pension to Lucresia Burley (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3338) granting a pension to Harriett P. Trudell (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3339) granting a pension to Katherine Stapleton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 3340) for the relief of George B. Todd; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3341) granting an increase of pension to James A. Chalfant; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 3342) for the relief of Robert M. Foster; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 127) to provide that the powers and duties conferred upon the Governor of Alaska under existing law for the protection of wild game animals and wild birds in Alaska be transferred to and be exercised by the Secretary of Agriculture; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. HOWELL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 128) to limit the compensation that may be paid under the Federal farm loan act; ordered to lie on the table.

LEE BROCK

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 228), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the appropriations for the contingent fund of the Senate, to Lee Brock, of Nashville, Tenn., the sum of $142.80 for expenses incurred in examination of witnesses in contested nomination of postmaster at Dickson, Tenn.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN SYSTEM

Mr. HOWELL submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 229), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate pro tempore is authorized to appoint a special committee of three members, which shall investigate the Federal farm loan system and the Federal Farm Loan Board and report its findings, together with recommendations for corrective legislation. The committee is authorized to hold hearings, to sit during the sessions and recesses of the Sixty-eighth Congress, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per hundred words. The committee is further authorized to send for persons and papers; to require by subpœna the attendance of witnesses, the production of books and documents; to administer oaths; and to take testimony

The expenses of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from South Dakota if he will yield until I may have considered a very short appropriation bill? I wish to say in this connection that unpaid bills are accumulating in the office of the financial clerk of the Senate on account of witness fees and other expenses.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Wyoming is sure that the bill for which he desires consideration will not lead to any debate, I shall yield to him in order that he may secure its consideration.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9192) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I think the Senator from Wyoming should briefly explain its provisions, and particularly some of the amendments which I understand he intends to propose to the bill. I think in all probability it is necessary to consider the bill as soon as practicable.

Mr. WARREN. I shall endeavor to give a very brief explanation of the necessity for the passage of the bill and of the amendments which are proposed to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the first item of $100,000 which is carried in the bill is for the contingent fund of the Senate, which not only is exhausted, but there are unpaid bills now in the office of the financial clerk of the Senate awaiting adjustment.

The bill also carries an appropriation for the United States courts. It is usual toward the close of the fiscal year for Congress to provide for certain expenses of the various courts of the United States.

There is also an amendment, which is reported to the bill by the Committee on Appropriations, providing for the settlement of an account. It will take no money out of the Treasury, but it relates to the assessment of the inheritance tax on a bequest to the Government through the Smithsonian Institution by Mr. Freer, deceased.

There is another amendment which I shall submit, made necessary by a supplemental estimate, providing for an appropriation of $16,000, seemingly very necessary for the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia which is in session with its different juries at work and the money is to be devoted to their payment. The whole amount carried by the bill is something over $2,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment. The Secretary will state the amendment of the committee.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

That additional taxes amounting to $74,657.70, together with all penalties and other charges thereon, assessed by the Treasury Department against the estate of Charles L. Freer, deceased, late of Detroit, Mich., which estate has been closed, the executors discharged, and the residue paid over to the Smithsonian Institution as an endowment for the Freer Gallery of Art, presented to the Nation by the said Charles L. Freer, are hereby canceled and the Treasury Department is hereby authorized and directed to remit any further taxes, penalties, or charges which may hereafter be found due from the said estate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming offers an amendment which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURTS

Supreme Court, District of Columbia: For fees of jurors, $16,000, 60 per cent of said sum to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent out of the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to explain the item of $200,000, which is appropriated for in the bill for the Department of Justice. In a bill recently passed we appropriated $500,000 for the prosecution of war frauds, and a year ago, for the current year, we appropriated $500,000 for the prosecution of war-fraud cases. I believe that those who have made investigations are not satisfied with the results which have been achieved by the Department of Justice in the expenditure of these funds. I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether the $500,000 appropriated for the current year has been exhausted?

Mr. WARREN. It will be exhausted before the 1st of July. The fact is, if I am correctly informed, its expenditure is already exhausted under the arrangements which have been made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is that the only explanation the Senator from Wyoming cares to give or can give in regard to this item?

Mr. WARREN. I have permission of the Senator from South Dakota to proceed with this bill only so long as it does not lead to any debate, and so I can not consider it necessary at this time to go back into the estimates for the $500,000 carried in the regular appropriation bills. We have the hearings, and I can send for them and have them read at some other time. The item, however, constitutes a real deficiency, and I know of no way to provide for it except by an appropriation.

As to the theory upon which the Department of Justice is operated, it is hardly the place, I think, on an appropriation bill, which is to meet necessary expenses, to go into the year's business of that department; but if the Senator desires it, of course, it may be done later on, as we are to have another deficiency appropriation bill before the session terminates.

Mr. KING. I do not think we should dispose of appropriation bills and deficiencies in this perfunctory way. I am not complaining of the attitude of the Senator from Wyoming, but the Senator knows that there has been dissatisfaction with the administration of the Department of Justice and with the results or lack of results in the prosecution of so-called war-fraud cases.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator also knows that there have been collected by the United States from prosecutions of fraudulent war contracts many times more than that amount expended for such purposes.

Mr. KING. No; I do not know that, Mr. President. I am advised that some recoveries were the result of an auditing of unsettled claims and accounts, and the Department of Justice was of no service in the matter.

Mr. WARREN. Those who have examined the matter do know it.

Mr. KING. I have examined the matter and I have some knowledge upon the subject. Of course, some suits have been instituted upon which recoveries have been made, but I repeat the results thus far have been disappointing.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I yielded the floor on the condition that the bill would not lead to debate.

Mr. KING. I do not know what condition the Senator from South Dakota annexed to the consideration of the bill, but it is before the Senate now.

Mr. STERLNG. That is true; but I yielded only to that extent.

Mr. KING. If the Senator claims the floor to discuss the bill, I will be happy to yield to him.

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not wish to discuss the bill; but I had the floor for the purpose of presenting a report, and I yielded to the Senator from Wyoming on the condition that the bill would not involve debate.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Utah desires to have the bill go over it will have to go over. I have stated what the deficiencies are and it does not seem necessary for me further to state the reasons, and I am not permitted the time. The investigation of the Department of Justice to which in a way the Senator from Utah refers is one reason why the contingent fund is out of money. In order to cover the expenses incurred it is necessary to appropriate more money. The bills are due and should be paid.

Mr. KING. I am making no comment now upon the item of $100,000 to meet the demands made upon the contingent expense account of the Senate; that may be the subject of comment at a later time.

I am now making an inquiry concerning the additional appropriation for the Department of Justice. I repeat, Mr. President, that a year ago we gave $500,000 for the prosecution of war-fraud cases and we gave $500,000, as I recall, to the War Department for additional auditors in order to examine the same accounts.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I must object to further interruption.

Mr. KING. I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota yielded to the Senator from Wyoming to ask unanimous consent to bring forward the appropriation bill.

Mr. STERLING. I yielded on condition that the consideration of the bill would not provoke debate. That was the condition upon which I yielded. The bill seems to be provoking extended debate. Therefore, I am relying on my rights. I have been recognized by the Chair, and I yielded for that one purpose.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that that is true, and I will not ask the Senator's forbearance any longer. If it is the wish of the Senator from Utah to put the bill over, he has the power to do so.

Mr. KING. I will surrender the floor, then, to the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be offered——

Mr. KING. Oh, no, Mr. President; the Chair does not understand my attitude. The Senator from Wyoming consented to withdraw the bill, and, upon that understanding, I resumed my seat and surrendered the floor to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. WARREN. I did not consent to withdraw the bill except to fulfill my promise to the Senator from South Dakota that I would not take the time if the bill involved debate.

Mr. KING. I do not care to enter into the reasons which prompted the Senator. He did withdraw the bill. With that understanding, I surrendered the floor to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is in some doubt with regard to the proper procedure. The Senate has given unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of this bill. The Chair, however, will solve the uncertainty by sending the bill to the calendar. The Senator from South Dakota is recognized.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to present an amendment?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to propose to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and lie on the table.

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER

Mr. STERLING (reading):

As a member of the select committee appointed under Senate Resolution 206, I respectfully submit the following minority views.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States District Court for the State of Montana.

The language of the resolution is broad enough to include an inquiry not only as to whether there was probable cause upon which the Federal grand jury for the district of Montana might properly return an indictment against Senator WHEELER but also whether Senator WHEELER was in fact guilty of the charges laid in the indictment.

The view here expressed is limited to the first of these propositions, namely, as to whether the indictment was justified by the evidence before the grand jury. The second proposition, as to whether Senator WHEELER is in fact guilty of the crime, is not, in my opinion, a proper subject of inquiry by the committee, that being solely a matter for determination by the court in which the indictment is pending.

A grand jury is one of our time-honored institutions, and has special recognition in our Federal Constitution. Neither the Senate nor the President has any power to control the action of graud juries or in any way to overturn indictments returned by grand juries. When a valid indictment has been found, the party indicted must be put upon trial, unless the district attorney concludes, and the court concurs, that for some legitimate reason the indictment should be withdrawn. The legislative branch of the Government nor either House of Congress should attempt to exercise the power to determine, in advance of such trial, whether the defendant is in fact guilty, and its right or power so to determine is seriously questioned. Such determination not only encroaches upon the legal functions of the court but is likely so to prejudice public sentiment at the proper place of trial as to make it difficult and perhaps impossible for either the Government or the defendant to obtain a fair and impartial jury. Furthermore, when a committee of the Senate calls before it, in open session, all the witnesses of the prosecution and examines them before trial, the defendant Senator is accorded an advantage to which no other defendant is entitled under the law, an advantage to which he, merely because he is a Senator, is not entitled.

The complaint is here made that the indictment by the grand jury was obtained and found through improper motives and upon evidence insufficient in law to show probable cause for belief in the guilt of the accused. For the purposes of this case it may be conceded that the occasion is such as to justify an investigation by a committee of the Senate as to the motives which prompted the prosecution in its beginning, and the sufficiency of the evidence before the grand jury to sustain it. And yet, it is a matter of grave doubt whether the proceeding thus limited is not contrary to both law and a sound public policy.

At the outset of the committee's proceedings, the chairman indicated that "it might be well to read into the record the statute under which this charge is made." He then read into the record section 1782 of the Revised Statutes. It did not occur to the chairman, nor I think to the other members of the committee at the time, that section 1782 was repealed by the act of Congress of March 4, 1909, and by the same act, section 113 of the Criminal Code was enacted. Section 113 differs materially from the old statute and is considerably enlarged so as to include Senators from the time of their election and either before or after they have actually qualified. Section 113 is hereinafter set forth.

In the presentation of evidence before the committee, the customary order was reversed, and eight witnesses were heard who supposedly had been summoned at the instance of Senator WHEELER, with the view of refuting the charges laid in the indictment and of proving that Senator WHEELER was not guilty thereof. This was not in accord with my conception of the proper function of the committee, as above stated, but tended to extend the inquiry far beyond any legitimate scope. Indeed, from my viewpoint, the hearing might very properly have been entirely ex parte, to determine alone the question of probable cause. It may be granted, however, the course of procedure which was followed was perhaps justified by the emphatic assertions made by Senator WHEELER in his remarks on the floor of the Senate, that the indictment in Montana was the result of a "frame up" by his political enemies and that there was not "one scintilla of truth in the things with which" he was charged.

None of the witnesses thus called at the instance of Senator WHEELER had appeared before the grand jury, and obviously their testimony can serve no useful purpose in determining the question of probable cause. In the testimony of these witnesses, there is an utter lack of evidence in any manner substantiating the statement of Senator WHEELER that improper motives actuated the Government officers who either made the investigation or presented the evidence to the grand jury which returned the indictment. In other words, the charge of "frame up" failed entirely of proof. It may be stated further that several other witnesses were brought from Montana, at the instance of Senator WHEELER, but as none of them were called to testify, it is fair to assume that they had no information bearing upon the question.

In considering the question of probable cause—in other words, whether there was sufficient evidence before the grand jury reasonably to warrant the returning of an indictment against Senator WHEELER—a brief discussion of the evidence is necessary, and attention is invited first to the testimony of the witnesses who appeared before that body, together with the documentary evidence which the Attorney General supplied to the committee, with brief reference to the testimony on behalf of Senator WHEELER. Before entering into such a discussion of the evidence, however, it is important to give a brief outline of the indictment.

THE INDICTMENT

The indictment returned against Senator WHEELER by the Federal grand jury at Great Falls, Mont., early in April, recites that Gordon Campbell and his associates were engaged in Montana in the business of procuring, by application and by assignment and otherwise, permits to prospect for oil and gas in and upon the public lands of the United States situate in the State of Montana under the laws of the United States relating thereto, and that there were pending before the Department of the Interior and before the General Land Office various proceedings, in which the United States was interested, to determine the validity and priority of certain assignments of a number of such permits in which said Campbell and his associates had or claimed an interest, and that they were directly interested and concerned in the final decision, and in any decision, thereafter to be made by the Department of the Interior and the General Land Office in relation to such permits. The permits involved are described in the indictments and include, among others, the so-called Philip MacGowan and Lewis E. Lincoln permits.

The indictment then alleges that in January and February, 1923, after he had been elected to the Senate, Senator WHEELER entered into an agreement with Campbell and his associates to receive compensation in a large amount for services to be rendered by him in relation to the proceedings above mentioned before the Department of the Interior and the General Land Office. It is further charged in the two succeeding counts of the indictment that the defendant actually received from Campbell two payments of $2,000 each as compensation for such services.

The statute which it is claimed is violated by the facts alleged in the indictment is section 113 of the Criminal Code, which reads in part as follows:

SEC. 113. Whoever, being elected or appointed a Senator, Member of, or Delegate to Congress, or a resident commissioner, shall, after his election or appointment and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, * * * directly or indirectly receive or agree to receive any compensation whatever for any services rendered or to be rendered to any person, either by himself or another, in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party or directly or indirectly interested, before any department, * * * shall be fined not more than $10,000 and imprisoned not more than two years; and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States.

THE GOVERNMENT'S CASE

No question is made in the record before the committee regarding the fact as alleged in the indictment that there were pending in the Department of the Interior certain proceedings relating to permits in which Campbell and his associates claimed an interest. The ones particularly mentioned in the record are the so-called MacGowan permit and the Lincoln permit. The only question for consideration, therefore, is whether there was sufficient evidence of an agreement made between Campbell and

Senator WHEELER whereby the latter was employed for a compensation to be paid him to represent Campbell in connection with these matters in the Interior Department, to warrant the grand jury in finding that the statute had been violated.

The testimony of the witness, H. C. Glosser, is to the following effect:

He testified that he had been employed by Campbell as private secretary during the period of one year from November, 1922, to November, 1923; that about January 13, 1923, he was advised that Gordon Campbell was en route from his home in Seattle to Shelby, Mont., and that he was expected to drive to Shelby and meet Mr. Campbell and drive him by automobile into Great Falls, Mont. That Senator WHEELER was to be there to meet Campbell. He took Campbell to his own residence where Campbell advised him that he wanted him to telephone to W. W. Rhea, the field superintendent of the Campbell properties, to come into Great Falls for the purpose of having a conference with Senator WHEELER, whom Campbell said he had employed as his attorney. That on the 15th of January, he went to the Rainbow Hotel at Great Falls, at the suggestion of Campbell, and registered for room 212; went to the Park Hotel where Senator WHEELER was stopping, and brought him to the room of the Rainbow Hotel; then made another trip to the Park Hotel where Rhea had registered, and brought Rhea to the room to which he had taken Senator WHEELER. He then drove to his own home, got Campbell and brought him to this room, where all four engaged in a conference lasting an hour or two, during the evening of the day mentioned. At this conference, he testified, the principal subject of discussion was the condition of the Government permits held by Gordon Campbell and his associates. He mentioned particularly the Phil MacGowan permit which had been transferred by Campbell to Rhea, and which permit at that time was supposed to cover the most valuable acreage in the Kevin oil field. He further testified that Senator WHEELER advised Campbell and Rhea that they need not worry over the possibility of the annulment of these permits or of securing the approval of the Department of the Interior to the assignment to Rhea, for the reason that he had been elected United States Senator and had sufficient influence when he reached Washington to see that these matters were disposed of to the entire satisfaction of Mr. Rhea and Mr. Campbell. He further stated that Campbell had said at this conference that if Senator WHEELER was successful in getting Rhea's assignment allowed, he and Rhea could afford to give Senator WHEELER a big slice. He further stated in his testimony and in his affidavits, which are a part of the record, that Senator WHEELER made no particular reply to the suggestion made by Campbell that he (WHEELER) should receive a portion of the proceeds, but that Senator WHEELER repeatedly said that there was nothing to worry about, that the permits could be fixed up in Washington very easily by him, and that it was merely a matter of getting the details worked out through the department.

In these affidavits Glosser further asserted that Campbell had previously told him that he had employed Senator WHEELER to "put across" his contested permits before the Interior Department at Washington, and this was the reason for his agreeing to such a large sum as $10,000 for Senator WHEELER's services.

The testimony of the witness, W. W. Rhea, is to the following effect:

He corroborates Glosser's testimony in all its details relating to the meeting of January 15 in room 212 in the Rainbow Hotel, and specifically states that the conversation related principally to the matter of the permits and assignments of permits pending before the Department of the Interior at Washington, and that it was frequently said by Senator WHEELER that as soon as he arrived at Washington he would be able to straighten out all questions relating to the validity of the permits, and in particular would be able to secure approval for the assignment to Rhea of the Phil MacGowan permit. He further testified that when it was suggested by Campbell at this conference that in case the assignment to him was allowed by the department, they could afford to give Senator WHEELER a generous slice of the proceeds, he emphatically declined for the reason that he had employed his own attorney to look after his interests in the Interior Department. He further stated in an affidavit, which is part of the record before the committee, that a few days later Campbell informed him that as he was paying Senator WHEELER $10,000 to fix these permits, Campbell thought that he, Rhea, should pay a small part of the fee inasmuch as he was interested in one of the permits. He further states in this affidavit that after a settlement had been arrived at Campbell said to him that he thought he, Rhea, should give him some of the money to pay part of Senator WHEELER's fee, but this was refused.

THE DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE

With the concurrence of all the members of the committee, the chairman requested the Attorney General to submit copies of the documentary evidence in his possession bearing upon the matter under inquiry, and in response to this request the Attorney General sent photostatic copies of a large number of documents which corroborated the testimony of the witnesses Glosser and Rhea. It is unnecessary to encumber this statement with the full text of these documents, but all of them are significant; in particular, attention is directed to the letter of Senator WHEELER to Gordon Campbell, dated March 8, 1923. This letter is on stationery of the United States Senate and contains the following paragraph:

I wish that you would have your office send me a detailed report of the condition of your permit that we discussed with the Standard Oil Co. of California in order that when I take it up with the Department of the Interior that I will be able to intelligently discuss the matter.

It is perfectly apparent from this letter that Senator WHEELER was interested in securing for Campbell some action, the character of which is not disclosed, in regard to the permit mentioned in the letter. The explanation made by Senator WHEELER in his testimony is, in my opinion, somewhat vague and unconvincing, particularly in view of the subsequent telegrams and correspondence.

A few days following the writing of this letter Senator WHEELER called at the office of Mr. Edwin S. Booth, then Solicitor of the Interior Department. Now, was it a legitimate inference by the grand jury that this visit was in furtherance of the plan of procedure outlined at the conference in the Rainbow Hotel at Great Falls and in pursuance of his employment by Campbell? It is obvious from Booth's testimony and from that of Senator WHEELER himself that he went to Booth's office for the purpose of discussing Campbell's affairs. This was on March 13, 1923, and there were exchanged between Senator WHEELER and Campbell's office at Great Falls six telegrams on the 13th and 14th which can bear but one construction, namely, that Senator WHEELER was interesting himself actively in securing favorable action upon the several permits which were in controversy. The first of these telegrams from Senator WHEELER requested Campbell to mail at once a complete list of his holdings, giving separate legal description and character of title. On the same day Campbell replied by wire, acknowledging receipt of Senator WHEELER's telegram, saying that the requested information was being sent, saying that Campbell would himself come to Washington to see Senator WHEELER personally, and also asking how long Senator WHEELER was expecting to be there. On the 14th Senator WHEELER answered this telegram, saying:

Leaving Saturday for Europe; have taken your matter up with parties, writing Baldwin; suggest see him.

It is apparent that when Senator WHEELER made the statement that he had taken the matter up "with parties" he meant that he had taken it up with Solicitor Booth, of the Interior Department. It is noted that this telegram was sent and paid for at ordinary commercial rates, as indicated on the face of the message. If Senator WHEELER had sent it in his official capacity as United States Senator, it would have gone at Government rates and been paid for as such.

In response to this telegram and on the same day, namely, March 14, Campbell replied as follows:

Please advise when you expect to return; believe matter of Lincoln permit vitally important. Is it possible you can discuss matter with solicitor, and I can come to Washington and discuss matter with him with view to satisfactory settlement even during your absence. Feel this permit should have prompt attention. Choteau well looking best.

This telegram again and more emphatically corroborates the testimony of Glosser and Rhea, and would indicate to the grand jury that Senator WHEELER's services in Washington in connection with these permits were within the scope of his employment.

Then follows Senator WHEELER's reply of the same date, as follows:

Have already discussed permit with solicitor, but did not have number. Wire that to me and I will arrange to have you see him in person if you come here.

Again, on the same day, Campbell replies to this last telegram, giving number of the permit requested, and concluding—will be glad to see solicitor, Washington, any time convenient.

The purpose and effect of these telegrams is so clear that comment is unnecessary. It is important, however, to bear in mind that by means of these telegrams it was arranged that while Senator WHEELER should be in Europe, Campbell was to come to Washington and personally handle the matters directly with Solicitor Booth, and it is obvious that Senator WHEELER had arranged with Booth to meet Campbell and to give him more than ordinary consideration.

It next appears from the documentary evidence that Campbell came to Washington and on April 7 was in the office of Solicitor Booth discussing the various permits in which Campbell claimed an interest. On that date Booth wrote a letter, making several copies. The letter was addressed to Mr. L. V. Beaulieu, Helena, Mont., and Mr. James T. Baldwin, Butte, Mont., and copies were sent both to Mr. Beaulieu and to Mr. Baldwin, and another copy was sent to Senator WHEELER at his Washington office. Beaulieu was one of Campbell's attorneys, and Baldwin was Senator WHEELER's law partner at Butte. This letter mentions the fact that it was dictated in the presence of Mr. Campbell and gives in great detail all the steps necessary to be followed in order to perfect the titles to the permits mentioned, which are six in number, including both the Phil MacGowan permit and the Lincoln permit.

It is strange, indeed, that a high official of the Interior Department should write a letter of this character and then at the end of it add the clause, "This is only my unofficial view." But a fair inference from the whole letter and the mailing of copies to the persons named, is that Booth regarded the firm of Wheeler & Baldwin and Senator WHEELER personally as interested in all the steps taken and to be taken in perfecting the titles to these permits. It was Senator WHEELER who first enlisted Booth's interest in the matter.

Following this letter to Booth, the record contains a number of letters between Baldwin at Butte and Beaulieu at Great Falls, in regard to Booth's letter and also specific acknowledgment by Baldwin to Booth of the receipt of the letter of April 7. The inference is unescapable that the matters in Washington relating to these permits were being handled in Senator WHEELER's absence by his partner Baldwin and his friend Booth.

Following this exchange of correspondence, the record contains a number of letters dated May 2, from Beaulieu to Booth, each of which inclosed certain documents relating to the various permits, in compliance with specific suggestions made by Booth in his letter of April 7, for the purpose of clearing the titles to them.

Meanwhile, however, and on April 14, Booth again enters the picture wth a letter to Campbell inclosing copies of a protest made by one Stevenson against the assignment to Rhea of the Phil MacGowan permit, which shows the interest manifested by Booth in Gordon Campbell's affairs, and the conclusion may well be drawn that Senator WHEELER had left behind him an able representative during his absence in Europe.

On May 4 Campbell sent to Booth a telegram and a letter of confirmation in which, in the plainest terms, he refers to a previous conversation in which he had offered a bribe to Booth, and specifically repeating the offer. This not only gives a fair indication of Campbell's character and his business methods, but again confirms and corroborates the testimony of Glosser and Rhea, to the effect that the MacGowan permit, which was the subject of the May 4 letter, as well as of the conference in the Rainbow Hotel, was a matter of grave concern. Campbell showed his willingness, notwithstanding any agreement to pay Senator WHEELER $10,000 for these or for these and other services, to pay to Booth and to any other official of the Department of the Interior whom he might be able to corrupt an additional premium to secure results. It is further to be observed that both Booth and Senator WHEELER testified to the long acquaintance and friendship each with the other, and that the evidence indicates that for the purpose of perfecting these dubious titles Mr. Booth was the man who had been selected for the purpose by Senator WHEELER.

That Booth listened with interest and sympathy to Campbell's corrupt offer is evidenced by his telegram to Campbell of May 5, and by his letter of May 19, at which times Booth had left the Department of the Interior and was with the Department of Justice, but apparently having so recently severed his connection with the Interior Department that his influence still obtained.

There are a number of other letters in the record between Campbell on the one hand and both Baldwin and Senator WHEELER on the other which are perhaps significant in illuminating the relationship between them. It seems unnecessary, however, to make further comment regarding the documentary evidence, with the exception of the affidavit of E. M. Harvey, who testified at an early stage of the proceedings before the committee. His oral testimony was of no particular significance because of the limited range of the questions asked him.

The affidavit in question was taken at Great Falls, Mont., on April 9, 1924, and sets forth in considerable detail the circumstances surrounding the employment of Senator WHEELER by Gordon Campbell. Harvey was one of the trustees of the Gordon Campbell Kevin Syndicate, and in that capacity attended a meeting in Great Falls in January, 1923, of the unit holders of that organization. He states that the matter of the defects in the titles to the syndicate properties was discussed at this meeting, and that he was assured by Campbell that immediate steps would be taken to perfect them. He was further informed at that time by Campbell that the firm of Wheeler & Baldwin, of Butte, had been employed to defend a suit for receivership, and that that firm would also attend to the perfecting of these defective titles and would do any and all things necessary for the protection of the unit holders in the syndicate. Harvey states that it was stipulated at this meeting that the firm of Wheeler & Baldwin should receive an annual salary or retainer of $10,000, divided equally between the syndicate and Gordon Campbell individually. He states that he objected to the amount of the salary because he considerd it excessive, but was influenced by the fact that Mr. WHEELER had just been elected United States Senator, and was further influenced by remarks made by Senator WHEELER himself. He says he protested to Senator WHEELER personally, and that the latter replied, in substance, "You people have a great amount of valuable acreage, and if we can save just one 40 acres of that for you, we have paid our salary."

It is apparent from the entire record of this case that the difficulty regarding titles related to the permits and the fair inference from Harvey's statement is that Senator WHEELER in the statement quoted was referring to that subject. This is a further and emphatic corroboration of Rhea and Glosser taken from the statement of an official of Gordon Campbell's company who is obviously an impartial witness.

From the foregoing testimony of Rhea and Glosser, together with the documentary evidence, it would seem clear that the grand jury at Great Falls was justified in returning the indictment against Senator WHEELER; and from the view which has heretofore been expressed in this statement as to the proper functions of the committee it is unnecessary to discuss the testimony of the other witnesses further than to say that this testimony is all contradicted if not refuted by the documentary evidence herein referred to. The testimony of Senator WHEELER himself consists largely of a categorical denial of the charges made in the indictment and a denial of the statements of witnesses, qualified in some important instances by the statement that to the best of his recollection certain statements had not been made or certain things had not occurred.

It is with no sense of pleasure that I have felt impelled to make this minority report. Consulting my own inclinations, I would rather be in a position to exonerate than to charge with wrongdoing. It is only from a sense of duty under the facts as I view them, under the law and under a sound public policy as I interpret them, that I am obliged to dissent from the views of the majority and am persuaded that I would be derelict in the performance of that duty if I did not as a member of the committee give expression to this different view.

In the face of and contrary to what is believed to be sufficient evidence at least to warrant the action of the grand jury, the majority has specifically and definitely found that Senator WHEELER has not committed any act in violation of law. In doing this the majority have encroached upon the functions of the judicial branch of our Government. Their conclusions prejudice the issue made by the pending indictment and a plea of "not guilty" which it is assumed will be entered; and to this extent the majority report obstructs and interferes with the due administration of justice. In the face of the majority report, which will doubtless be given wide publicity in Montana, how can the Government hope to secure an unprejudiced jury to try the case? How can respect for the courts be maintained if their hands are to be tied and their freedom of action embarrassed by the unwarranted interference of a coordinate branch of the Government? The action of the majority of the committee in assuming to act as a petit jury to determine the guilt or innocence of the person accused, without the necessary orderly proceedings and restraints of a court of justice to safeguard the rights of the Government on the one hand and of the defendant on the other is altogether repugnant to our ideas of justice. "Equality before the law" is one of the cherished principles of our free institutions; it must not be violated by recourse to a proceeding which gives to a United States Senator, when charged with an offense, a privilege not enjoyed by the humblest citizen of the land.

Senator WHEELER, having been charged by a Federal grand jury with the violation of a Federal statute, should be remitted to the proper forum where he will have full opportunity to explain, deny, or refute the charges made against him and where the Government likewise, through its counsel, will be accorded the right to present its case in a lawful and orderly way. That forum is the Federal District Court for the State of Montana; and before a jury duly impaneled and sworn to try the case according to the law and the evidence.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had intended, prior to the coming in of the veto message on the bonus bill, to discuss this matter in full to-day, but as it is understood that we are to take up the other matter at 2 o'clock I shall confine the few remarks I have to make to one particular phase of the question, and the necessity of that is emphasized by the peculiar view which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] takes with reference to the authority of the committee. The committee was acting under this resolution:

> That a committee consisting of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States District Court for the State of Montana.

The resolution defining the duties and prescribing the jurisdiction of the committee was brief and specific and it authorized us to report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made concerning the indictment. It might have been interesting to the Senate and might have been interesting to all parties who are concerned with reference to the matter had the Senator from South Dakota either undertaken to limit the authority of the committee or to have opposed the resolution entirely upon the grounds which he has stated to-day.

The committee was not authorized to find whether there was probable cause for the returning of an indictment. The committee was not authorized to delay action until the courts of Montana should have acted. The committee was specifically directed to find the facts and report them to the Senate touching the subject covered by the indictment. Indeed, Mr. President, if we had desired to encroach upon the authority of the court or if we had in any way ever sought to interfere with judicial proceedings, we would have accomplished that more perfectly and completely by following the course suggested by the Senator from South Dakota than in any other way.

I would not have sat upon a committee which was authorized to inquire as to whether a grand jury had probable cause for its action. That, in my judgment, is wholly beyond any authority which the Senate could confer upon any committee. That does not concern us at all as we sit here. But whether the facts which are the basis of that charge are sufficient to justify us in saying that the junior Senator from Montana shall or shall not hold his seat in the Senate is a matter the jurisdiction of which is given to this body and to this body alone. Even if a jury in Montana should proceed to the trial of Senator WHEELER and convict him, this body would still have devolving upon it the duty of determining whether or not Senator WHEELER should retain his seat in this body. If a jury in Montana should proceed to acquit him, this body would still have devolved upon it the duty of determining whether or not he should sit as a Senator in this body. But to send a committee of the Senate out to inquire whether or not a grand jury had probable cause for performing its function is a duty which no one who understands the obligations and duties of the Senate would ever think of conferring upon a special committee coming from this body.

The Senator from South Dakota has referred to the fact that some seven or eight witnesses were subpœnaed, as he supposes, at the suggestion of Senator WHEELER, and that we began at the wrong end of the controversy. Instead of inquiring whether or not the grand jury was justified or had probable cause for its action, he complains that we proceeded at once to inquire as to the facts. Now, as a matter of fact, the first thing which the chairman did after he was appointed was to send a telegram to the presiding judge of the court in Montana asking for the minutes of the grand jury proceedings, the names of the witnesses, and the documentary evidence which had gone before the grand jury. Some of the witnesses were suggested by Senator WHEELER, some of their names came from other sources, and from the reply to the telegram to which I have referred, and the names of some of the witnesses subpœnaed came from those with whose views the Senator from South Dakota is more in sympathy, from those who were interested in securing all the evidence possible against SENATOR WHEELER.

As chairman of the committee, I subpœnaed every witness, except one, to whom I will refer in a moment, and called for every piece of documentary evidence that was suggested by friend or foe of Senator WHEELER or that was suggested by the Senator from South Dakota. No evidence has been left out of the hearings, and anyone who intimates that there was any partiality anywhere in the proceeding did not follow the proceedings of the committee with any degree of fairness.

We called them all. How did we start? We began with the witness who initiated the making of the contract with Senator WHEELER. Where should we begin to get the facts? Hearsay testimony? That in my judgment was the fault of the grand jury or those who had charge of the proceedings. The men who made the contract, the men who knew the facts, the men who were in a position to know what was said and done when the contract was completed, never were called before the grand jury. As to why I leave to those who had charge of it to say, but it was certainly the duty of the committee to begin at the source of information, with those who knew the primary evidence, and we began with the witness who made the contract and called every witness who was in a position to know any facts concerning it.

So far as Senator WHEELER is concerned, permit me to say here that he did not undertake for a moment by suggestion or otherwise to limit the investigation in any respect whatever. When a piece of testimony was suggested from any source which might be or was supposed to be against him, Senator WHEELER was just as anxious to give the chairman of the committee the means of securing it and the witnesses as he was those whom he first suggested. If he has any consciousness of guilt, he certainly did not disclose it in the methods which he pursued in enabling the committee to get all the facts from whatever source, prejudiced or otherwise, that might come, and so we did.

Upon to-morrow, if we are through with the bonus bill, I shall take up the witnesses, beginning with the man who made the contract, those who were next in the contract, those who were interested in it, and follow it down to the end. In my opinion I shall be able to show, not by my interpretation of the evidence, not by a construction placed upon it by reading it as in the third person, but by reading the evidence itself to the Senate, that Senator WHEELER never at any time violated either the law or the spirit of the statute.

Now, I want to call attention to just one witness to show how utterly unfounded, as it seems to me, are the conclusions drawn by the Senator from South Dakota. But I digress for a moment. There was one witness, a man by the name of Paul, whose name was given to me. I called him over the telephone. He is a clerk at a hotel here. He told me that he had absolutely no knowledge concerning the matter in any way, shape, or form; that he did not know Gordon Campbell, did not know Senator WHEELER, did not know anybody else.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just wait a moment. I concluded that he was being called because somebody had approached him and asked permission to get a room next to the room where Blair Coan and his coterie of witnesses were staying, for the purpose, presumably, of spying upon them and listening to them. That kind of a transaction did not concern me in the least.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word. Mr. Paul, or whatever his name was, was not called to the stand. I never saw him, never had a word with him in my life, and as to what he would have testified to I do not know.

Mr. BORAH. I only know what he said to me.

Mr. STERLING. His name was given to me. It was known that the committee might soon adjourn and the investigation be ended, and it was suggested to me that that name might be put down as one of the witnesses whom we might want to call. I never called him.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator regarding the statement which is published in the National Republican of May 10. George B. Lockwood, secretary of the Republican National Committee, on last Monday issued the following statement:

> The convincing documentary evidence in the possession of the Department of Justice, within a short distance of the Capitol, has never even been looked at by the Senate committee engaged in investigating the case, and little of the oral evidence has reached the public. Witnesses who admit they know nothing of the facts have been heard in behalf of the defense, while those who do know have been heard in part only, under hostile questioning.

Mr. BORAH. My answer to that, Mr. President, is that, as I said a moment ago, when I was appointed chairman of the committee I telegraphed immediately to the judge and asked him for this documentary evidence. I think we were appointed on the 10th day of April, and if that is so the telegram was sent the next day. I received an answer from the judge stating that the documentary evidence had been impounded. I did not ask for the original evidence, but asked for a copy of it. I myself do not know of any reason why we should not have had a copy of the impounded evidence. Had I asked for the original there might have been a just reason for refusing it, but I asked for a copy, and I did not get the copy. The judge simply stated that it had been impounded, and he thought he could not go any further.

I came to the conclusion, however, that we would be able to get practically all the testimony that was in the documents from other sources, because we had copies of some of the telegrams and some of the letters. Then, later, on the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], I addressed a letter to the Attorney General, asking him if he could secure us this documentary evidence. The Attorney General came to see me and stated that he did not have the original evidence, that he did not feel like interfering with the authority of the court, but that he had photostatic copies, which he would be glad to furnish, and he did so. They are all in the record, every one of them; there is nothing left out.

There is a great deal in the record in that documentary evidence, which, in my opinion, is pure hearsay, so far as Senator WHEELER is concerned; but it was permitted to be put in, because I thought, under all the circumstances, it had better, perhaps, be in the record for discussion.

So, Mr. President, all the witnesses have been called, and all the documentary evidence has been secured. It is all here; it is all printed; and it can be had by Senators whenever they want it.

I want to read the testimony of Mr. Rhea, because he has been relied upon as the star witness, and seems to be the witness upon whose testimony the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] bases his argument that there was quite enough to show probable cause for the grand jury's action. Mr. Rhea testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know Senator BURTON K. WHEELER?

Mr. RHEA. I met him once.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that, Mr. Rhea?

Mr. RHEA. About January 15, 1923.

The CHAIRMAN. Where was the place of meeting?

Mr. RHEA. In the Rainbow Hotel, Great Falls, Mont.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were present?

Mr. RHEA. Senator WHEELER, Gordon Campbell, H. C. Glosser, and myself—

Upon the morrow I shall compare the testimony of Mr. Glosser and Mr. Rhea, who both narrated the same conversation. I have not time to do it to-day—and there was another gentleman came to the room, but only stayed just a minute, and I am not sure but there were two—L. P. Jackson and John Cooper. I might be mistaken. There might have been only one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they take part in the conversation, or stay during the conversation?

Mr. RHEA. They did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were present, then, as you say, and took part in the conversation?

Mr. RHEA. Mr. Campbell, Mr. Glosser, Senator WHEELER, and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. This was on the 15th day of January, 1923?

Mr. RHEA. 1923; about that date. I am not positive as to that date.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you hear Mr. Glosser testify?

Mr. RHEA. Well, part of it. I could not hear much. I was in the back of the room.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the date to which he referred, the same date to which you are now referring?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And the same conversation?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You may state what, if anything, was said in this conversation with reference to any employment of Mr. WHEELER with reference to the business matters of Mr. Campbell.

Mr. RHEA. At this particular meeting?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; we are just disposing of this meeting now, at this time.

Mr. RHEA. I can not just state the exact conversation, although it was understood that——

The CHAIRMAN. Now, state what he said. Of course, your understanding and somebody else's understanding might be different, you know, so that we would like to have the statement of facts.

Mr. RHEA. I can not say that Mr. Campbell said at that particular time that Senator WHEELER was employed, in that much language.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you recall, so as to be definite as to the conversation, what was said in regard to the matter of his employment at that time? Do you recall the conversation?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, state what was said in the presence of Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. RHEA. The main conversation between Mr. Campbell and Mr. WHEELER and myself was in regard to the Phil MacGowan permit. Mr. Campbell said that Senator WHEELER, on his arrival in Washington, would be able to put this permit through—get it approved.

The CHAIRMAN. What did Mr. WHEELER say?

Mr. RHEA. He did not reply anything, except he said that we did not need to worry, that this would all be taken care of when he got back here.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, this is the same conversation which you say Mr. Glosser was present at?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. State any further conversation that was had between Mr. WHEELER and Mr. Campbell and yourself and Mr. WHEELER and Mr. Campbell.

Mr. RHEA. Mr. Campbell and Mr. WHEELER talked in regard to some other permits that he had in the Kevin field, but I did not pay a great sight of attention to those, because I was not interested.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you interested in the MacGowan permit?

Mr. RHEA. I was, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. To what extent, and how?

Mr. RHEA. It belonged to me.

The CHAIRMAN. It did belong to you?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any talk with WHEELER yourself?

Mr. RHEA. Not any more than in the presence of Mr. Campbell and Mr. Glosser, as I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN. You have not stated, yet, anything that you said, at all. Did you say anything?

Mr. RHEA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you say?

Mr. RHEA. Gordon Campbell suggested to me that in case Senator WHEELER—well, I am getting ahead of myself. I had an offer on this permit at that particular time, was dealing with some people in Colorado as to selling, and Mr. Campbell knew what I was to get for it—what I was figuring on getting for it. He told me that in case that this permit could be gotten through, we should be able to give Senator WHEELER quite a good slice of it. I believe that was the exact language.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that in the presence of WHEELER?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What did WHEELER say to that?

Mr. RHEA. He did not reply, that I remember.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he taking part in the conversation?

Mr. RHEA. He had been, right along.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he not make any reply when the question of slicing the matter was discussed?

Mr. RHEA. I do not think he said a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, have you stated all that you said in this conversation with Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. RHEA. Not exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. State it all, Mr. Rhea.

Mr. RHEA. Gordon Campbell in this talk—I told him that I had my attorney employed to take care of this permit, and that I did not feel that I was entitled to pay anyone anything more.

The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. RHEA. I believe that was all of it.

The CHAIRMAN. What I am trying to find out, Mr. Rhea is what you said, if anything, to WHEELER.

Mr. RHEA. I did not say anything to Senator WHEELER in regard to taking any part.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he say anything to you?

Mr. RHEA. Yes; he says, "You don't need to worry. On my arrival in Washington this will all be taken care of."

The CHAIRMAN. He said that to you instead of to Campbell, did he?

Mr. RHEA. He said it to both of us.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it said in response to anything that you said to him?

Mr. RHEA. Well, I can't say. That is a long time ago, you know. A man can't remember just the exact words.

The CHAIRMAN. I am trying to get your best recollection, that is all.

Mr. RHEA. You have got it.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems so. The next conversation that you had with Mr. WHEELER was where?

Mr. RHEA. I have never had any.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the last?

Mr. RHEA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever write to Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. RHEA. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Or telegraph him?

Mr. RHEA. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any communication from him?

Mr. RHEA. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he ever appear for you as an attorney in any way?

Mr. RHEA. He did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever employ him in any way?

Mr. RHEA. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever pay him any compensation for any services rendered?

Mr. RHEA. I did not; no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever promise to pay him any?

Mr. RHEA. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know of your own knowledge that Mr. WHEELER appeared before the land office in Montana in regard to this matter?

Mr. RHEA. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have any knowledge of his appearing here in Washington in regard to it?

Mr. RHEA. I was not in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. All you know in regard to this, then, so far as Mr. WHEELER'S relationship to it is concerned, is what you have stated as having taken place there in the Rainbow Hotel on the 15th day of January, 1923?

Mr. RHEA. Well, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have a conversation with WHEELER as to that?

Mr. RHEA. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. I am speaking now with reference to the knowledge that you have of Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. RHEA. All I have is what I talked to Gordon Campbell.

That relates, I presume, to what the Senator from South Dakota states that Campbell told him.

Again, on page 115, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] interrogating Rhea, asked:

Senator STERLING. Now, with reference to the contest against your claim, the Rhea claim, just what was said, as nearly as you remember?

Mr. RHEA. Well, Mr. Campbell told me that Senator WHEELER just being elected to the United States Senate, that with his influence he figured he could get most anything done through the Land Office that he wanted.

Senator STERLING. Was that, now, said during this conversation?

Mr. RHEA. Yes.

Senator STERLING. And in the presence of Mr. WHEELER?

Mr. RHEA. Yes.

Senator STERLING. And what reply, if any, did Mr. WHEELER make to that?

Mr. RHEA. Not any, that I heard.

Senator STERLING. Was anything said there about any compensation to be paid Mr. WHEELER for attending to the matter of this contest, or in the event of his success?

Mr. RHEA. Yes.

Senator STERLING. What?

Mr. RHEA. Mr. Campbell said to me that if this permit was put through, and if we got through with the deal which was then pending, we could afford to give Senator WHEELER quite a good slice out of it.

Senator STERLING. And Mr. WHEELER heard that statement?

Mr. RHEA. He must have. He was sitting within 2 or 3 feet of us.

Senator STERLING. And what reply, if any, did he make?

Mr. RHEA. Not any.

I quote further from page 119:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know whether Mr. Beaulieu took this matter of the MacGowan permit up with a man by the name of Feely here in Washington?

That is the permit which they were discussing—

Mr. RHEA. Well, after Mr.—let me see. He took it up with some one. He had some one here that he was corresponding with in regard to them.

Senator CARAWAY. What was the name of your permit, Mr. Rhea?

Mr. RHEA. The Philip MacGowan permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Philip MacGowan permit?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recall the number of that permit?

Mr. RHEA. I do not; no, sir.

I quote further from page 120:

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Do you know the name of the attorney with whom Mr. Beaulieu corresponded here in Washington, or the firm name?

Mr. RHEA. I can not tell you. Mr. Beaulieu told me he was corresponding with some one here, and he may have told me at that time. That name "Feely" sounds familiar. It might not have been him, although it might have been him.

The CHAIRMAN. At any rate, you continued to do business through your attorney, Beaulieu?

Mr. RHEA. Absolutely. It was Mr. Beaulieu all the way.

The CHAIRMAN. And whatever Mr. Beaulieu did with reference to that MacGowan permit, he was acting as your attorney?

Mr. RHEA. Yes, sir; and I paid him for doing the work.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. President, construing the Rhea testimony in the most disadvantageous light possible to Mr. WHEELER, what happened? Mr. Rhea owned a permit known as the Philip MacGowan permit, which was not Mr. Campbell's permit at all. One day in the office of Mr. Campbell, Mr. Campbell made the statement in the presence of WHEELER that Mr. WHEELER had been elected Senator, and if he could get this thing straightened out we could afford to give him a good slice of it. Mr. WHEELER made no reply. Mr. Rhea immediately said, "I do not want Mr. WHEELER; I have an attorney of my own"; in other words, "I am not employing Mr. WHEELER." Mr. WHEELER made no statement in regard to it at all, but simply, apparently, if he heard it, listened to a conversation between Campbell and Rhea, in which Campbell seemingly wanted him to employ Mr. WHEELER and Mr. Rhea says, "I do not want him."

There the matter ended. He had his own attorney. The evidence shows that Mr. Beaulieu took up the matter through a Washington attorney; that the MacGowan permit was straightened out through a Washington attorney, and that Mr. Rhea paid his attorney, Beaulieu, for performing the services; and there we have the evidence, Mr. President, upon which it is claimed that WHEELER practiced before the Land Office at Washington.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. It is not understood, and the claim never has been made, that Mr. WHEELER was a registered attorney there, an attorney of record, in the matter of any of these permits at all; but the contention is made that he used his influence, without appearing to be as of record an attorney for anybody. That was not necessary.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, every western Senator, particularly, goes to the Land Office and to the Interior Department almost every day of every week of the year. We go there for the purpose of having matters straightened out, if we can, for our constituents. When I came here, 79 per cent of my State was under the domination of the Federal Government. We were practically a colony; and every citizen who comes in contact with the Federal Government telegraphs to his Senator or Representative. There is no law upon the statute books which prevents any man from doing that. The only crime that is defined in the statute is the agreement to accept payment for it, or the acceptance of payment for it. This testimony of Mr. Rhea shows that Mr. WHEELER never had any agreement to accept payment, never accepted payment, never was employed, and never asked to go before the Land Office; and that is the testimony upon which they propose to convict Mr. WHEELER of practicing before the department.

Mr. STERLING. I just wish to say, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, that that is not all of the testimony by any means. Reliance is not had, so far as that is concerned, upon the testimony of Mr. Rhea alone upon that particular point.

Mr. BORAH. I call attention to Mr. Rhea because he is altogether the most direct witness, and apparently the one upon whom they rely. To-morrow I shall discuss Mr. Glosser's testimony, which is even more flimsy than that of Mr. Rhea.

Now, Mr. President, just a word more, and I am not going to detain the Senate to-day. I only read that to show what a difference it makes when you read the testimony yourself and when you hear a construction placed upon it by some one else.

I read, Mr. President, the testimony of Governor Spry, at page 71 of the record. Governor Spry is the Commissioner of the Land Office, and I pause to say, Mr. President, that Governor Spry is a pretty strong partisan, but all who know him know that neither partisanship nor anything else would induce him to color his testimony in the slightest. He has been twice governor of his State, and is a man of commanding character and unquestioned integrity. To-morrow, when I come to discuss this question, if I reach it to-morrow, I shall ask the Senate to consider the fact that the distinterested witnesses, the witnesses who can have no interest in this matter, the men who stand separate and apart either from prejudice or bias for one reason or another, may be taken of themselves and alone, and Mr. WHEELER could rest his case absolutely upon their testimony.

Mr. Spry testified as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. When did you first meet Senator WHEELER?

Commissioner SPRY. It was in the spring, as I remember it, of 1923.

The CHAIRMAN. Where?

Commissioner SPRY. In my office.

The CHAIRMAN. In whose company?

Commissioner SPRY. Solicitor Booth, of the Interior Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you have any conversation at that time with Senator WHEELER?

Commissioner SPRY. Just a brief conversation.

The CHAIRMAN. Did it relate to any business matters before the department?

Commissioner SPRY. Only in this way, Senator: After some pleasantry that we exchanged, as I remember it, Mr. Booth said—or, after I had tendered the services of the bureau to Senator WHEELER, as I would to any other Senator, Mr. Booth made the remark—that Senator WHEELER was interested in a certain case of one Gordon Campbell. The Senator replied and said that his interest was only to the extent of seeing that Gordon Campbell got proper treatment and a fair deal. I assured him that that would be accorded him, as we accorded to everybody else. That is the extent of the conversation. I do not think either one of the gentlemen stayed long enough to be seated.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you afterwards meet Senator WHEELER?

Commissioner SPRY. I have met him incidentally once or twice since then.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the only appearance that Senator WHEELER has ever made in your department?

Commissioner SPRY. No; the Senator has been there once or twice since, in the Land Office. I do not know about the department.

I have had some correspondence, of course, with the Senator, as I do with all Senators and Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the Senator ever appeared in the department before you or in your office with reference to any of these controversies with reference to these permits that have been referred to, that you know of?

Commissioner SPRY. I do not remember any controversy that the Senator has interested himself in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further, Commissioner Spry, that you could state that would throw any light upon the relationship, of your knowledge, of Senator WHEELER to any business matters before your department?

Commissioner SPRY. No, sir; so far as I know the Senator has interested himself only as to his constituents.

Senator CARAWAY. That is common with all the Senators, is it not?

Commissioner SPRY. Yes, sir.

Senator CARAWAY. His appearance has been nothing different from that of any other Senator?

Commissioner SPRY. Simply in the interests of their constituents.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] then asked some questions:

Senator STERLING. Did you have any correspondence with him relative to any of these permits at all that are referred to?

Commissioner SPRY. Not that I recall.

Senator STERLING. You say that the Gordon Campbell business was mentioned when you first saw Mr. Wheeler?

Commissioner SPRY. Yes.

Senator STERLING. When he was introduced to you?

Commissioner SPRY. Yes.

Senator STERLING. And that he expressed himself as interested in Mr. Campbell, and expressed the hope that he would have fair treatment?

Commissioner SPRY. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. And you assured him that he would have fair treatment?

Commissioner SPRY. Yes.

Senator CARAWAY. Let me ask you this: He would have gotten the same treatment if Mr. WHEELER had not made that statement?

Commissioner SPRY. Oh, yes; those things come in the natural course of business.

Senator CARAWAY. Certainly; it is just like saying at the close of a letter, "Sincerely yours"?

Commissioner SPRY. Yes, sir.

Upon page 74, I read the following testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. Governor, will your records disclose in all instances in which parties appeared before your department, in regard to any controverted matter, as attorneys?

Commissioner SPRY. Yes; every attorney notes his appearance, or his appearance is noted upon the record—the individual record.

The CHAIRMAN. If a party should appear in the capacity of an attorney before your department with reference to any matter, either he would cause himself to be recorded or you would make a note of it?

Commissioner SPRY. He would cause it himself to be recorded and it would be recorded upon the case, so that as to any future action that might be taken the attorney could be notified direct from the office.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you caused your records to be searched or surveyed to see whether or not Mr. WHEELER had ever appeared as attorney in any way before your department?

Commissioner SPRY. I do not know that we have gone into the matter specifically on Mr. WHEELER'S account. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. If you, before these hearings close—which I trust will not be long—can have that matter ascertained and if you find there is any communication on the record at any place with reference to his appearing at any time, will inform us, we will be obliged.

Commissioner SPRY. Certainly.

Later, Governor Spry sent in this letter, a single paragraph of which I will read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, April 30, 1924.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to my promise to you a few days ago, I have to advise you that a search of the records of this office fails to disclose any appearance as attorney in public-land cases in the name of Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER.

Then the letter proceeds to discuss other subjects.

Mr. President, without taking too much of the time to-day, I will state that in the first part of January and February, 1923, Mr. WHEELER was employed by Gordon Campbell to look after a large amount of litigation in the State of Montana, some 19 or 20 lawsuits. At one time, I believe they stated, he had as high as 40 lawsuits. He was developing an oil field, and every western Senator knows that when a mining region or an oil field is discovered, it never amounts to anything until it gets thoroughly into litigation. They had some 30 or 40 lawsuits at one time, 19 or 20 of importance. Mr. Campbell desired to employ Mr. WHEELER. We will disclose by testimony, which in my judgment is not interested, that when they went to employ Mr. WHEELER he told them that he would attend to no matters except those which related to the litigation in Montana; that Mr. Gordon Campbell had another attorney, his regular attorney—he might be called his office attorney—by the name of Beaulieu; that Mr. Beaulieu attended to the permit titles, and to the questions which related to the titles; that that was particularly, apparently, his business as his attorney, although he took part in other matters; and that Mr. WHEELER did appear in this State litigation.

When Mr. WHEELER came on here to Washington it is true that he called upon Mr. Booth, the details of which I will go into to-morrow; but Mr. Beaulieu took up all these permits with a Mr. Feely, a Washington land attorney, and the entire matter was straightened out and dealt with between Mr. Beaulieu and Mr. Feely, and both Mr. Beaulieu and Mr. Feely—certainly men who would have no occasion to warp their testimony—testified that Mr. WHEELER never was consulted in regard to the land titles here in Washington, or before the Land Office, and that he was not advised with, and had nothing whatever to do with them.

Mr. President, to my mind this record is perfectly clear and unimpeachable upon the proposition that Mr. WHEELER was employed in good faith to attend to matters of litigation in the State of Montana; that he with care and caution pursued that course, and that matters which he could not properly attend to by reason of the statute were from the first eschewed, disregarded, and denied; that they were turned over to land attorneys; that the land attorneys attended to them; and, as we said in our report, that he observed not only the letter but the spirit of the law.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word.

I shall perhaps have something to say after the Senator from Idaho has presented the case more at length, as he proposes to do, but I want to read just a little bit further from the testimony of Governor Spry, because it is significant; and the Senator from Idaho, having put into the RECORD much of Governor Spry's testimony, I think it is fitting that this excerpt also should go into the RECORD.

Immediately following the last question asked Governor Spry by the chairman of the committee I asked him as follows:

Senator STERLING. Governor, there might be correspondence with others in the land office, in the bureau there, between heads of divisions of the bureau and some one outside, that you would not know about?

Commissioner SPRY. Of course, the heads of divisions are not allowed to receive any correspondence relating to the work of the office. All communications are addressed to the commissioner and referred by the commissioner to the division where the work is undertaken.

I hardly know how Governor Spry could say that all these communications are addressed to the commissioner. He knows that certain ones are addressed to the commissioner, of course, and referred to the proper heads of divisions, and so forth.

I read a little further:

Senator STERLING. What was Mr. Booth's position at the time that he introduced Mr. WHEELER to you?

Commissioner SPRY. Mr. Booth at that time, as I remember it, was Solicitor of the Interior Department.

Senator STERLING. Just what were his duties as solicitor?

Commissioner SPRY. To pass upon the legal questions of the department, which includes all of the bureaus connected with the department; not necessarily the Land Office.

Senator STERLING. Could there have been correspondence between Mr. WHEELER or Mr. Campbell and Mr. Booth, and which was not brought to your attention or knowledge?

Commissioner SPRY. Oh, yes.

Senator STERLING. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, without discussing the so-called Wheeler case at any length, I want to make one observation: I am a member of the committee appointed to investigate the Wheeler case, as is the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. We were appointed under the resolution which was read a moment ago, in which we were empowered and directed to inquire into but one question, and that was as to the facts with reference to Mr. WHEELER's relation to a transaction in Montana that led to an indictment. I shall read the resolution again, because I want to comment upon it:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States district court for the State of Montana.

Everyone, whether he is lawyer or layman, knows that the only question under that resolution was whether Mr. WHEELER was guilty of an offense, not whether the grand jury in Montana had been imposed upon by the Republican National Committee. No man could go on that committee with any other idea in view than of passing upon that question, and I want to say—and the record will bear me out—that from beginning to end that was the only question inquired into. For the Senator from South Dakota now to contend that that was not a proper question, and was not a question upon which the committee was to report, is going outside of the record for a statement, because, whatever he may say to the contrary, he knew that was the only question he was empowered to inquire into; and if he did not mean to do it, he should have then said, "I will not accept an appointment as a member of that committee," because that was the only question he had been directed to investigate.

To show that he knew it, and that this other is an afterthought, every page of the record shows that the evidence was directed to that one purpose and that one purpose only, and the Senator from South Dakota never undertook to propose the theory which he now presents to the Senate, that we were inquiring into whether the grand jury had probable cause for indicting Senator WHEELER.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Did I not state at the executive meeting of the committee that that was the theory on which I thought the committee should consider this case before making its report?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, yes; after the evidence was all in, after the case was concluded, for the first time the Senator from South Dakota said, "I do not want to report on that question." If the Senator wants to go into what occurred in the executive meetings, I hope he will do it, and when de does it I purpose to do it also. There was no evidence as to that, no evidence was offered, none was asked for, and the Senator knew he had not directed his inquiry to that question. He knew there was not a line of evidence along that line. He knew that the committee had no power to make such an inquiry, and that was the first time he ever suggested that he was going to discuss that theory.

Mr. STERLING. Did not the question of ascertaining whether the grand jury had reasonable cause to believe the defendant guilty of the matter charged involve an inquiry into at least some of the facts?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; there is not a line of it. The only time it was offered to inquire into what was before the grand jury the Senator from South Dakota objected to it—would not hear it.

Mr. STERLING. No; the Senator from South Dakota objected to what was palpably a wrong thing to do——

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course! The question was as to what the grand jury acted upon, and the Senator objected to it.

Mr. STERLING. The proposition was made, Mr. President, that we find out from members of the grand jury who were here as to how many ballots the grand jury took.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; and the Senator's language is in the record, that we had nothing to do with it.

Mr. STERLING. Yes——

Mr. CARAWAY. And he never suggested that we have anything to do with it.

Mr. STERLING. Of course, I would object to that in any proceeding.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course the Senator would, because the idea of making this alibi had not then been suggested to the Senator.

Incidentally, since we are going to discuss that sort of thing—and we are going to do it at length—the Senator sat there in the committee with records handed to him by somebody, and would not even reveal the source from which he got his information.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator name one?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will read the Senator's exact language.

Mr. STERLING. The affidavits of Rhea and Glosser? Does the Senator refer to them?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will read the Senator's own statement. He evidently does not know anything about what he did.

Mr. STERLING. I wish the Senator would.

Mr. CARAWAY. I will read from page 55 of the second volume of the printed hearings. Beaulieu was before the committee and was testifying, and the Senator from South Dakota, who acted as if he thought he was employed on the other side—I do not say he was, but I say he acted as if he were—was heckling him as you would heckle a witness in a police court, and reading from a document.

Mr. STERLING. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. CARAWAY. I am going to read on page 55. Of course, I presume after a while the Senator will state that the record does not recite the facts. We were talking about Rhea:

Senator STERLING. He got that assignment from Mr. Campbell, did he not?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I do not remember that he did.

Senator STERLING. Do you know whether there was more than one assignment of that MacGowan lease?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I do not know.

Senator STERLING. By Mr. Campbell?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I do not know whether Mr. Campbell ever made an assignment of it or not.

Senator STERLING. You do not know whether he made an assignment?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I do not know. I do not remember.

Senator STERLING. Might there have been an assignment and you not know of it?

Incidentally, that "might there not have been something you did not hear" was the way the Senator was trying to convict some one, in the testimony, of doing something—that some one might have written a letter to the department which Governor Spry did not know about.

Who ever heard, in a civilized country, of putting on the defendant the burden of proving a negative, to prove that he did not write a letter, that somebody might have gotten a letter that nobody ever heard of? Yet that is as fair as he was from the beginning to the end of this whole controversy.

Mr. BEAULIEU. I do not know. I do not remember.

Senator STERLING. Might there have been an assignment, and you not know of it?

Why should you ask a witness that? Of course, if he did not know about it, he could not testify about it. Everybody knows that but the Senator from South Dakota, and he evidently never suspected it.

Mr. BEAULIEU. There might have been.

Of course, everybody knows there might have been something. Maybe the Senator knows, but he has not told; I do not know.

Senator STERLING. Do you know anything about a letter written by Mr. Booth of the land office to WHEELER and Baldwin, giving a list of nine claims of Gordon Campbell Kewin Syndicate No. 1, and giving a description of each permit, and what should be done to straighten matters out at the land office?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. STERLING, if you have that letter, we think it ought to be produced.

Everybody knows that except the Senator from South Dakota. The Senator from South Dakota said:

I am asking him if he knows anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. I know; but you are asking for the contents of a letter. Now, we want the letter.

Who is trying suppress evidence?

Senator STERLING. I think perhaps you can have it.

Perhaps we may. Perhaps we can have it if he decides later on that we may.

The CHAIRMAN. That is just what we want.

Senator STERLING. I can not produce it right now, but during the course of these proceedings.

Mr. BEAULIEU. Now, there was some letter written by some one, I am not sure whether Mr. Feely or Mr. Booth or who wrote it, I remember, naming some permits; but I would not say, without seeing it, whether it was addressed to them, or to whom it was addressed. It is possible it was. I do not remember.

Senator CARAWAY. You did not receive it?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I may have received a copy of it.

Senator CARAWAY. It was not addressed to you?

Mr. BEAULIEU. I do not think it was. Now, I might be wrong on that. I do not think it was.

Senator STERLING. But you remember having heard something about such a letter?

"Heard about it"; not that he saw it, not that he knows what its contents are, but "You remember hearing some whisper somewhere on the street about such a letter?"

Mr. BEAULIEU. Yes; I do.

Senator STERLING. Do you know anything of a letter written by Mr. Campbell in which he suggested that he would give the lease rights to 40 acres of the land, worth $26,000—

That from a man who loves competent evidence—

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a moment. You are asking for the contents of a letter.

Senator STERLING. I am describing the letter. I am characterizing the letter.

When a man at one time reads law and is examined and has a license to practice law he knows that if he has a letter he ought to produce it. You would not try a nigger for selling whisky and hold a letter and ask him if he had not written such a letter or had not heard about such a letter. The Senator said, "I am characterizing the letter." He was characterizing more than a letter. I continue reading:

The CHAIRMAN. You are asking for the contents of a letter, and I insist that that letter be produced, if you have it; and, so far as I am concerned as a member of this committee, I am not going to permit primary evidence to be produced in this way. You ask for the contents of a letter. You evidently have the letter, or you would not know what the contents of it are.

Senator CARAWAY. I would suggest that when any member of this committee is furnished anything, it ought to be furnished to the whole committee. If any information is furnished to any member of the committee, the whole committee must have it.

Senator STERLING. I have not seen any such letter.

Senator CARAWAY. The Senator has a memorandum. Would he mind producing that?

As the Senate will see, he was there reading from some paper furnished by somebody, of which he got possession somehow. I read further:

Senator STERLING. I have a memorandum of such a letter.

Senator CARAWAY. Would you mind furnishing it to us?

Senator STERLING. No. I shall mind saying who furnished it to me, of course. That is not material to this inquiry—as to who furnished me this memorandum.

Now, then, I hope the Senator has read it. That is what occurred. He sat there with the information furnished by somebody interested in this case, withheld it from the committee, and asked questions about it.

Of course, I am not the keeper of the Senator's course of conduct. He can disclose his own character by his own acts, and whatever pleases him pleases nobody else but him.

There are a lot of interesting things in this record, Mr. President, which I never expected to discuss, but since now it has become a matter of more or less public information and public curiosity, I am going to discuss it in full, and if the Senator wants to go into the question of probable cause, and who furnished the probable cause, and the conspiracy, and who were the conspirators, and who were the helpers and aiders and abettors of it, I am going to gratify his desire to his heart's content.

TARIFF ON BUTTER

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, I wish at this time to call up the resolution submitted by me last Saturday, and I ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 226) was read and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas in the general depression from which agriculture has been suffering, particularly in the grain-growing sections of the Nation, some agreeable relief has been experienced from the gradual but marked expansion of the dairy industry; and

Whereas the future of the region hereinabove specifically referred to depends in no small degree upon the growth of that industry to which the soil and climate thereof is peculiarly adapted; and

Whereas, with the sanction and approval of the President of the United States, an effort is being made to finance and promote therein the further development of the dairy industry; and

Whereas during the months of January and February, 1924, butter was imported into the United States amounting to 9,500,000 pounds, almost one-half of the total importations for the year 1923, and the highest monthly average ever recorded, resulting in a rapid decline of the price of that commodity on the New York market until it now commands a price little if any above the cost of production: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission be, and it hereby is, requested forthwith to institute an inquiry under the provisions of section 315 of the act approved September 21, 1922, concerning the cost of the production of butter in the United States and in those countries from which our importations thereof come, and to report its findings to the President of the United States with a view to the increase in the duty on imports of butter should such increase be warranted by the facts found.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate bill 2327.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2327) to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION—VETO MESSAGE

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. I will state that I make this request for the purpose of calling up the veto message of the President of the United States on the adjusted compensation bill. I do not think the request is necessary, and if it is not granted I shall then ask for the consideration of the bill and veto message under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to withhold his request for a moment because I would like to submit a request for unanimous consent that the disposition of the veto message on the bonus bill go over until Saturday of this week. The matter was suggested on last Saturday and two Senators objected, but both of them tell me now that they can arrange it and that that date will be satisfactory to them.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, to save debate I will object to that request. I object to any day other than to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Is there objection to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business for the purpose stated by the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate the message from the President of the United States which will be read.

The reading clerk read the message as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

Herewith is returned, without approval, H. R. 7959, a bill "to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes."

The bill provides a bonus for the veterans of the World War and dependents of those who fell. To certain of its beneficiaries, whose maximum benefits do not exceed $50, this bonus is to be paid immediately in cash. To each of its beneficiaries who are not to receive such immediate cash payments there is to be provided free insurance under a 20-year endowment plan. The face value of each policy will be based upon the military service, the average amount being at least $962, payable at the expiration of 20 years or at death prior thereto. After the lapse of two years the holder of a policy may borrow thereon from banks at reasonable rates of interest. If amounts so borrowed are not repaid by the veteran, the Government is obligated to pay to the banks this indebtedness, which ultimately reduces the maturity value of the policy.

An appropriation of $146,000,000 for the fiscal year 1925 will be required to provide the prorated annual cost of the insurance and to meet cash payments to those not receiving such insurance. This does not include administrative costs, which will amount to approximately $6,500,000 the first year. For the fiscal year 1926 an appropriation of $155,500,000 will be required, and the annual appropriations for the 20-year period will aggregate, according to the lowest estimate, $2,280,758,542. These and the other figures herein are from the Veterans' Bureau, but the Treasury estimates are materially more.

That part of the annual appropriation not required to meet the cash bonus or to pay policies maturing on account of death will be invested in Government bonds. The face value of the bonds thus acquired plus the interest thereon reinvested will equal during the 20-year period the maturity value of the insurance policies, aggregating at the lowest estimate $3,145,000,000.

The money spent for the acquisition of these bonds manifestly can not be spent for any other purpose, no matter how urgent our other requirements may be. In other words, we will be committing this Nation for a period of 20 years to an additional average annual appropriation of $114,000,000. This of itself should require most serious reflection, but if we are to have such commitment it should be in some form which would be in harmony with recognized principles of Government finance. The provisions of this bill are not so in harmony. Under it the Government will not have in the fund in 1945 two and a half billions of dollars. All it will have will be its own obligations, and it will owe two and a half billions of dollars cash. It will then be necessary to sell to the public this two and a half billions of bonds—a major operation in finance which may be disastrous at that time and may jeopardize the value of Federal securities then outstanding.

We have no money to bestow upon a class of people that is not taken from the whole people. Our first concern must be the Nation as a whole. This outweighs in its importance the consideration of a class, and the latter must yield to the former. The one compelling desire and demand of the people to-day, irrespective of party or class, is for tax relief. The people have labored during the last six years under a heavy tax burden. This was necessary to meet the extraordinary costs of the war. This heavy assessment has been met willingly and without complaint. We have now reached a financial condition which permits us to lighten this tax burden. If this bill becomes law, we wipe out at once almost all the progress five hard years have accomplished in reducing the national debt. If we now confer upon a class a gratuity such as is contemplated by this bill, we diminish to the extent of the expenditures involved the benefits of reduced taxes which will flow not only to this class but to the entire people. When it is considered that less than $40 a year would pay for the average policy provided by this bill, there is strong ground to assume that the veterans themselves would be better off to make that small payment and be relieved of the attendant high taxes and high living costs which such legislation would impose on them. Certainly the country would. We have hardly an economic ill to-day which can not be attributed directly or indirectly to high taxes.

The prosperity of the Nation, which is the prosperity of the people, rests primarily on reducing the existing tax burden. No other action would so encourage business. No other legislative enactment would do so much to relieve agriculture. The drastic executive campaign for economy in Government expenditure has but one purpose—that its benefits may accrue to the whole people in the form of reduction in taxes. I can not recede from this purpose. I am for the interests of the whole people. The expenditures proposed in this bill are against the interests of the whole people. I do not believe they are for the benefit of the veterans.

The running expenses of the Government for services and supplies must be met. Certain other obligations in the nature of investments for improvements and buildings are necessary and often result in a saving. The debts of the Nation must be paid. The sum of all these is a tremendous amount. At the present rate it is nearly $35 for each resident of our country, or $175 for each average family every year, and must be for some time. This bill calls for a further expenditure in the aggregate of nearly $35 for each inhabitant and lays nearly $175 more on each family, to be spread over a period of 20 years. No one supposes the effort will stop here. Already suggestions are made for a cash bonus in addition, to be paid at once. Such action logically would be encouraged if this bill becomes law. Neither the rich nor the profiteers will meet this expense. All of this enormous sum has to be earned by the people of this country through their toil. It is taken from the returns of their production. They must earn it; they must pay it. The people of this country ought not to be required by their Government to bear any such additional burden. They are not deserving of any such treatment. Our business is not to impose upon them but to protect them.

If this bill be considered as insurance, the opportunity for such a provision has already been provided. Nearly $3,000,000,000 of war risk and Government life insurance is now outstanding, and over $500,000,000 has been paid on such policies. When this provision was made in 1917 it was on the explicit understanding of the Congress that such insurance was to relieve the Government of subsequent contributions. The then Secretary of the Treasury said in relation to the proposed insurance act: "It ought to check any further attempts at service pension legislation by enabling a man now to provide against impairment through old age, total disability, or death resulting from other causes, and to give all this protection to those kindred who may be dependent upon him and who do not share in the Government compensation." This opportunity was afforded all those who entered the service. It was distinctly understood that it covered every obligation on the part of the Government. The intent of this bill now to provide free insurance lacks both a legal or moral requirement and falls into the position of a plain gratuity.

Considering this bill from the standpoint of its intrinsic merit, I see no justification for its enactment into law. We owe no bonus to able-bodied veterans of the World War. The first duty of every citizen is to the Nation. The veterans of the World War performed this first duty. To confer upon them a cash consideration or its equivalent for performing this first duty is unjustified. It is not justified when considered in the interests of the whole people; it is not justified when considered alone on its own merits. The gratitude of the Nation to these veterans can not be expressed in dollars and cents. No way exists by which we can either equalize the burdens or give adequate financial reward to those who served the Nation in both civil and military capacities in time of war. The respect and honor of their country will rightfully be theirs forevermore. But patriotism can neither be bought nor sold. It is not hire and salary. It is not material, but spiritual. It is one of the finest and highest of human virtues. To attempt to pay money for it is to offer it an unworthy indignity which cheapens, debases, and destroys it. Those who would really honor patriotism should strive to match it with an equal courage, with an equal fidelity to the welfare of their country, and an equal faith in the cause of righteousness.

I am not unmindful that this bill also embraces within its provisions the disabled of our veterans and the dependents of those who fell. To state that the disabled veterans and these dependents are entitled to this additional gratuity is to state that the Nation is not meeting its obligation to them. Such a statement can not truthfully be made. The Nation has spent more than $2,000,000,000 in behalf of disabled veterans and dependents of those who died. It is now spending for compensation, training, insurance, and hospitalization more than $400,000,000 annually. Solicitude for the disabled veterans and the dependents of those who lost their lives is the Nation's solicitude. To minister to their every need is a sacred obligation, which will be generously and gratefully met. The Nation stands ready to expend any amount needed for their proper care. But that is not the object of this bill.

America entered the World War with a higher purpose than to secure material gain. Not greed but duty was the impelling motive. Our veterans as a whole responded to that motive. They are not asking as a whole, they do not want as a whole, any money recompense. Those who do seek a money recompense for the most part, of course, prefer an immediate cash payment. We must either abandon our theory of patriotism or abandon this bill. Patriotism which is bought and paid for is not patriotism. Our country has maintained the principle that our Government is established for something higher and finer than to permit those who are charged with the responsibility of office, or any class whose favor they might seek, to get what they can out of it. Service to our country in time of war means sacrifice. It is for that reason alone that we honor and revere it. To attempt to make a money payment out of the earnings of the people to those who are physically well and financially able is to abandon one of our most cherished American ideals. The property of the people belongs to the people. To take it from them by taxation can not be justified except by urgent public necessity. Unless this principle be recognized our country is no longer secure, our people no longer free. This bill would condemn those who are weak to turn over a part of their earnings to those who are strong. Our country can not afford it. The veterans as a whole do not want it. All our American principles are opposed to it. There is no moral justification for it.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 15, 1924.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think Senators have their minds made up as to how they intend to vote on this question, and, so far as I am concerned, I do not intend to take up any time in discussing the veto message, and am ready for a vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I know of no reason why the vote should not be immediately taken.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I arise to submit a question of privilege. I wish to read for the information of the Senate an article of extraordinary prominence which appears in this morning's Washington Herald, and which constitutes an outrageous attack upon the intelligence, the independence, and the very manhood of 10 Republican Members of this body.

The article in question is as follows:

BONUS ADVOCATES, KEEP YOUR EYE ON THESE 10 SENATORS

Propagandists for rejection of the soldier bonus bill are concentrating their efforts on 10 Republican Senators who voted for the measure and were reported yesterday to be wavering. Friends of the bonus, keep your eye on these Senators to see how they vote on the final roll call: FESS, Ohio; WARREN, Wyoming; CAMERON, Arizona; COLT, Rhode Island; ELKINS, West Virginia; KEYES, New Hampshire; MCLEAN, Connecticut; PHIPPS, Colorado, SPENCER, Missouri; WILLIS, Ohio.

Mr. President, could Sapphira have imagined or Ananias have uttered a more pernicious libel against these distinguished Senators?

Of course, every Democratic Member knows that not one of these Republican Senators could be induced by the flattery of plutocracy, or coerced by the great political power of the President, in this crisis to sacrifice his manhood, outrage his conscience, and desert the World War veterans by changing his vote on the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NEELY. I gladly yield to the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The most conclusive answer to that slander will be to vote right away, and see how those Senators will vote.

Mr. NEELY. I know how my honorable and courageous friend from Ohio, with whom I served eight years in the other House, will vote. I know that no Wall Street subsidized newspaper or even powerful presidential propaganda can prevent the Senator from Ohio from voting for this bill, just as he voted for it when it was first passed by the Senate. I know that every one of these 10 Senators will prove, when his name is called, that he is "not a pipe for" even the President's "finger to sound what stop he please," but, on the contrary, that he is as—

> Constant as the northern star,
> Of whose true-fix'd and resting quality
> There is no fellow in the firmament.

Mr. President, we shall soon have additional cause to be proud of the Senate; we are about to furnish the country conclusive proof that the Members of this body are unterrified, and that they stand for the right as steadfastly as Casibianca stood upon the burning deck.

We all know that these 10 Senators whom the Herald has so basely libeled will, when their names are called, again vote for the adjusted compensation bill, and thus prove not only to the vast and intelligent audience in the galleries but to all the world that they are not spineless creatures, that they are not pliant tools in the President's hands, but that every one of them is "every inch a man."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? Upon that question the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, on this question he would vote "yea." I have not been able to secure a pair for him.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have been asked to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is unavoidably absent, but that if present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are necessarily absent. If they were present, they would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], if present, would vote "yea."

I desire further to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] are necessarily absent. They are paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. If they were present, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] would vote "nay" and the two Senators from Mississippi would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], if present, would vote "yea." I wish further to announce that he is on a train returning from keeping an engagement in his home State yesterday. He expected the debate would lead to a vote not being reached until a later hour in the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], if present, on this question would vote "yea."

The roll call resulted—yeas 59, nays 26, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this question the yeas are 59, the nays 26; so the bill is passed the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries—if there be further manifestations of pleasure or displeasure.

Mr. HARRISON subsequently said: Mr. President, I merely wish to make an explanation. I understood that the veto message of the President would be called up at 2 o'clock to-day, and I was led to believe that there would be some discussion of the message, which might be prolonged several hours. I had a very dear friend who passed away and was buried in Arlington Cemetery this afternoon at 2 o'clock. In company with my colleague, the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] and the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], I left to attend the funeral. During our absence of about 45 minutes, the vote on the veto message was taken. I am very sorry that I was not here to cast a vote. I was paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and my colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] was also paired with him. If my colleague and I had been present, we would have voted to override the President's veto and the Senator from Louisiana would have voted to sustain the veto.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to make a brief explanation because of my absence when the vote was taken this afternoon on the question of overriding the President's veto.

An engagement, long ago made, necessitated my presence in Massachusetts yesterday. It was physically impossible for me to return before 3 o'clock this afternoon. When I returned at 3 o'clock the vote had been taken, though it was generally believed when I left on Saturday that a vote would not be reached till late to-day. Had I been present, I should have voted "yea," sustaining the position I have taken on all other occasions, favoring the adjustment of our war veterans' compensation.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the League of Women Voters in convention at Knoxville on the 9th of May invited me to address them on our "International relations," and not being able to do so on account of the revenue bill being before the Senate that day, I sent them a telegram briefly stating my views upon the live questions concerning our relations with foreign countries.

This telegram has been so misunderstood and in some respects garbled that I desire to place it in the RECORD, so that my views upon these important questions may not be misunderstood. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORLD COURT FAVORED BY DEMOCRATS AND REPUBLICANS

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 9.

MRS. JOHN M. KENNY,

President of the League of Women Voters, Knoxville, Tenn.:

Will you express to the convention of the League of Women Voters of Tennessee my great appreciation of their kind invitation to address them upon our international relations and my sincere regrets that at the last hour I am detained in Washington? The final vote upon the Federal tax reduction bill is imminent, and it is believed that it will be had to-day or to-morrow. I felt that I should forego my inclination, personal pleasure, and interests and remain here to vote upon this important measure, the division of the Senate being very close. Our international relations are nonpartisan, and the subject is one singularly suitable for consideration for your organization.

It is a pleasant subject of discussion. The United States is at peace with all the world. We have no controversies with any nation likely to lead to war. We have treaties of peace, amity, and commerce with all civilized nations and entangling alliances that would likely embroil us in war with none. We have treaties with 50 sovereign nations, including the great powers, providing for conciliation and peaceful arbitration of all differences that may arise between the signatories of such treaties.

PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION

The Permanent Court of Arbitration, with its seat at The Hague, Holland, was organized with ample procedure and jurisdiction for the peaceful adjustment of all international disputes and the promotion of peace and prevention of war and has settled many controversies threatening war and is now successfully functioning. The United States was chiefly instrumental in creating this court and is obligated by numerous treaties to submit differences with other nations to it.

We therefore have almost unlimited facilities for peaceful settlement of all disputes with other nations which can be arbitrated and adjudicated. We have no cause to fear a foreign enemy. There is no foreign nation that can conquer and subdue America. The whole world was astonished when in the recent war we raised and placed in the field, armed and equipped for battle with ample supplies, 4,000,000 men, and provided a formidable Navy, all within a limited time. We so demonstrated our great resources of men and wealth and the splendid efficiency, fortitude, and courage of our soldiers that no nation will ever dare to attempt to invade our country or conquer our people.

The Permanent Court of International Justice, also sitting at The Hague, established by the League of Nations in 1921, now functioning, has heard and determined one controversy and given eight advisory opinions to the league. The Permanent Court of Arbitration and the Permanent Court of International Justice are both courts of arbitration and have little or no resemblance to courts of judicature.

They have no compulsory jurisdiction over nations or subject matter and can only hear cases voluntarily submitted to them. There is no sanction for their decrees but public opinion. They are practically of equal dignity and power and functioning in the same city concurrently and harmoniously. The Permanent Court of Arbitration is open to all nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice to the members of the League of Nations and three other nations, including the United States, assenting to its jurisdiction. The chief difference between the courts is the method of election of the arbitrators or judges, the parties to controversies in the Permanent Court of Arbitration having a larger per cent of the selection than the parties to the controversies submitted to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

President Harding, when in life, favored the United States adhering to the Permanent Court of International Justice, and President Coolidge concurs with him, both asking the advice and consent of the Senate to do so, with reservations withholding and excluding legal relations to the League of Nations. Senator CLAUDE A. SWANSON, ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, after a conference with other Democratic Senators, some time since offered a resolution in the Senate providing that the Senate advise and consent to the United States adhering to this court with reservations absolutely excluding the United States from all legal relations and connections with the League of Nations. Senator W. H. KING, Democrat, has offered a similar resolution.

Senator THOMAS J. WALSH, also a Democratic member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, in a speech made at the recent convention of women voters at Buffalo, advocated the United States adhering to the permanent court for the moral support it would give to Europe, stating that the majority of the Democratic Senators favored it, and at the same time saying:

> "This is not a plea for the entrance of the United States into the League of Nations. Events transpiring since 1920 affect quite materially the view one must take of the problem of our relations with that organization we have so often been assured is dead, but which somehow refuses to stay dead and which is in fact very much alive and is considered by the nations of Europe as a most valuable agency for the adjustment of constantly recurring matters of difference among them.
> "I do not plead for a reversal of the verdict through which the United States declined membership in the league. I plead for the active participation by our Government in any effort which may be made through it or any other channel to bring about a restoration of normal industrial activity to Europe and to establish a state of actual peace among them in every case in which it is reasonably safe to do so without entangling ourselves in their quarrels."

This statement of conditions and facts demonstrates that the American people and the majority of the members of the two great political parties, recovering from the emotions caused by the horrors of war and regaining their national soul, are now uniting in the policies of our Government in international matters and considering them from an American and nonpartisan standpoint, as Americans have done in the past from the foundation of our Government.

There should be no prejudice against the Permanent Court of International Justice because it was organized by the league, provided the United States continues absolutely unobligated and free from the political provisions of the covenant of the league likely to embroil it in the feuds and wars of other nations. While the Permanent Court of Arbitration and arbitration treaties seem ample to settle all international disputes, yet if adherence to the World Court by the United States will give it moral support and contribute to the peace and tranquillity of Europe, it should do so. The United States has always advocated peace at home and abroad, and by a policy of nonentangling alliances and nonintervention in foreign affairs held itself in a neutral position to offer its good offices to all countries involved in disputes, and by arbitration and settlement has prevented many wars.

FAVORS SWANSON'S RESOLUTION

In the cause of humanity and in the advancement of the material interest and commerce of its citizens, it should continue this policy where it can do so without prejudice to the interest of our people. The resolution of Senator SWANSON with the reservations proposed by him with those which the United States made in becoming signatory to the convention creating the Permanent Court of Arbitration, preserving our traditional policies in dealing with the other nations and withholding all questions involving vital interest, independence, and honor, which have never been the subject of arbitration or adjudication, should be adopted at the present session of the Congress, and I hope that it will be promptly done. The common understanding is that both of the great national conventions to be held next month will so express the will of the party which they respectively represent, and favor our adherence to the Court of International Justice under conditions hereinabove stated.

This will happily end the only great political dissensions among the American people concerning our foreign relations and the President and the Congress can give their undivided attention to legislation for the relief of the industrial and agricultural interests and other domestic matters so long suffering and neglected. I favored peaceful settlement and arbitration of all international disputes in my speeches in the discussion of the League of Nations as appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the probable policies of both parties are in full accord with the views I entertain.

JOHN K. SHIELDS.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I announced my views concerning the foreign policies of the United States relating to international courts and conferences in an address I made in the Senate on November 19, 1919, when the League of Nations was under discussion, and they appear in the record of the proceedings of that day.

I then said that I believed in peace and hated war and the horrible suffering that it brings to mankind; that I would favor great conferences of free, sovereign, and independent nations where all differences and grievances could be discussed and, if possible, compromised and amicably settled upon just principles and inherent rights of men. I also said I would favor a great international court of justice of voluntary jurisdiction, where justiciable controversies of nations could be heard and determined and impartial justice administered without delay and without price upon the principles of righteousness and international law to be enforced by enlightened public opinion; and that I thought such arrangements were feasible without surrendering the sovereign rights of any government and without obligating any people to sacrifice themselves for the exclusive benefit of others. These are still my views concerning our international relations.

The United States should continue its interest in world affairs. We should with proper regard for the interest of our people, by economic conferences and arrangements with other nations, do what we can to restore tranquillity to the peoples of all countries. This will contribute alike to the cause of humanity and the economic interests and prosperity of all peoples.

While doing these things we must guard our country against internationalism. We must maintain our sovereign independence. We must not lose our love of country, our pride in our institutions, and our patriotism. Nationalism will preserve all these, but internationalism will destroy them.

The Permanent Court of Arbitration is ample in its jurisdiction and availability to settle all controversies likely to lead to war, and through our membership of it and our arbitration treaties we have every facility for peaceful settlement of our disputes with other nations, and membership in another court will contribute little, if anything, to our peace and security.

But it is believed and earnestly insisted by some of our people that the adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice would give it moral support and enable it to exercise greater influence in the preservation of peace in Europe. Our adherence to this court with the reservations proposed can do us no harm.

I will support the resolution of Senator SWANSON authorizing that the President adhere to the protocol and consent to the voluntary jurisdiction of the court with the reservations proposed and others if deemed advisable when the resolution comes before the Senate for adoption.

This committal is made with the understanding that the resolution is acted on before the Democratic National Convention in New York in June next, for I will be governed by the platform adopted by the Democratic Party. I have always supported the candidates nominated by the Democratic Party and have followed and abided by the platforms adopted, with the exception of the State election in 1910, when the party was divided. When matters have come before the United States Senate since I have been a Member I have been governed by and followed the platform pronouncements of the Democratic Party and by the conferences of the Democratic Senators. When there was no such platform pledge or caucus action, I have been governed by the fundamental principles, policies, and traditions of my party and my conscientious judgment of what was my duty as a Senator and the interests of the great people whom I represent in this body. Continuing this course, I will support and be governed by the pronouncements of the next National Democratic Convention upon our international relations, which I hope will be as I have above indicated.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has recently introduced into the Senate a joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to call a conference of nations at The Hague for the establishment of a third court, styled the "world court of international justice," and it is pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I have examined the statute incorporated in this resolution creating this new world court and find nothing in it, with the exception of the manner of choosing the arbitrators or judges, which is not to be found in the constitutions of the Permanent Court of Arbitration or the Permanent Court of International Justice, unless it be mere matter of procedure and practice, for which ordinarily the court should by proper rules provide. The jurisdiction of nations and of subject matter and the provisions for enforcing the decrees and judgments of the court are about the same as those courts. The Permanent Court of Arbitration is expressly recognized and part of its machinery used in organizing the World Court. The provisions for the election of judges contemplate two bodies, organized like the council and assembly of the League of Nations, the majority of both of which is necessary for an election. The five great powers are given control of the smaller body, as in the council, and there is the same objection of imperialism in their control of the court. I will not support the joint resolution providing for it.

This would be the third court with the same jurisdiction sitting at The Hague. There is no national or international demand for it, and it seems to me that the only possible effect it can have is of unnecessary delay and expense. It could not be organized, if at all, in less than two years, and perhaps a greater time.

The Permanent Court of Arbitration and the Permanent Court of International Justice are both functioning. I can see no reason for creating a third court with practically the same jurisdiction. It would have a tendency to confuse and complicate international relations and subserve no good purpose.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2327) to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, the amendment offered by me to Senate bill 2327 is the same as the amendment that was before the Senate all of last week. It has been thoroughly discussed, and as far as the friends of the measure are concerned I do not know of anyone who cares to discuss it and delay the Senate any longer in the matter.

This amendment was drawn up after consulting with members of the Interstate Commerce Commission and is proposed for the purpose of clarifying the language so as to make certain that time will be given to the Interstate Commerce Commission to readjust any violations of the fourth section that may be in effect that will not be permitted by the bill if it becomes a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the committee.

The READING CLERK. On page 3 the committee proposes, in line 2, to strike out the proviso down to and including the word "competition" in line 15, and to insert certain words. The junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] proposes to insert in lieu of the matter proposed by the committee the following words:

> Where any common carrier has, or common carriers have, in effect any rate, fare, or charge which is less for the longer than for the shorter distance between two points (the shorter being included within the longer distance), and which has been authorized by the commission or as to which application was filed with the commission on or before February 17, 1911, and not yet acted upon by it, such rate, fare, or charge shall not become unlawful (except by order of the commission) until after 12 months following the passage of this amendatory act; nor shall such rate, fare, or charge in effect via a circuitous rail carrier or rail carriers become unlawful if it shall have been authorized by order of the commission, after public hearing, based on no less a showing than that upon which the commission is herein authorized to grant relief: And provided further, That nothing in this section contained shall prevent the commission from authorizing or approving departures from the provisions of this section in so far as applicable to import or export rates, including rates applicable to traffic coming from or destined to a possession or dependency of the United States or to a block system of express rates established by order or with the approval of the commission or permitted by it to be filed.

It is also proposed to repeal paragraph 2 of section 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not feel that I quite understand this amendment just offered and read. It may be that this is a wise measure to adopt. I have some very grave doubts about it. I think, in the first place, it would be a mistake to undertake to change section 4 as provided in this amendment so far as the Atlantic ports are concerned and perhaps so far as the Gulf ports are concerned; but that would not influence me to vote against the bill if it were a good measure for the whole country. I should be inclined to support it, notwithstanding its adverse effect on Atlantic ports, if such effect were not too serious.

I am not impressed, in the first place, as to the great need for this legislation. We have had some inquiry made of the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding the long and short distance hauls, and that commission on February 13, 1924, reported to Congress, as shown by a document, No. 50, in which they went quite fully into the situation regarding the enforcement of section 4, the applications for departure from it, their action on those applications, and the reasons therefor.

We are all familiar, of course, with the original section 4, prohibiting a greater charge for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, qualified as it was by the words "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions." The Supreme Court in construing this language practically nullified the interpretation which had been placed on section 4. Then in the act of June 18, 1910, these words were eliminated. The amendatory act of June 29, 1906, made no change in section 4 as originally enacted, but in June, 1910, these words were eliminated. Since then a number of applications were made to the Interstate Commerce Commission for relief from the operation of section 4. That report, Senate Document No. 50, without discussing it further than simply to call attention to it, deals with the subject quite fully.

So far as the application of the existing section is concerned, there has not been any real observance of it, as I understand. I hold in my hand a communication dated October 23, 1923, from the Jacksonville traffic bureau, Jacksonville, Fla., in which they state:

By freight tariffs which became effective on the 17th instant the all-rail class rates from a large number of important southeastern points, Ohio and Mississippi River crossings, Gulf ports, and points north of the Ohio River were greatly increased to Jacksonville and other south Atlantic ports. These increases were allowed to become effective by the Interstate Commerce Commission over the protests of this bureau and a large number of other civic bodies, shippers' organizations, and individual shippers throughout the origin and destination territories affected by the increases.

They had at Jacksonville water competition. They were entitled to all the advantages and benefits of that competition. They had a reduced rate under section 4; but it seems that the Interstate Commerce Commission has disregarded the matter, so far as any preferential in favor of the port of Jacksonville is concerned.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will state that that is customary. Whenever the railroads ask to lower the rates, they lower them. Whenever the railroads ask to put them up, they put them up; so the Senator need not worry about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. They say:

As previously announced, this bureau, upon receipt of tariffs publishing the increased rates, filed a formal petition with the Interstate Commerce Commission for suspension and investigation of the objectionable schedules, but, as above stated, the commission refused to exercise its authority to suspend the publications, and the increased rates are now being applied by the railroads on freight tendered for transportation subsequent to October 16.

So that there does not seem to be any real need for any change of the law. They are actually disregarding the old section 4, and section 4 as amended they are construing so as to deny preferential rates where water competition exists.

Mr. PITTMAN. They do that in Jacksonville, and then they will turn around the next day——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I did not want to interrupt the Chair; that was the reason why I did not address the Chair.

They do that, as I was saying. They will lower the rates in Florida, and then they will raise the rates somewhere else. The proposition is this: It is not so much what they do to-day or to-morrow; it is the constant threat that water competition has when we know what they have done, the applications that are pending, and what they probably will do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, if by legislation we can make the thing certain and definite, I think that will be an improvement; but I am simply showing that at present the commission seems to construe the law as if there is ample authority for denying any preferential rate where water competition exists.

This statement says:

It should be remembered that while the railroads have effected huge increases in all of Jacksonville's class rates from the territory described, no changes have been made in the rates to the majority of Florida points located south of the line of the Seaboard Air Line Railway, Jacksonville to River Junction. As through rates to the down-State points have heretofore been made on the full Jacksonville combination, our jobbers could bring their goods into Jacksonville by rail and later reship to the down-State points at the same total rates as would have obtained had the goods moved direct from the original point of origin to the final destination. The situation is changed very materially under the October 17 revision by reason of the railroads having continued as proportional rates to Jacksonville, for constructing through rates to down-State points, the former rates which applied to both Jacksonville proper and for beyond, but established much higher rates to apply on Jacksonville proper traffic.

* * * * * * *

The Jacksonville jobber competing for down-State business moving at all-rail-class rates is, therefore, at a disadvantage in the all-rail rates with the shipper making direct shipments to down-State points to the extent of the full increases which have been made in the rates to Jacksonville proper.

They say:

Our jobbers can overcome this disadvantage on the all-rail adjustment by taking advantage, wherever possible, of the much lower rate available by rail and water routes.

What I am impressed with is this, if this bill passes it will enable the railroads to increase their rates to the competitive water points and not lower them to the intermediate points.

Let us consider the situation in the West. The transcontinental lines may be forced, under the provisions of this bill, either to lower their intermediate-territory rates or raise the Pacific coast rates, and what they will do will be to continue the rates as they exist at present on the short distances and raise the rates on the long distances.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. That might be very possible providing we admit that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not doing its duty. I called attention to one or two instances where they were not. This might be another. As a matter of fact, this bill is an endeavor to equalize the rates so far as they can.

Another thing the act provides is that in a sense the railroads shall be assured a fair return on their entire property by a freight rate which shall reach everywhere. Of course, if the rate is only paying cost of transportation at one point it must be higher at another point, because they must be assured a fair return. If they equalize and raise the rate somewhat at the point where it is too low, it will enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce at another point where it is too high. Whether they will do their duty or not, I will say to the Senator from Florida, I am not prepared to say, but they have to-day all the power necessary to do it.

The only objection to this one proviso which the commission has stated is that it has taken out of their hands the discretion in the matter. They have said, "You propose that we shall give railroad competition with water, and the only way we can do it is to let them slip to competitive points at cost." If they had properly interpreted the act to mean that we had given them authority to have railroads compete with water, that would be true; but Congress never did that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course we are necessarily obliged to leave this tremendous question of rates and rate adjustments with the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not claim to understand the subject of rates at all. I doubt if there is any Member of the Senate who would be classed as an expert on that subject. It is a vast question. Entering into it are many matters challenging consideration, not merely distance. You can not make a rate based upon mileage alone. You have to take into consideration other matters, and I believe that those points which enjoy water competition will have to receive the recognition of their natural advantages, because otherwise the railroads can not do business at those points successfully. They must lower the rate at competing points or be in position to do so as conditions may require, in order that they may be able to carry any traffic at all. For that reason I do not think we should deny by legislation the enjoyment of the natural advantages which exist under natural law and which can not be destroyed by a mere act of Congress. I believe interior points should have fair and just treatment, also free from discrimination.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is exactly what we are all fighting for. The railroads will carry certain kinds of freight always, because carriage by railroad is more expeditious, is faster, and safer. That kind of freight no boats can take away from them. There are other kinds of freight, such as lumber, which goes slowly, where time is not the essence of the matter, where safety is not considered, where it is natural the freight should move by water. What we want is to keep the two things separate. Let the boat have what naturally belongs to it, and let the railroad have what naturally belongs to it.

There is no law that will help water transportation get anything from the railroads, but there is a construction put upon the law by the Interstate Commerce Commission which attempts by rule to allow railroads to compete with water where they could not compete naturally with if it were not for that rule. We are trying simply to do nothing on earth except to remove that artificial power, nothing else.

Mr. FLETCHER. I favor, generally, the development, the growth, the promotion, of all means of transportation that we can devise in this country. I think it is a most important thing. Adequate, economical transportation enters into all our affairs. It relates directly to trade and commerce and has a vital bearing on production and distribution and industry as well.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. GOODING. I would ask the Senator if he thinks it is possible to encourage any one to invest money in any kind of water craft as long as a railroad is permitted to make rates that would destroy the business which such craft might enjoy or get? Capital will not invest in any town where there is discrimination in freight rates. We can not even start to develop our rivers unless we can first assure capital that their investments in river boats will not be destroyed by the Interstate Commerce Commission permitting the railroads to make lower rates for the longer haul than for the shorter haul.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that.

Mr. GOODING. I would like to say to the Senator, too, that we are not objecting to paying the same rates to the coast points, although the haul in some cases is from 1,000 to 2,000 miles longer; what we are fighting against is a discrimination against the interior, where our rate is higher than theirs.

Mr. FLETCHER. I quite understand the Senator's position. I am in favor of competition between rail and water, and of competition being maintained. I am utterly opposed to railroads having the power to drive off the boats from the waterways, as far as that is concerned. Each of those means of transportation has its place and function. Both are needed. In full vigor, efficiently and energetically, both should operate in order that the public may be served properly.

Mr. GOODING. The railroads have already driven the boats from the rivers. They can not come back unless we protect them so that the railroads can not again destroy them. They will not come back, because capital will not invest in a river boat with even a danger of discrimination against the freight they would carry.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like to proceed long enough to make just a statement in a sort of a connected way, if I can, with regard to this matter.

My recollection is, and I think the Senator will find, on the particular point to which he refers, that by an amendment to the Panama Canal act we undertook to cure that trouble which he mentions by providing that when a railroad company competing with a waterway reduced its rates it would not be allowed to raise those rates again without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That was intended to prevent railroad companies from stifling water competition, or destroying shipping on the waterways, because they can not, if they once reduce their rates, raise them again, under the law, without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

We provided another thing, that the railroad companies could not own ships passing through the Panama Canal in connection with their transcontinental lines. That was done so that there might be competition. If a transcontinental line owned its own boats on the Pacific that line would be in position to carry the freight by rail or water, just as might be determined, at its own rates. If it could not carry the freight by rail, according to the rate fixed for the railroad, it could put its boats into operation and carry the freight by water. So that eventually there would be no competition between rail and water if the same concern which owned the railroad also owned the ships.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the old law provided that where a railroad reduced its rate to where it was destructive of water competition it might not raise it, but under the present transportation act we specifically charged the commission with the duty of creating rate groups, and so adjusting fares and tariffs that each group might earn, as near as may be, 5½ per cent. If a railroad ran parallel to a coast and took a rate that was equal to the water rate, then the earning capacity of the road was reduced to such a point that it would reflect almost an intolerable burden on the shippers inland, because their rates on other roads would have to be raised so very high. Therefore that provision of the law does not obtain in the present transportation act. It is for that reason that we have attempted to differentiate in this proposal between the water transportation and the rail.

I want to call the Senator's attention to another point. I think we get our definitions mixed up. The Senator has been speaking, as all of us have, about the competition between water and rail. Giving each one its free, untrammeled domain, there can not be any such competition. Railroads can not compete with water, and freight can be moved so much cheaper by water that unless the railroads are allowed to recoup in other places than in the competition with water, they can not live at all. There can be no competition between water and railroads unless we artificially create a condition by which the railroads can recoup themselves in the helpless communities that have no water facilities.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not agree with the Senator that there can be no competition between water and rail lines, because I contend that there is a certain class of freight, the bulky, heavy freight, which water can move and should move cheaper than it can be moved by rail, freight which it therefore naturally ought to move; whereas there are other classes of freight, the higher classes of freight, that it pays more for the railroad companies to handle and that kind of quick-moving freight ought to be handled by the railroad companies.

I see no reason why we can not keep both our means of transportation, both the waterways and the railroads, busy in this country, both having practically all that they can do to handle the business that is growing and increasing all the while.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator has spoken of the advantage of transportation by railroad on account of the quickness and safety of such service, but it costs more, and therefore a shipper ought to be allowed to determine whether he is willing to pay more and use the railroad or pay less and use the water. Under our present system, without this amendment, he is denied any chance to carry his freight by water, for there is no such means. The railroads have lowered their rates to such a point that the shipper gets all the advantage of expedition and safety, and pays no more than by the water routes.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I stated previously, I want to see every possible means of transportation developed in the country. There are some advantages which the railroads have over the water lines. They have terminals; they have connections with the warehouses; they can haul a trainload of freight right up against the warehouse and unload it into the warehouse, whereas if the freight moves by water it must be unloaded and reloaded, and all at more or less additional expense. There are disadvantages on one side, and there are advantages on the other side in the way of less cost of operation, less cost for the service by way of water. Depending on the different classes of freight, the business ought to be reasonably adjusted, so that both the waterways and the railways would be able to take care of the business offered by the public.

There are two things always to be kept in mind. One is that the transportation line is a public utility and has the right to earn a fair return on its property. The other rule obtains also that the rate must be reasonable. Both rules must be kept in view. With reference to the great western area, we know perfectly well that if the railroads that pass through those States were dependent on the business of those States they could not live. They live on the business that runs through those States.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. The rate must not only be reasonable, but it must be compensatory and must be nondiscriminatory.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. McLEAN. How we could establish a fairer rule than that I can not see. The trouble with the situation is that some of the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission are considered to be discriminatory. That affects the administration of the law only.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is true. As I said, I really do not see any need for the legislation, because I think under the law as it exists the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is a great rate-making, rate-fixing body, has the authority and the power to base it upon the known principles connected with the operation of transportation.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator that I was not able to attend all the hearings that were held upon the bill before the Interstate Commerce Committee, but I know that the Interstate Commerce Commission sent a statement to the committee, which was approved by 10 out of the 11 members of the commission, in opposition to the measure. It is simply finding fault with the courts. The law is mandatory. As often happens in such cases, interests that lose their case in court find fault with the judge and try to get an amendment of the law. The law is mandatory and covers every possible contingency.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I have, however, introduced one or two proposed amendments to the interstate commerce act, to one of which I propose to refer in a moment, which I think would accomplish more helpful results than the pending bill. I do not want to delay action on the bill. We have discussed it nearly a week and have thrashed it out thoroughly. I am not seeking to delay action. In fact, except for the interruptions, I would have finished long ago what I have to say. I find no fault with the interrnptions, but they simply took time that I did not intend to consume.

My iden was to suggest that in amending the law as is provided for in the pending bill, the friends of the measure might defeat the very purpose they have in mind, and that is to give better and more favorable rates to the intermediate region between the Pacific coast and the Mississippi River, for instance.

The transcontinental lines are thoroughly well equipped and splendidly managed so far as I can see. I had some opportunity last summer to travel on one of them. I noticed that we might travel a whole day on that passenger train without picking up a passenger or without observing that a pound of freight had been offered on the line, and the freight trains which we did pass were solid trains of sealed cars usually bearing the label "California Fruit Co. refrigerator cars," showing that the freight originated on the coast and merely passed through those States. We do not want to strangle those great lines, because they mean everything to the States across which they operate, and at the same time there is no good to be accomplished for those States by forcing the lines to increase their rates at the seacoast; for instance, at San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle.

It may be that the railroad companies are earning sufficient to warrant lowering the rates for the shorter distances. If so, I would like to have that done. I have a statement called "Business conditions weekly," New York, May 17, 1924, from which I quote as follows:

Last year Southern Pacific earned nearly $13 per share, more than twice the $6 dividend. It could very well have paid a dividend of $8 per share. The total dividends disbursed were slightly over $20,000,000, as against $44,000,000 of net income. Usually it is safe for a railroad to pay out about two-thirds of its net income in dividends. On this basis Southern Pacific, with over $44,000,000 of net income, could very well have paid $28,000,000 in dividends, which would have been around 8 per cent. In 1922, however, the net income was only $32,600,000, so that the 6 per cent dividend was just about right, as it absorbed nearly two-thirds of the net income.

These figures indicate that the 6 per cent dividend is well protected. In fact, they suggest that Southern Pacific could manage comfortably to pay 7 per cent. However, it is not likely that the dividend will be increased unless earnings for 1924 and prospects for 1925 indicate that the average earning will equal 12 per cent or more.

I take it that the Southern Pacific Railroad is one of the roads affected by this proposed legislation. It certainly does seem to be in a very good condition financially at this time. That raises the point suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, about which principally I arose to offer some views.

Mr. President, I never favored section 15a, for reasons which appealed to me when the bill was pending, and I have had no occasion to change the opinion then formed. Therefore I introduced an amendment to the act providing for its repeal, and would, as now advised, still favor its repeal. I will as briefly as possible state my reasons therefor.

Section 15a consists of 18 paragraphs, covering many important features. Among the more important ones are the following:

1. Giving power to the commission to—initiate, modify, establish, or adjust—

Rates so—

that carriers as a whole (or as a whole in each of such rate groups or territories as the commission may from time to time designate) * * * will earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal as nearly as my be to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation. * * *

2. Giving the commission power to determine what percentage of such aggregate property value constitutes a fair return thereon, which percentage shall be uniform for all rate groups or territories which may be designated by the commission.

In Reduced Rates, 1922 (68 I. C. C. 676), at page 734, the commission fixed 5½ per cent of such value as constituting such fair return on and after March 1, 1922.

3. It is provided that any carrier earning an income in excess of the fair return thus fixed holds it as trustee for, and shall pay it to, the United States. Any net earnings in excess of 6 per cent are to be paid one-half into the reserve fund of the carrier and the remainder into a general railroad contingent fund.

Then follows provisions as to the reserve fund, the determination and recovery of excess income, and so forth.

4. The railroad contingent fund is to be a revolving fund to be administered by the commission and to be used by it in the furtherance of the public interest in railway transportation, either in making loans or refunding maturing securities, and so forth.

In connection with what I have to say, the other provisions of this section need not be referred to.

A criticism is frequently urged by shippers against the provisions of this section generally termed the guaranty, fixing the return the roads are entitled to. While in law it is not a guaranty, it is generally referred to as such.

However, to many minds it has some of the characteristics of a guaranty in this, that the commission is directed to prescribe just and reasonable rates so that the carrier will earn an annual net railway operating income that will amount to the percentage fixed by the commission as a reasonable return not only on a road whose earnings are already on this basis but for all roads in a group, without regard to whether such roads are weak or strong. The test most commonly used both in debate and otherwise is whether the road is a so-called "weak one," without much regard as to the cause of the weakness. Under this section the return and not the reasonableness of the rates seems to be of primary importance, and the decisions of the commission seem to justify this conclusion. In the case of Reduced Rates from New York Piers (81 I. C. C. 312, 331) the commission says:

We are required by section 15a of the act to initiate rates which will yield as nearly as may be a fair return to the carriers as a whole or as a whole by such rate groups as may be fixed.

In the case of Adriatic Mining Co. v. Chicago & North Western Railway Co. (78 I. C. C. 611, 632) the commission said:

It may also be pointed out that Congress in enacting section 15a of the interstate commerce act, directing that rules should be so fixed as to give the carriers as a whole a fair return on the aggregate value of their railway property, recognized the right of individual carriers to earnings in excess of that return in permitting them to retain one-half of their excess income above 6 per cent.

In the Transcontinental Cases of 1922 (74 I. C. C. 48, p. 71) the commission inter alia said:

Moreover, it must be borne in mind that where the out-of-pocket theory is used for a rate basis there is evidently thrown upon the rest of the traffic the task of providing the bulk of the net return contemplated in section 15a.

And again, at page 81:

Should they concede the probability of a net loss in revenue to the carriers as a whole, we should have to consider whether such a shrinkage would adversely affect the return at which we are required to aim under section 15a.

It is sometimes said that these provisions but express the decided rule of law that a public-service corporation is entitled to a fair return upon its property devoted to public use. This is a generalization which does not fully state the rule; for coupled with it is another principle that is quite as important—that a rate must be reasonable and just. In other words, while the return must be fair, the rate must be just and reasonable.

Keeping in mind that the railroads are now private property and the object is to continue them as such; that it is desired that private investments keep pace with the country's transportation requirements; that their rates are subject to complete control; that the public is entitled to be charged just and reasonable rates and such as do not meet those tests are condemned, I can not see reasons for some of the provisions of this section. As illustrative, I can not see the justification in taxing the public through rates to maintain and pay returns on unwise, improvident, or unnecessary investments simply because through speculation, commercial rivalry, jealousy, or otherwise such an investment turns out to be a losing one. In no other business of which I have knowledge does the Government make such provision or guaranty. The rest of us have to take our chances and have the extravagant or unwise expenditure trimmed down or squeezed out through a receivership or otherwise. While I certainly do not want losses to come to anyone, the rule has always been that the public did not guarantee investments in railroads. This is not to say that the railroads should not be permitted to earn a fair return. In my experience I have known of but a few instances where anyone felt otherwise. Indeed, I am quite sure that the records will disclose the fact that the regulative authorities generally have always kept this purpose in mind. It also has been my observation that most of the so-called adverse legislation reflects the reaction of the public to railroad policies and administration. I think this could be demonstrated from the history of the evolution of the act to regulate commerce. I am very certain that in fixing rates the commission always has in mind and considers expenses of every kind in arriving at a conclusion, and I certainly have no objection to a congressional declaration of a national railroad policy.

This question is closely allied to the treatment of the so-called "weak" roads, which may be "weak" from many causes. They may be "weak as a result of mistakes in policy, unsound financing, or bad management, and many because building in the first instance never was justified by the traffic obtainable." Yet "all weak roads are put in the same category * * * regardless of the cause of their condition or the public necessity for more service than they are now performing."

The establishing of rates and the return are directly connected with the recapture clause. Laying aside the right of the public to reasonable rates over the road on which it ships, waiving the fact that through development and growth over a series of years a business has been built up that will justify lower rates than a competing road, and that the public should be entitled to the fruit of its labor in rates as well as in other economies or improvements, let us look the question squarely in the face from the standpoint of the investor.

I think anyone would admit, with the element of gain or profit resulting from one's labors eliminated, with individual effort unrecognized, with one deprived of the benefit of his foresight, his judgment, and his labor, one would not expect much in the way of investment.

No particular reward is offered for new railroad investments. If one through his efforts, his intelligence, his energy, and his judgment succeed under reasonable rates in earning more than 6 per cent, one-half of the excess must be surrendered to the Government to be used in maintaining other railroads which, on account of location, management, or financing or for other reasons do not succeed. How will a law of this kind encourage investments? How long will it be before, with all incentive gone, the "weak" road will pull down the "strong" road and both be on a dead level of mediocrity? Certainly the credit of the "strong" road will not be maintained for long if it is to be used to support the "weak" road which has no credit. In a word investors will not take all the risks and forego the profits. Where is the justice—not considering the law—in taking earnings from stockholders which in many cases represent years of toil and waiting? In what way will this course serve to encourage investment? If a railroad, on a reasonable rate, earns a return of 7 per cent, why should it not keep it? Who is to judge the economies practiced, the efficiency developed, the excellence of the operation to bring about the result? Take away the incentive of gathering the fruits of one's labors and it will not be long until all the roads are "poor" with high expenses and operating results that will demand and continue to demand higher and higher rates.

I really do not see if private ownership is to continue why the road which secures its income under reasonable rates should not keep it. If not, the net result may be that the road which earns the revenue can not keep it, the man who pays the freight will not receive rates to which he is entitled and the law says he shall have, and the weak road which does not earn it will get the revenue. How this can encourage private investment or meet with the approval of the public, I can not see.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I think that section 15–A ought to be repealed, and I think that such action would mean more to the Intermountain States and to the other States and to the country at large than legislation of the character which is now proposed.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the pending measure has been discussed for several days, and I can not add anything to the able presentation of those who are opposed to it. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] presented an argument which, it seems to me, is unanswerable, and I heartily agree with everything that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has said.

If I lived in one of the intermountain States, I should vote against this amendment, and I should vote against it because I believe conditions which would arise because of it would necessitate an increase in the existing rates to the intermountain sections of the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McLEAN. I should like to finish one sentence.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean an increase in existing rates from coast to coast——

Mr. McLEAN. I mean just what I said.

Mr. KING. Or to intermediate points?

Mr. McLEAN. I mean to the intermountain section.

Mr. KING. But not from coast to coast?

Mr. McLEAN. That would depend upon circumstances.

Mr. President, this amendment is nothing more nor less than an attack, or at least a reflection, upon the integrity of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission or their competency. The existing law is mandatory. All rates must be reasonable; they shall be compensatory, and they shall be nondiscriminatory. It so happens that Senators living in the intermountain section believe that existing rates are discriminatory. In other words, they are finding fault with the decision of the court. As I suggested a few moments ago when I interrupted the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Interstate Commerce Commission have given serious consideration to this question, and 10 out of 11 of them are opposed to this amendment.

This situation arises frequently whenever an important matter goes to court and is tried. The unsuccessful party immediately finds fault, and in many instances he comes to the lawmaking body and wants the law amended. Precisely the same question is involved in this controversy as would be involved and has been involved many times in the interpretation of the antitrust act as to what constitutes restraint of trade.

The same question arose when we created the Federal Trade Commission and prohibited unfair competition. I remember that when we were debating that bill a good many Senators insisted that the expression "unfair competition" should be interpreted by the Congress; but every lawyer knows that when you lay down a general principle of law it is as far as you can safely go. If you undertake to establish a state of fact which will in every case violate the principle, you immediately find that it is impossible.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], in his discussion of the question the other day, in his very opening sentence admitted that there were two sides to this question. The fact is, there are thousands of sides. Every time there is a question as to whether or not the rate is reasonable or discriminatory that question goes to the Interstate Commerce Commission. There are thousands of these cases that come to their attention, and it is for this court to say whether the rate is reasonable or not. It is for this tribunal to say whether it comes within the provisions of the law or not. I do not understand that any of the proponents of the measure find fault with the law, and yet they are urging Congress to set up a condition of fact under which no departure can be allowed, no matter whether that departure is compensatory or not. My opinion is that if they succeed in doing this they will be the first to suffer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. KING. I do not want to disturb the continuity of the Senator's splendid argument; but does the Senator think that the proponents of this measure are seeking to have rates adopted that are noncompensatory? We are complaining because the proposition is to haul freight from coast to coast, or from intermediate points between the Pacific and the Atlantic to the Pacific, at out-of-pocket cost, or perhaps less than cost, in order to compete with water rates. We want the railroads to have a compensatory rate from ocean to ocean, or from interior points to the ocean.

Mr. McLEAN. That is the law. That is precisely my point. The law is mandatory. Rates should be compensatory. If the Senator were in the railroad business, he would know that an out-of-pocket cost may in many instances be compensatory. If the operation of this law should deprive that road of freight which it otherwise would carry and thus diminish its net income, that would have to be made up by an increase in rates to the intermediate points. There is no question about that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator, without concurring in the last observation, that with the facilities which the railroads now have and the facilities which they will be permitted to create in addition to those they now have in the next four or five years they will have more freight from ocean to ocean than they can properly carry without the adoption of the policy for which the Senator is contending and against which we are inveighing.

Mr. McLEAN. On the contrary, it is my judgment that if this amendment passes, with the restrictions that are now placed upon the earnings of the carriers, it will be exceedingly difficult to secure the additional railroad facilities which the intermountain section need and which they will get if they will allow the transcontinental roads to add to their income every dollar that they can get in the long-distance haul.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GOODING. Does the Senator think that his beautiful city of Bridgeport would have developed and grown if it had had discrimination in freight rates such as the transcontinental railroads are now asking against the interior of the West?

I want to say to the Senator that if you will let me fix the freight rates, I will destroy any town or any industry in America in one short year. The bats will be flying through your institutions; and what we are fighting for is that we shall not have discrimination against the interior and our institutions—nothing more. You have not any discriminations; you never had any; but you want to force them on the interior of the West and the interior of the Southern States.

Mr. McLEAN. The trouble with the Senator—and I have been trying to make it clear to the Senate—is that he insists that the Interstate Commerce Commission are violating the law; otherwise there would be no ground whatever for his position. The law says that the rates shall not be discriminatory. If there is discrimination, it is not the fault of the law; it is the fault of the court; and he is, as I have said is frequently the case when a man is unfortunate in losing his cause, finding fault with the court.

Mr. GOODING. When the court continually permits these violations in which there is a discrimination, then I ask to have the law amended so that it is absolute, so that they can not make that discrimination; that is all.

Mr. McLEAN. That is just the trouble. When you do that, conditions will arise in which you will regret the fact that you have undertaken to lay down a principle and then set up a condition of fact which shall violate that principle.

When we come to administer this law it must be interpreted by a judicial body which will inquire into the facts. Whenever Congress undertakes to do that in advance, to anticipate conditions of fact which may violate that principle, as I have said, it is utterly impossible.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield again——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut further yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McLEAN. I do.

Mr. GOODING. I will ask the Senator if he will accept discriminations against the cities in his State, or his institutions of any kind, even for as much as one penny a hundred, while in the West they are asking for discrimination that is equal to 48 cents a hundred?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GOODING. Will the Senator answer that question? Will he accept discriminations as against his own people and his own State and his own institutions?

Mr. McLEAN. The trouble with the Senator from Idaho is that he argues himself out of court. He insists every time that there is a discrimination. If there is, it is unlawful and the fault is with the commission.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McLEAN. I do.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask, really, two questions, if I may. One is as to whether or not these through rates which the railroads seek to put into effect are the character of rates which the Interstate Commerce Commission could compel the railroads to put into effect? In other words, my doubt is this: Are not those rates so low that if the railroads ordered to put them into effect by the Interstate Commerce Commission should object, the court would say that they do not return a reasonable income upon the investment? That is, I am really inquiring as to whether we are not permitting the railroads to establish a rate which the courts and the Interstate Commerce Commission could not compel to be established?

Mr. McLEAN. I think the assumption that the carriers of the country are philanthropists is a very violent assumption. My impression is that the railroads usually charge all that the traffic will bear, all that the Interstate Commerce Commission will approve; and I can not conceive that a transcontinental railroad would take freight from Chicago to the Pacific seaboard at a loss when the Interstate Commerce Commission will permit them to charge enough to return a profit.

Mr. ADAMS. Then if in fact the rates are compensatory, within the meaning of our Supreme Court decisions, the rates from the interior points must exceed that point. In other words, if you start your through train running from New York, and you carry it on to Denver, and at that point you put on an additional freight car, the situation is that you are charging more to carry a freight car from Denver to San Francisco than you are to carry the same freight car from New York through Denver to San Francisco, and that is the type of operation. Now, it may not be discrimination in the sense in which the term is used, but the suggestion that I have is that if that is a practice to which the Congress objects it is entirely proper that they should say to the Interstate Commerce Commission: "We object to that particular practice; we wish it stopped, regardless of whether it is technically a discrimination or not."

I am entirely willing to concede that the Interstate Commerce Commission has been acting entirely in good faith, has been correct in its interpretation. If Congress, the law making body, wishes to change the rule of law, it is entirely appropriate that they should do so. It appeals to those of us in the West that there should be an additional regulation to prevent what we call discriminations, though the Interstate Commerce Commission does not so designate them.

Mr. McLEAN. If I understand the Senator's point, I can answer it by calling his attention to the fact that there is a great variety of commodities. It might be desirable to ship to the Pacific seaboard a great many things which would not be wanted at the present time in Montana or Idaho or some other State. I can imagine that special machinery or many other articles that might be very desirable on the Pacific coast could not at the present time, and would not, be of any use in the intermountain section. Nevertheless, there might be an instance where somebody would want a very small order of a similar commodity, but 99 per cent of it might be entirely through freight.

If you prevent the carrier from putting his rate low enough to meet water competition, assuming, of course, that it must always remain compensatory, you deprive him of a certain portion of his income, which must be made up by increased charges upon transportation to the intermediate section. I can take no other view of it. That is the view that has been maintained with regard to this subject ever since the transportation act was passed, and it seems to me that it would be much better to let the law remain as it is, because my impression is, and I think the facts will show, that departures which cause any discrimination upon which any complaint can be well founded are exceedingly rare.

The Senator understands, as well as I do, that the railroad-rate structure is exceedingly intricate. It is a paramount problem. It is the result of years of growth, and the Senator himself says that he thinks the Interstate Commerce Commission is acting in good faith. The Senator from Idaho does not agree with him. He says they are deliberately discriminating and trying to ruin the intermountain country. I say the position of the Senator from Idaho is not tenable. The very life of railroads, as the Senator from Colorado knows, depends upon their building up their patronage at intermediate points.

So, I say, in many instances it might be wise to let this through freight from the East go to the coast at a lower rate.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will recall, the other day one of the Senators in discussing the matter stated that the western Senators were complaining against God and against nature. Our situation is rather this, that as a part of the taxpayers of the Nation we helped to build the Panama Canal. We put the eastern seaboard 10,000 miles nearer the western seaboard than God and nature had put it. We were entirely willing to do that; but the point to which we object is that, we have put the eastern seaboard 10,000 miles nearer than it was by nature, now they wish, from the standpoint of railroad rates, to put the eastern seaboard nearer to the Pacific by land as well as by water; in other words, practically, from a rate standpoint, to set New York and the other eastern cities to the west of Kansas City and of Denver when they come to making up rates. That is, it seems to me, we have gone a long way to give a beneficial water-route rate, and it ought not to be inverted and applied to our disadvantage.

Prior to the construction of the Panama Canal we did not meet that problem. Then it was purely a question of competition between railroad points—that is, except the extreme traffic that went around the Horn.

Mr. McLEAN. Of course, the Senator knows that there is no economic distinction between competition furnished by water and that furnished by rail. The other day the Senator from South Carolina very entertainingly described the two great systems of transportation, one natural and the other artificial. My impression is that if there is anything natural about the land, the water is also natural, and if a mogul engine is artificial, I think a steamboat is artificial. The Senator from South Carolina elaborated his argument by calling our attention to the great Mississippi River. He called it "Nature's highway." I think that depends upon whether a man wants to swim or walk. If he has no boat—no artificial assistance—he will find that the natural highway which will be to his advantage will be the one that he can use with his legs.

The Senator will remember that years ago we created a Waterways Commission, and I think ex-Senator BURTON was chairman of that commission, one of the ablest men who ever occupied a seat in this Chamber. He gave years of study to this question, and my recollection is that he came to the conclusion that what the American people want is the cheapest and the most efficient method of transportation they can get, regardless of the fact that it might develop that the railroads could carry freight from New York to San Francisco cheaper than it could go by boat. The American people want the lowest rate they can get, and that is precisely what the railroads are giving them. But that rate must be compensatory, it must be nondiscriminatory, and if that law is complied with, no harm can result to the interior points.

Mr. ADAMS. May I make this one suggestion, and I will not interrupt the Senator further: I am thinking, in part, in terms not of transportation companies but in terms of the manufacturer and the man shipping the commodities. For instance, in the community in which I live we have a steel works manufacturing steel rails and other steel products, constituting heavy traffic upon the railroads. We are apparently confronted with the condition that under the present regulation of railroad rates steel rails may be shipped from the seaboard by rail through our community to the Pacific for substantially less than the rate at which we can ship them.

The quantity of the shipments does not vary between the two. Under the rates adopted by the railroads we have been put to a disadvantage which did not exist prior to the opening of the Panama Canal, so that we are wondering how we are to receive the benefits the Senator thinks will be secured by permitting this lower-than-cost rate on the long haul and the more than compensatory rate for the short haul.

Mr. McLEAN. If they can not fix a rate that will compete with the water competition they lose so much business, and that loss of revenue must be made up by raising the rate to intermediate points. I can not see any other conclusion.

Mr. ADAMS. Our situation is this, that under normal rates we can compete from our State to the Pacific coast. They prevent us from competing by substantially raising our rates in order that the man who has 2,000 miles farther to go may compete. That is the thing of which we are complaining.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I did not intend to occupy the time of the Senate five minutes in discussing this question. Years ago, when it was under discussion, I took pains to investigate it with some care.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator in opening his remarks challenged my attention, namely, that were he a resident of one of the intermountain States he would take the position he does. I merely want to inquire of the Senator whether he recalls any Senator from the intermountain section of the country, in the course of his service in this body, who ever took that position?

Mr. McLEAN. I think there are a good many influences out there——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What is that?

Mr. McLEAN. I think there are a great many important issues in the intermountain States that are pending all the time, and, as the Senator from Utah said, we are influenced largely by our environment, and properly so. I do not question the good faith of the Senators who represent those States, but if I lived in one of those States I should disagree with them on this question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am simply asking the Senator whether he knows of any Senator from that part of the country who ever did take that position?

Mr. McLEAN. No.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator know of any public man from that section of the country who ever took that position, whether he was in the Senate or out of the Senate?

Mr. McLEAN. I was about to call the attention of the Senate to the views of Professor Johnson on this subject.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. From where?

Mr. McLEAN. Professor Johnson is——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of Philadelphia?

Mr. McLEAN. Professor of transportation and commerce in the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was inquiring of the Senator about the public men who speak the views of the people of that section.

Mr. McLEAN. I say to the Senator from Montana that he will not find in this country—I have not been able to find—the opinion of an unprejudiced, impartial student of the subject who does not agree with me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the Senator will make his own case, but I was endeavoring to bring out, if I could, the attitude of the people of that part of the country who have studied the question with reference to their own individual interest. I take it that the Senator does not know of anyone, or he would have made it clear. Then I want to inquire of the Senator, under those circumstances, what conclusion we must arrive at—that those people out there do not know their own business, do not know their own interests.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say to the Senator that with regard to most of these important questions, as far as I am concerned, I always try to ascertain the views of men who are not candidates for the United States Senate; men who are interested solely in ascertaining the soundness or the unsoundness of the question at issue.

I have a great many times in my own experience had very strong prejudices. As I said the other day, when this question was up in the Connecticut Legislature 40 years ago, I was enthusiastically in favor of it, but we tried it, and it did not work as we expected.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The long-and-short-haul proposition?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes. It did not work as we expected. For that reason and fortified as I am by the almost unanimous opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the writers upon the subject who have no interest to serve except the integrity of their views, I can not vote for the bill. I am not criticizing any Senator who disagrees with me. It is my way generally, when I have one of these important questions before me, to find out what the experts think about it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand perfectly well the Senator's views on the subject. For 30 years this matter has been a subject of debate all through our section of the country. Up to the present time, so far as my present information goes, no public man has ever taken any other position upon the question——

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I mean from that part of the country—and yet, the Senator tells us if he lived in that section of the country he would take a different view.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; and I repeat the statement. It is true the attempt has been made again and again to repeal the departure provision in the fourth section of the interstate commerce act, but up to date, for some reason, Congress has declined to accept the views of the gentlemen who come from the intermountain section. My opinion is that the reason why Congress has declined to accede to those views is because they would prove to be disappointing if they were ever enacted into law. My impression that the enactment of this bill—I expect the bill will pass—is largely due to its continual coming, and so forth. If gentlemen in the West want the experience, let them have it. Some people learn from the experience of others. Some people learn from their own experience. I have always tried, as far as I could, to take advantage of the experience of others.

I want to quote from Mr. Johnson's work on "American Railway Transportation" an opinion which seems to me to be sound:

> Section 4 of the statute makes it "unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kinds of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance." This "long-and-short-haul clause" of the act was inserted in the law because of the prominence in this country of the particular form of discrimination against which it was directed. The large volume of long-distance traffic competed for by rival railroads brought about such reductions in the charges for through traffic as to make the local rates for shorter distances much higher than those on competitive business. There was much difference of opinion regarding the advisability of including this section in the law. The House of Representatives favored its inclusion in the law and its enforcement under all circumstances, but the Senate foresaw that unless the provisions of the law were made less rigid, carriers might frequently lose their traffic at competitive points and be obliged because of the law to depend even more largely for their income upon the receipts from the local traffic. The enforcement of a long-and-short-haul clause under these conditions would injure both the local shipper and the carrier. For this reason the Interstate Commerce Commission established by the act was given power to suspend the operation of section 4 for certain carriers in special cases after an investigation of the conditions of competition. The commission has exercised this power in several instances.

The Interstate Commerce Commission submitted to the Committee on Interstate Commerce a communication in relation to this bill. It seems to me that the views of the commission are well founded, but they cover many pages, and I realize that reading them would have no effect upon the vote which is about to be taken. The question is more or less complicated, as is the bill, but in view of the fact that the bill must go to the House and meet with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House, I ask to have the statement printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, March 19, 1924.

Hon. ELLISON D. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on Interstate Commerce,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to your request the Interstate Commerce Commission has considered S. 2327, a bill to amend section 4 of the interstate commerce act, on which hearings have been held recently by your committee, and now transmits its following report thereon. The references in this report are to the printed text of that bill as introduced by Senator GOODING in the Senate on February 1, 1924, and for convenience a print of that bill is attached on which the changes thereby proposed from the text of the present law are indicated in red ink.

These changes will be discussed in their order.

Sheet 1, line 8: The bill inserts the word "a" before "like kind of property." This perhaps is through inadvertence No need appears for the insertion.

Sheet 2, lines 4, 5, and 6: The bill proposes to substitute the words—

> "Provided, That upon application to the commission a common carrier by rail may, after public hearing, be authorized by the commission to charge less for"—

In place of the words in the existing act reading—

> "Provided, That upon application to the commission such common carrier may in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by the commission to charge less for"—

The word "such" in the existing law refers back to the words "any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act" (sheet 1, lines 5 and 6) and the words "any common carrier within the terms of this act" (sheet 2, line 3). The original act to regulate commerce of February 4, 1887, provided in its first section that its provisions should apply to—

> "any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used, under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States." * * *

The amendments made to section 4 in 1910 to 1920 have retained the original words "such common carrier," thus referring to common carriers partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment, as well as common carriers wholly by railroad. The scope of the words "such common carrier," in the existing fourth section, was enlarged by the inclusion in section 1 under the Hepburn Act of June 29, 1906, of pipe lines, express companies, and sleeping-car companies, as carriers subject to the provisions of the act.

It follows that the effect of the proposed substitution on sheet 2, line 5, of the words "a common carrier by rail" in place of the words "such common carrier" now in the law, is to exclude from the operation of the proviso carriers of passengers or property partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment, a type of carrier which has always been subject to the proviso, and to also exclude pipe lines, express companies, and sleeping car companies, which have been subject to the proviso since June 29, 1906. These other types of carriers will, if this bill is enacted, remain subject to the prohibition which precedes this proviso making it unlawful for them to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of the act, but all carriers except common carriers by rail will be excluded from any relief under the proviso. In other words, as to all common carriers except common carriers by rail the prohibition of the fourth section will become inflexible and absolute.

The warrant for so fundamental a change in what has been for 37 years the policy of Congress as declared in the fourth section is not apparent. The hardship which it will work in case of the so-called differential water and rail lines which are so much used by New England, to use but one illustration, is obvious. Another illustration will be found in the similar water and rail routes from New York and other North Atlantic ports to Baltimore or South Atlantic ports and thence by rail to interior destinations. Still another illustration is the ocean and rail route of the Southern Pacific, New York to Galveston, ocean, Galveston to San Francisco, rail.

Pipe lines and sleeping-car companies have not sought or obtained fourth-section relief. Express companies have, and since the zone and block system of making express rates was prescribed by the commission express companies are more than ever in need of such relief, since the express rate from one block or subblock to another is the same by whatever route moved, and one or more out of several routes from the same origin to the same destination may be so located that a train carrying the express matter will move through a higher-rated block or subblock on its way to the common destination. Over these rail routes the express company has no control. It did not locate them, does not maintain them, and could only obviate such seeming fourth-section departures by restricting the routing of express matter to a rail line so located as not to pass through any higher-rated block or subblock.

Indeed, there are many instances where no route would be available unless either the rates should be reduced at intermediate points below the block basis or, at the more distant point, increased to a basis higher than that prescribed by us, for in many instances the only routes reaching certain points pass through higher-rated blocks in reaching lower-rated blocks. The direct route might have only 1 passenger train a day each way and the circuitous route 5 or 10 passenger trains each way daily. The conveniences for handling express matter in the passenger stations at origin or destination of the circuitous route might greatly exceed corresponding facilities by the direct route. The rigidity of the rule which will become operative under this bill would deprive shippers of conveniences in expedited service, to which they are accustomed and of which they should not be deprived, and, indeed, might make it necessary to largely discard the block system of express rates throughout the country, a system devised only after long and painstaking investigation by us, generally adopted by State commissions, and proven by experience to be highly satisfactory to shippers as well as to the express companies. As the act now reads, express companies are subject to the fourth section, and under the bill they will be denied any relief from the prohibition of that section, including existing relief after six months following the passage of this bill.

The words "in special cases," which are omitted by the bill, have been in the act since its original enactment.

The reason for this change does not appear.

The substitution of "public hearing" for "investigation" will carry with it consequences which can hardly have been foreseen in the drafting of this bill.

Neither section 4 nor any other section of the original act or of any supplemental act has made the holding of a public hearing a prerequisite of the exercise by the commission of the powers and duties conferred upon it in the administration of section 4.

The commission has never denied a hearing on a fourth-section application when hearing was sought by any party interested. During the six months' period expiring February 17, 1911, over 5,000 applications for fourth-section relief were filed with the commission. These covered practically every mile of rail in the United States and embraced transportation of passengers as well as property. The departures covered by such applications were by the 1910 amendment of the fourth section protected by this proviso:

> "Provided further, That no rates or charges lawfully existing at the time of the passage of this amendatory act shall be required to be changed by reason of the provisions in this section prior to the expiration of six months after the passage of this act, nor in any case where application shall have been filed before the commission in accordance with the provisions of this section until a determination of such application by the commission."

The applications for relief as to passenger service were promptly disposed of, most of them within one year. It has long been our custom to set down portions of original fourth-section applications for hearing in connection with cases on complaint as well as in all cases where violation of the fourth section was expressly alleged by the complainants. In decision of these cases it is believed that, except in southern territory, most of the hurtful departures from the rule of the fourth section have been disposed of in one way or another. In the excepted territory all the remaining applications as to class rates have been heard and are soon to be decided. For more than 13 years rates reflecting such departures have been subject to attack by anyone believing himself to be injured thereby.

The original applications only covered the rates then existing. Any change in those rates necessitated further application and the granting or denial by the commission of the relief sought in respect of such change. So also change in packing requirements, such as the use of paper board cartons where wooden containers had previously been designated in the tariffs or the use of sacks instead of barrels as containers for flour. In brief, any change in the description or the rate covered by the original application necessitated fresh application for relief, but the making of such new application did not and does not protect the departure. There has thus grown up a usage of according without hearing what is termed temporary relief in situations analogous and closely allied to those covered by the original applications, this relief to continue until the original application, or that portion of it to which the new application is allied, should be ultimately disposed of in one way or another.

The rate adjustment in this country is not and never has been static. To have arrested all change in rate or description or charge for services incidental or accessorial to transportation service until hearing could be had on the formal docket and reports and orders could be made based on the record in such hearings would have been of immeasurable detriment to the producers and shippers throughout the United States, and would have restricted and obstructed that free flow of commerce which it was the object of the act to promote. Moreover, the requirement of hearing as a prerequisite would have delayed our according fourth-section relief in so far as necessary to comply with our decisions in the Five Per Cent case and the Fifteen Per Cent case, with general order No. 28 of the Director General of Railroads, and with our decisions in Increased Rates, 1920, and Reduced Rates, 1922, and would have further postponed the general readjustment of rates authorized or required in these cases, to say nothing of the reduction of rates on farm and ranch products in the West which became effective January 1, 1922, or the compliance with our order in rates on grain, grain products, and hay or with our decision that rates on long hauls of livestock in the West should be reduced, but not below 50 cents per 100 pounds.

No permanent relief has ever been granted by us upon the original application except after hearing, for the reason that those applications did not so fully supply the needed information as subsequent applications have done under our more specific detailed requirements. During the first 10 months of 1923 hearings were had on 209 original applications. There were only 31 appearances by persons other than carriers, only 8 witnesses appeared on behalf of shipping interests or localities, and of these only 2 opposed the relief. In considering applications filed since February 17, 1911, permanent relief has generally been granted or denied without a hearing where circuitous lines seek authority to meet short-line competition and all the facts as to the degree of circuity, the rates involved, and other essential matters were presented in or with the application. To require a hearing on each of these applications would greatly delay their disposition, as well as interfere with other matters requiring our attention. Most of such applications can now be disposed of in a few days, whereas if hearings were required much time must elapse before final action could be taken on them. In addition, the expense to the commission and to the interested carriers would be materially increased, and it has been our experience that little or no interest is taken in such hearings by anyone except the applicant. In orders granting relief the following clause is always inserted:

> "The commission does not hereby approve any rates that may be filed under this authority, all such rates being subject to complaint, investigation, and correction if in conflict with any provision of the act."

As illustrative of our consistent interpretation of our duty under the statute "to investigate in such manner and by such means" as we shall deem proper, attention is invited to fourth-section circular No. 6, issued by division 2 under date of October 27, 1922, a copy of which is hereto attached marked "Appendix A."

It may be added that no fourth-section relief has ever been granted in respect to transcontinental rates, and the rate relation of intermountain points to Pacific coast terminals, except upon hearing.

In brief, the commission has exercised and, if the act be left unchanged in this particular, will continue to exercise its judgment in such way as to discharge its duty under section 13 to "investigate the matters complained of in such manner and by such means as it shall deem proper" and appropriate to the case before it.

The rigid and inflexible requirement of a public hearing in every case before relief can be granted, in our opinion, is not in the public interest.

Sheet 2, lines 8–11. The bill proposes to strike out from the existing act the words—

> "and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section"—

And to substitute therefor the words—

> "only in a case where the route via the applicant rail carrier or rail carriers is longer than via the route of some other rail carrier or rail carriers between the same points."

The words thus omitted were the subject of consideration in the Intermountain cases (21 I. C. C. 329 and 21 I. C. C. 400). In the former of these cases the commission, speaking through Commissioner Lane, said, among other things:

> "If now we have apprehended aright the intent of Congress there comes before us upon an application for permission to deviate from the prohibitive clause of the fourth section the inclusive question whether by such deviation any provision of the act will be violated, and the burden rests upon the carrier to satisfy our minds that no such result would be effected by the granting of such permission—that no injustice will be done to the intermediate point with relation to the more distant point, * * * and when Congress says that this commission 'may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section,' it means to lodge with this body, if it means anything at all, the power to pass in judgment upon the effect of a railroad policy which departs from the intendment of the law. A community is entitled to something more than a reasonable rate; it is entitled to a nondiscriminatory rate. A carrier may not say, 'We will give to this community a reasonable rate' and meet the full requirement of the law. It must view its rates as a whole and see to it that they effect no advantage or preference to one community over another which does not arise necessarily out of the transportation advantages which the one has over the other."

Based on these and other considerations the commission found that the transcontinental carriers serving Reno and other main-line points on the Central Pacific should make no higher charge upon any article carrying a commodity rate than was contemporaneously in effect from Missouri River points, such as Omaha and Kansas City, to coast terminal points; that traffic originating at Chicago and in Chicago territory moving under commodity rates might have a rate 7 per cent higher to Reno, etc., than to the coast terminals; that from Buffalo-Pittsburgh territory the rates to intermediate points might exceed those to the coast terminals by 15 per cent, and from New York and trunk-line territory by 25 per cent. In the other case, brought by the city of Spokane et al., the report was written by Commissioner Prouty, and similar conclusions were reached. The following is quoted from the headnote:

> "6. In determining whether the carrier shall be permitted to make the higher intermediate charge the commission can not act arbitrarily, but must apply the principles which control it in the administration of the other portions of the act. It must inquire whether the maintenance of the higher intermediate rate will result in unreasonable charges or unjust discriminations. If so, the permission must be refused; otherwise it must be granted.
> "7. The commission may prescribe in any way that is definite and certain the extent to which the intermediate rate may exceed the long-distance rate in cases where this is necessary to prevent unreasonable rates or unjust discriminations."

These cases were both decided June 22, 1911, after full hearings held in Washington.

In our twenty-fifth annual report to the Congress, being for the year 1911, beginning at page 27, we developed at some length the situation leading up to our fourth-section transcontinental orders in these two cases, reported that these orders had been enjoined by the Commerce Court, and explained the difference in the views of that court and of the commission. Thus, at page 31 we said:

> "It is our duty to inquire with respect to each application whether, if the carrier is allowed to make the higher charge at the intermediate point, it will result in rates which are unreasonable or unduly discriminatory.
> "The section also authorizes the commission to prescribe the extent to which the carrier may be relieved from the rule of the section. We understand this to mean that if the commission reaches the conclusion that some higher charge might properly be imposed at the intermediate point, but that the present discrimination is too great, then it may fix the extent to which the rate at the short-distance point may exceed that at the long-distance point.
> "The Commerce Court agrees that it is the duty of the commission to examine each application, but only, apparently, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there are competitive conditions at the more distant point which do not exist at the intermediate point. If such conditions exist, then it is the duty of the commission to permit the charging of the lower rate at the more distant point, without reference to the intermediate rate, except in so far as that rate may be found to be unreasonable in and of itself.

"In the opinion of the Commerce Court, if we find competitive conditions at the more distant point which do not obtain at the intermediate point we must grant relief, and can only inquire whether the intermediate rate is reasonable. In the opinion of the commission we must go further, and must inquire, not only whether competitive conditions do exist at the more distant point, but also whether those conditions justify the discrimination against the intermediate point evidenced by the rates in force. If we find that those competitive conditions do exist, but do not justify a discrimination of the degree now in force, then it is our duty to prescribe the extent to which the discrimination may go, if at all.

In 1914 the Supreme Court reversed the decrees of the Commerce Court and sustained the validity of the commission's orders from a fourfold viewpoint, namely, (1) meaning of section 4 as amended, (2) its constitutionality, (3) the jurisdiction of the court, and (4) the validity of our orders in the light of the statute as interpreted. These decisions are reported in United States et al. v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. et al. (234 U. S. 476), and United States et al. v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. et al. (234 U. S. 495), opinion by Mr. Chief Justice White, the court stating the carriers' objections to the validity of our orders and answering them in this language:

* * * "The main insistence is that there was no power after recognizing the existence of competition and the right to charge a lesser rate to the competitive point than to intermediate points to do more than fix a reasonable rate to the intermediate points; that is to say, that under the power transferred to it by the section as amended the commission was limited to ascertaining the existence of competition and to authorizing the carrier to meet it without any authority to do more than exercise its general powers concerning the reasonableness of rates at all points. But this proposition is directly in conflict with the statute as we have construed it and with the plain purpose and intent manifested by its enactment. * * * As the prime object of the transfer was to vest the commission within the scope of the discretion imposed and subject in the nature of things to the limitations arising from the character of the duty exacted and flowing from the other provisions of the act with authority to consider competitive conditions and their relation to persons and places, necessarily there went with the power the right to do that by which alone it could be exerted, and therefore a consideration of the one and the other and the establishment of the basis by percentages was within the power granted."

It thus appears that the bill proposes to wipe out of the statute provisions which have been sustained by the Supreme Court as not only constitutional but within the powers delegated to this commission, in harmony with the other provisions of the act, and apt for the purpose of carrying that act into effect. It does not appear why it is thought to be in the public interest that power be withdrawn from the commission to prescribe the extent of relief from operation of the section or to do so from time to time as occasion arises under the existing provisions of the law.

Under fourth-section applications and after investigation relief heretofore has been granted carriers in appropriate cases, within the following general situations, to charge lower rates for longer than for shorter distances over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance:

(1) Where a circuitous line or route is in competition with a shorter line or route.

(2) Where rail lines are in competition with water carriers. For example, relief has been granted the rail line operating between San Francisco, Calif., and Portland, Oreg., points between which there is actual water competition, to charge lower rates than those maintained to and from intermediate points north of San Francisco.

(3) To meet commercial or market competition, as where a carrier serving a section whose products are in competition with those of other sections desires to establish rates to a common market which will enable producers on its line to compete in that market with producers in the other sections. Relief in these cases is granted only where the line or route seeking relief is at a substantial disadvantage as compared with the lines or routes serving competitive points or sections of production.

The adequacy of market competition to support fourth-section relief under the amendment of 1910 has been recognized by the Supreme Court.

In United States v. A. T. & S. F. Ry. Co. et al., 234 U. S. 476, Mr. Chief Justice White said, among other things:

"Almost immediately after the adoption of the act to regulate commerce in 1887 * * * the Interstate Commerce Commission, in considering the meaning of the law and the scope of the duties imposed on the commission in enforcing it, reached the conclusion * * * that competition which materially affected the rate of carriage to a particular point was a dissimilar circumstance and condition within the meaning of the act. * * * In considering the act comprehensively it was pointed out that the generic provisions against preference and discrimination expressed in the second and third sections of the act were all embracing and were therefore operative upon the fourth section as well as upon all other provisions of the act. But it was pointed out that where within the purview of the fourth section it had lawfully resulted that the lesser rate was charged for a longer than was exacted for a shorter haul such exaction being authorized could not be a preference or discrimination and therefore illegal.

* * * "These comprehensive views announced at the inception as a matter of administrative construction were subsequently sustained by many decisions of this court, and to the leading of such cases we refer in the margin. We observe, moreover, that in addition it came to be settled that where competitive conditions authorized carriers to lower their rates to a particular place the right to meet the competition by lowering rates to such place was not confined to shipments made from the point of origin of the competition, but empowered all carriers in the interest of freedom of commerce and to afford enlarged opportunity to shippers to accept, if they chose to do so, shipments to such competitive points at lower rates than their general tariff rates: A right which came aptly to be described as 'market competition' because the practice served to enlarge markets and develop the freedom of traffic and intercourse. * * * As the statute as thus construed imposed no obligation to carry to the competitive point at a rate which was less than a reasonable one, it is obvious that the statute regarded the rights of private ownership and sought to impose no duty conflicting therewith. It is also equally clear that * * * the statute lodged in the carrier the right to exercise a primary judgment concerning a matter of public concern broader than the mere question of the duty of a carrier to carry for a reasonable rate on the one hand and of the right of the shipper on the other to compel carriage at such rate, since the power of primary judgment which the statute conferred concerned in a broad sense the general public interest with reference to both persons and places, considerations all of which therefore in their ultimate aspects came within the competency of legislative regulations. It was apparent that the power thus conferred was primary, not absolute, since its exertion by the carrier was made by the statute the subject both of administrative control and ultimate judicial review. * * *

"With the light afforded by the statements just made we come to consider the amendment (of 1910). * * * From the failure to insert any word in the amendment tending to exclude the operation of competition as adequate under proper circumstances to justify the awarding of relief from the long-and-short-haul clause and there being nothing which minimizes or changes the application of the preference and discrimination clauses of the second and third sections, it follows that in substance the amendment intrinsically states no new rule or principle, but simply shifts the powers conferred by the section as it originally stood; that is, it takes from the carriers the deposit of public power previously lodged in them and vests it in the commission as a primary instead of a reviewing function."

(4) To carriers in poor financial condition whose cost of operation due to conditions over which they have no control are unusually high, to meet the competition of stronger lines whose traffic, operating, and financial conditions are more favorable and who, therefore, are able to maintain a lower basis of rates. For example, the Tennessee Central Railroad runs through a sparsely settled and mountainous territory. Its costs of operation are unusually high on account of these conditions, and it has been granted relief to maintain the same rates to and from Nashville, Tenn., as the stronger line of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, although such rates are lower than the rates charged at intermediate points.

It is hard enough at best for such carriers to continue in operation at all. If fourth-section relief can be granted to enable them to meet the rates of standard lines between competitive points and maintain higher rates to and from points on their own lines, they will lose such competitive traffic as they now have, and many of them will no doubt be forced to suspend operation, with consequent great loss to towns and farming communities served by them.

The case of the Tennessee Central is not an isolated case. Others like it exist in almost every State in the Union, particularly throughout the South, as, for instance, the Georgia, Florida & Alabama, the Gulf & Ship Island, the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient, and the Missouri & North Arkansas. In all probability the two lines last named would not be in operation now if we had not been able to grant them fourth-section relief, so that they might obtain traffic to competitive points without reducing rates to and from points on their own lines. Both of these roads serve extensive agricultural regions and many important communities.

Dozens of similar instances might be cited. In many States the State authorities, recognizing the situation, have permitted such lines to charge higher intrastate rates to their local stations than to competitive points. The results to many short lines in various sections of the country will probably be disastrous if they are prohibited from applying higher rates to intermediate points than to more distant points except where their routes are circuitous.

(5) To carriers operating under disadvantage due to conditions other than circuity, as for example, where carriers forming a joint route are in competition with a carrier having a single-line haul between competitive points. In such cases there is frequently an extra expense incurred by the joint-line route in transferring traffic from one to another which is not incurred by a single-line route and the joint-line route has been granted relief on account of this condition. Thus, in Memphis-Southwestern investigation, 77 I. C. C. 473, distance rates were prescribed for general application in southern Missouri, Arkansas, and western Louisiana over single lines with differentials to be added where joint-line hauls were involved.

In many instances the rate over the single line between competitive points is less than the rate established over the joint line for its distance with a joint line differential added. In such cases the joint lines have been accorded relief to meet the rates of a single line and to maintain higher rates at intermediate points provided that such rates do not exceed rates based on the distance mileage scale plus the joint line differentials found to be reasonable.

There may also be included in this group certain differential rail and water routes in competition with all-rail routes which make rates between competitive points somewhat lower than those established by the all-rail lines.

(6) To meet emergency situations due to drought, flood, and other abnormal conditions. For example, during the summer and fall of 1922, there was a serious drought in New Mexico and other southwestern States which resulted in such a widespread destruction of the crops that livestock in that section was threatened with starvation. The carriers agreed to establish rates on food products shipped into these States on a basis generally not in excess of 50 per cent of the normal rates provided that they were not required to reduce their normal rates to intermediate points unaffected by the drought conditions. Upon application relief to establish the reduced rates under the conditions mentioned was granted for a temporary period.

Similar relief has also been granted temporarily to relieve congestion. For example, during the fall and winter of 1922–23 a serious condition of this kind existed on the lines of many of the eastern carriers and in New England, and there was delay and difficulty in handling traffic over these routes. One of the commodities especially affected by this condition was cotton, large quantities of which were on hand at some of the larger southern points. This was badly needed in New England but could not be handled by the all-rail lines without much delay and over some routes could not be handled at all. At this time there were several hundred thousand bales of cotton at Memphis, Tenn., which merchants at that point were anxious to dispose of and mills in New England to secure, but which the all-rail lines were unable to handle with any degree of certainty or regularity. Upon application of the interested carriers the necessary fourth-section relief was granted to permit movement through the port of New Orleans and thus relieve the emergency. The cotton was promptly forwarded to the New England mills.

(7) Applications are now pending before us for relief from the fourth section to permit carriers to meet port competition. Temporary relief has been granted pending the hearings and determination of such applications. The carriers operating between central freight association territory and the south Atlantic and Gulf ports now have in effect rates applicable on export traffic from central territory to the south Atlantic and Gulf ports established to equalize those in effect on like traffic from the same territory to New York. Similar rates are in effect from south Atlantic and Gulf ports to central territory applicable on import traffic. Many of these rates were established during the period of Federal control, and the carriers serving the south Atlantic and Gulf ports are asking for relief to continue them in order that the southern ports may be kept on a parity with the north Atlantic ports. The rates from the northern and eastern portions of central territory to New York are lower than the rates from points on the Ohio River to New York. The application of the New York rates from points in this territory on export traffic to southern ports therefore results in lower rates from northern and eastern points in central territory, such as Cleveland, Ohio, than from Ohio River cities, such as Cincinnati, and routes from Cleveland to southern ports are operated through Cincinnati, the higher-rated point.

Prohibition of relief to enable south Atlantic and Gulf ports to meet competition of north Atlantic ports will, no doubt, seriously hamper the former and lessen their export and import traffic. If the bill is to be enacted, we think that an additional proviso substantially to the following effect should be inserted at an appropriate place, as, for instance, on sheet 2, after the word "points," in line 21:

> "Provided further, That upon application to the commission common carriers subject to the provisions of this act may in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, for the transportation of passengers or property moving to or from a foreign country or a dependency of the United States."

Except in certain cases of emergency referred to hereafter the elimination from the existing act of the words:

> "And the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section"—

And the substitution therefor of the words—

> "only in a case where the route via the applicant rail carrier or rail carriers is longer than via the route of some other rail carrier or rail carriers between the same points"— would confine the granting of relief to one case, and one case only; that is, where the route via the applicant rail carrier or rail carriers is longer than via the route of some other rail carrier or carriers between the same points. So far as this provision goes, no relief can be granted except to rail carriers competing between the same points and then only on the ground of circuity.

Distance is but one of the transportation obstacles which must be overcome in serving the public. Relief is confined here to a consideration of distance by rail between the same points. It seems to be assumed that the applicant rail carrier or carriers will have only one route, and that some other rail carrier or rail carriers will have only another route. The applicant rail carrier or rail carriers may have several of these routes and participate in many of them under an agency tariff. Some of these routes may be longer and others shorter than some of the other routes. The provision here substituted in the bill gives us no clear guide as to how to deal with applications in case of such multiplicity of routes, except upon the basis of distances alone, and does not indicate as to whether we may grant such relief to a single carrier which has alternative routes of varying distances.

It has long been a general practice throughout the United States to establish rates on a group or zone system; that is to say, by making the same rate or rates from and to all points within a certain group or zone, which usually apply over all routes. This is the system which is now employed in publishing rates between eastern points and the Pacific coast. The territory lying generally east of the Rocky Mountains is divided into a number of large groups, and the rates from all points in each of such groups are generally the same to all points in California.

A similar plan is followed in publishing rates between points in central territory and points in trunk-line and New England territory. This method of stating rates is simple and convenient, and in some cases is of great advantage to the public at large where it is desirable to maintain the producers of the same territory on a substantial equality in marketing their products. Thus mines in coal fields covering a considerable area and served by different lines, or shipping points in a lumber or wheat producing section, also served by different lines, are accorded the same rate to a common consuming territory. This is true of large industrial centers, such as Chicago, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and others, which in many cases are grouped with the territory immediately surrounding them for rate-making purposes. Often the rates to and from points within the sweep of a long radius from these centers are the same, generally speaking, over all routes. Many of these groups can not be maintained without fourth-section relief.

This bill disregards the commercial and industrial conditions which have led to the establishment of these groups. It makes circuity or distance by rail lines the sole ground upon which relief may be granted from the absolute provisions of the fourth section, and then only upon condition that the relief shall not apply at "intermediate points as to which the haul of the petitioning line or route is not longer than that of the direct line or route between the competitive points." Under this bill it will be impossible to maintain many of these groups and at the same time preserve the equality of rates over all reasonable routes which now prevails. There can be no doubt that the general practice of extending the blanket rate to and from all points in a given group, as in the case of Chicago, has been instrumental in spreading the zone of industrial and commercial activity in these groups. It is also undoubtedly the truth that if these groups are required to be split up and rates made solely with relation to distance there will result a greater centralization of industries at points having the most favorable location. If the effect of splitting up these groups and making rates solely with relation to distance is a greater concentration of industry at points having the most favorable location, this will add to the congestion at these points, which already is a matter of serious concern.

In practice the effect of denying relief under the fourth section is often to transfer the discrimination or prejudice to the intermediate territory. For example, for years carriers have maintained lower rates from Chicago, St. Louis, and other northern points to Texas Gulf ports than to intermediate points in northern Texas and in Oklahoma and Arkansas in order to meet the competition of traffic coming by rail and water from North Atlantic States. Assume a rate of 50 cents from Chicago to Galveston when the rate to Oklahoma City is 55 cents and to Dallas 60 cents. If relief is denied, the carriers will be forced either to cease meeting the rail and water competition at Galveston or to reduce rates on the direct lines from Chicago to a basis not exceeding 50 cents. If the latter, a 50-cent rate will apply at points in Oklahoma and north Texas on direct lines from Chicago, but probably the carriers would not reduce the rates below the present basis to points not on direct lines. Dallas and Fort Worth, on the direct line, would obtain a 50-cent rate. Wichita Falls, Tex., in close proximity to both, is not on any direct line from Chicago and would continue to pay 60 cents. Similar situations are likely to exist in numerous parts of the country, with lower rates projected through territories on direct lines leading to other territories beyond, thus creating even worse prejudice and discrimination between contiguous points than would result from fourth-section departures.

As already observed, carriers by rail and water and express companies are entirely excluded from this provision. The competition encountered at destination from all-water routes, as, for example, through the Panama Canal, and market competition, which has been recognized by the Supreme Court in the cases above cited as a valid ground for relief, are also excluded.

Sheet 2, line 15: The bill omits the words "because of such circuity," which appear in the existing law before the words "granted authority," etc., manifestly for the reason that under the bill no relief could be granted except because of circuity.

Sheet 2, line 16: The bill inserts "rail" before "line" and "rail" before "route" in the words of the statute now reading "a more direct line or route." This is to accord with the restriction to rail lines already noted, as created by the bill.

Sheet 2, line 21: The bill omits the following words, which form part of the existing act:

> "and no such authorization shall be granted on account of merely potential water competition not actually in existence: And provided further, That rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of this amendatory act by virtue of orders of the commission or as to which application has theretofore been filed with the commission and not yet acted upon shall not be required to be changed by reason of the provisions of this section until the further order of or a determination by the commission."

The words so omitted were inserted by the amendment of 1920, and the provision as to merely potential water competition put in statutory form what had become the practice of the commission in dealing with the fourth section. The proviso constituting the remainder of the portion now omitted was necessary to preserve the status of adjustments which had been passed upon by the commission under preexisting law or were still protected by the original applications and was and is a necessary interim provision.

Sheet 2, line 21: In place of the words thus omitted the bill substitutes a new proviso, reading:

> "Provided further, That the commission may, with or without hearing, upon its own motion or upon application of carriers or shippers, in cases of emergency such as drought or disaster, authorize during the continuance of said emergency any common carrier or carriers to charge or receive a greater compensation for a shorter than for a longer distance."

This provision, it will be observed, embraces all common carriers, irrespective of whether they are rail carriers or not. In so far as emergencies are concerned, it adds nothing to what is already within the power of the commission, a power which has been exercised repeatedly in recent years, but the bill limits the cases of emergency to "such as drought or disaster" and leaves out cases of traffic congestion and the many and varied other kinds of emergency which may properly call for the exercise of remedial power by an administrative tribunal in the interest of producers, shippers, and consumers quite as much as in the interest of the carriers. Without pausing to develop this further, attention is next directed to another new proviso.

Sheet 3, lines 2 to 8: The bill introduces into the fourth section the following new proviso:

> "Provided further, That after six months following the passage of this amendatory act, no common carrier shall charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property, except by authority of an order of the commission entered in compliance with the provisions of this amended act."

Of this it may be said that, however construed, it is absolutely unworkable. Assuming that when this proviso says "shall charge less for longer than for shorter distances" there is meant a shorter within a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, it is manifest at a glance that after six months from the passage of this bill all relief which has been granted by us since 1910 in the thousands of situations already investigated will be rescinded, and that the departures in such situations, and in other situations protected by original applications filed pursuant to the 1910 amendment which have not yet been investigated and passed on by us, must be removed except where new orders shall be entered after hearing as provided in the bill and under the conditions thereof. Humanly speaking, it is manifest that we would not have men enough, or money enough, to hold the required public hearings within the six months. Nor could we ourselves consider and pass upon all of these situations within the six months. The result would be that every carrier in the United States, whether by rail or otherwise, must bring its rate structure into strict conformity with the fourth section at peril of incurring prosecution and the penalties provided by section 10 of the interstate commerce act. If it attempted to do this by increasing all rates to more distant points so as to clear the intermediate rates, numberless protests from shippers must be anticipated, with the inevitable result that many of the tariffs would have to be suspended by us under the provisions of section 15 of the act. This would place on our docket hundreds of suspension cases, which it would be impossible to dispose of within the 6-months' period following the passage of this act, even under the most favorable circumstances. But during the same period we must pass upon the innumerable situations where fourth-section departures now exist which, under this bill, carriers may upon application and after hearing be authorized to continue.

Our present work, moreover, demands our full time and attention. Any serious effort to dispose of the tremendous amount of extra work which would be thrust upon us by the passage of this bill could be made only by discontinuing work on complaints and other matters involving adjustments of rates now pending before us. It is manifest that the additional work placed upon us by this bill would greatly increase the expense of administering the act and call for additional appropriation, even though a longer period than six months be allowed for the removal of fourth-section departures. Again, our power to suspend rates is limited to a period of 150 days, or approximately five months, and as it would be utterly impossible for us within that period to dispose of the enormous number of suspension cases which must inevitably result from the passage of this bill, many increased rates would necessarily become effective.

Incidentally there are serious tariff difficulties and complexities to be taken into consideration. It is more than doubtful whether the carriers could make even a recheck and revision of their rates within the six months' period, to say nothing of the compilation of such rates in suitable form for printing; and a considerable time would be required to print and post and file the thousands of schedules to be reprinted after the work has progressed to the point where the printing may be commenced.

The effect of such a wholesale revision upon the business of the country would undoubtedly be disturbing and cause general unsettlement. Every industry in the country would be caught in the turmoil and the relationship of rates, so important a consideration to all producers, manufacturers, and other shippers, would be thrown into such confusion and uncertainty as to arrest the commerce of the United States, both domestic and foreign. There is nothing in the situation of any particular section of the country which could possibly warrant such profound disturbance of the commerce of this country. During the year 1923 it aggregated nearly 50,000,000 carloads.

If it still be the purpose of Congress, in considering this bill, to promote, foster, and develop the free flow of commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and to provide the people of the United States with adequate transportation, then it must be recognized that this proviso, taken by itself, and in connection with the other new provisions of the bill, is incompatible with that purpose and must defeat it.

In what precedes an interpretation has been placed on the words "no common carrier shall charge less for longer than for shorter distances" more favorable than can be accorded to the words themselves. If this bill is enacted it certainly will be contended that the principle of the Cashman Act in Minnesota has become the law of the land and that under this proviso no common carrier, of whatever type, shall charge less for a longer distance, wherever that may be, or in whatever direction, than for shorter distances, wherever they may be and in whatever direction, for the transportation of passengers or property. This would make the lowest existing charge maintained or participated in by any carrier, under any conditions, on any route or any line of rails, the maximum charge which could be made by it, or by it and its participants in any joint rates, for a corresponding distance, in any direction, at any place on that route or those rails. The only relief from that situation, after the six months shall have expired, would be by authority of an order of this commission, entered after public hearing, in compliance with and subject to the limitations of the provisions of this bill, and then only to a rail carrier or carriers having a circuitous route as compared with another rail carrier, or other rail carriers. The effect of such a provision upon commerce, industry, and agriculture would be revolutionary and in many cases disastrous to carriers, shippers, and communities.

Sheet 3, line 9: The only change here made is one already referred to, the substitution by the bill of the word "whenever" for the word "wherever" now in the act.

For the reasons above outlined we are unable to express approval of the bill.

HENRY C. HALL, Chairman.

Commissioner Campbell dissents.

Mr. McLEAN. I will say that this statement was sent to the committee before the committee made certain modifications and removed or eliminated some of the objectionable features which were contained in the original measure. I wrote to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and asked his opinion, or criticisms if he had such to offer, upon the bill as finally reported to the Senate.

I have a reply, signed by the chairman of the commission, which calls attention to the bill which is now pending, suggesting certain complications that would arise, and I shall ask to have it printed in the RECORD in order that the House committee may have an opportunity to read it when they come to consider the bill. There are appended to the communication some very interesting statistics, which are in the nature of a reply to some of the claims made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] as to the effect of the discriminations upon the growth of the intermountain section. I think they indicate very positively that the Intermountain States have grown, and grown rapidly, notwithstanding the fact that the transcontinental lines have been permitted to charge less for the longer haul than for the shorter when the rate was compensatory. I ask that these may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is that an official communication from the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; signed by the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Hall.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is the Interstate Commerce Commission authorized to give its views concerning the wisdom of legislation pending before Congress?

Mr. McLEAN. They have not hesitated to express their views to the Interstate Commerce Committee as to the effect of legislation, and I should hope the time would never come when that committee would hesitate to call upon the Interstate Commerce Commission for their views.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Who is the present chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Hall.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Connecticut is granted.

The letter and statistics are as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, April 14, 1924.

Hon. GEORGE P. McLEAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Under date of March 27 you addressed to me as chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission a letter, acknowledged March 28, requesting expression of views as to the amendment, approved March 19 by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce of which you are a member, to the original bill, S. 2327, introduced by Senator GOODING, on which we had reported to that committee on March 19. You also invited expression of views on statements contained in the committee report, No. 302, which accompanied the amended bill as reported to the Senate on March 24.

Compliance with your request has necessitated a study of this amendment by the legislative committee of this commission, and I am authorized by it to transmit the following reply, supplementing as it does the report to your committee, which was made by the commission on March 19, Commissioner Campbell dissenting. The time available has not permitted consideration of this reply by the commission, but we believe it to be consonant with the commission's view, Commissioner Campbell excepted.

On pp. 28 et seq. of our report of March 19, 1924, to Chairman Smith of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, we discussed a new proviso, which would be inserted in paragraph (1) of the fourth section by S. 2327 as introduced by Senator GOODING on February 1, 1924, reading:

> "Provided further, That after six months following the passage of this amendatory act, no common carrier shall charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property, except by authority of an order of the commission entered in compliance with the provisions of this amended act."

By amendment approved by the committee on March 19, 1924, this proviso was replaced by two new provisos, and paragraph (2) which followed the replaced proviso in the original bill was omitted, doubtless because that bill purports to amend only paragraph (1) of section 4.

For convenience in reference the text of the two provisos thus substituted by amendment for the proviso above quoted will be reproduced as they appear in the amended bill reported March 24 (calendar day, March 25), 1924, beginning on sheet 3 of that print at line 16 and ending on sheet 4 at line 12. They thus follow in direct sequence the proviso of the original bill relating to cases of emergency, such as drought or disaster, upon which we made brief comment on p. 28 of our report to the committee dated March 19. All of our report down to and including the comment last referred to still stands as the view of the commission and is applicable to the amended bill except as the two new provisos about to be considered may change the effect of that part of the bill which precedes them, and such change will be discussed in considering the two new provisos.

The first of these provisos, beginning at sheet 3, line 16, of the amended bill, reads:

> "Provided further, Where a carrier by rail now has in effect any rate, fare, or charge which is less for the longer than for the shorter distance between two points (the shorter being included within the longer distance), and which has been authorized by the commission or as to which application has been filed with the commission and not yet acted upon, it shall not be required to change such rate, fare, or charge within 12 months after the passage of this amendatory act, nor thereafter if either before the commencement of or within the said 12 months' period such rate, fare, or charge shall have been authorized by order of the commission, after hearing, and entered in compliance with the provision of this act as hereby amended, and such order shall not be temporary in character for the purpose of allowing such carrier by rail to meet the competition of another carrier by rail whose route is shorter between said points."

By the amendment this proviso becomes the third which qualifies the opening prohibition of section 4 in the existing law, as well as in the original and amended bills. The first in both bills provides for cases of circuity as between rail lines, excluding other carriers subject to the act and to the prohibition; the second in both bills provides for temporary relief in such cases of emergency as are there designated, "with or without hearing," and embraces "any common carrier or carriers," whether by rail or not.

The new proviso, which becomes the third in sequence, deals only with carriers by rail, and consequently leaves unaffected carriers "engaged in transportation partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment," to quote from paragraph (1) (a) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act. Such rail and water carriers are now protected in some instances by original applications made prior to February 17, 1911, not yet fully disposed of, and in other instances by outstanding orders, temporary or final, of this commission. The bill does not continue the protection, either under original applications or under our orders, now afforded by the proviso in the existing act, omitted at sheet 2, line 21, of the Gooding bill as it was before amendment, and referred to on page 27 of our report as being a "necessary interim provision" of the existing law. The state of such rail and water carriers is thus left in uncertainty, to say the least. The new proviso provides that where a carrier by rail now has in effect (lines 16–17) any rate, fare, or charge which is less for the longer than for the shorter included distance between two points, and which has been authorized by the commission, or as to which—> "application has been filed with the commission and not yet acted upon, it shall not be required to change such rate, fare, or charge within 12 months after the passage of this amendatory act," (lines 20–24).

Under existing law applications filed with the commission since February 17, 1911, do not protect any departure from the fourth section. Under this amendment they would do so for 12 months after passage of the bill, a result which is probably not intended. Moreover, the effect of this amendment would seem to be that no rail carrier can be required by us, or by any other tribunal, to change any rate, fare, or charge "now in effect and covered by such application or order," whether attacked for unreasonableness, unjust discrimination, undue prejudice, fourth-section departure, or any other violation of the act, in proceedings already decided, now pending or hereafter brought, until the 12 months shall have expired. This result also can hardly have been intended. But assuming, if we may, that a legislative intent can be deduced to confine this exemption from required change to rates, etc., as affected by the fourth section, the result will still be to arrest and hold in abeyance all action by us in pending or future fourth-section applications, or in proceedings on complaint where fourth-section departures are attacked by complainants as unlawful, unless such action would be to sanction the rates now in existence. Put in another way, we could grant relief, but we could not deny it if that denial involved change in existing rates.

The new proviso then proceeds—

> "nor thereafter if either before the commencement of or within the said 12 months' period such rate, fare, or charge shall have been authorized by order of the commission, after hearing, and entered in compliance with the provision of this act as hereby amended, and such order shall not be temporary in character." (Sheet 3, line 24, to sheet 4, line 4.)

This reference to "such rate, fare, or charge, is to the rate, fare, or charge "now" in effect. Under this provision the rate now in effect can not be changed by us at any time after the 12 months if before or during the 12 months such existing rate shall have been authorized by our order. That rate would thus become immutable so far as we are concerned and beyond our power to change with changing conditions.

This order must have been made "after hearing." We have discussed in our report the practical objections to that requirement and the sufficiency of the existing statutory requirement that we act "after investigation." This order must have been entered in compliance with the act as amended by this amended bill. Orders entered prior to passage of that bill could hardly satisfy this requirement, and yet the provision last above quoted contemplates orders entered prior to such passage. Furthermore, the order must not have been temporary in character. The propriety of temporary relief was touched upon in pages 7 and 8 of our report of March 19 to the committee.

The new proviso then qualifies the provisions last above quoted by adding:

"for the purpose of allowing such carrier by rail to meet the competition of another carrier by rail whose route is shorter between said points."

This reiterates the limitations that relief shall only be accorded to rail carriers and further limits that relief to cases where competition is encountered from another rail carrier whose route is shorter. It excludes from consideration the compelling force, recognized by the Supreme Court, of other forms of composition. It further assumes that the other rail carrier will have only one route. That carrier may have several routs and may participate in hundreds, some longer and some shorter than one or more routes of the applicent rail carrier, or the many routes in which the applicant participates. Such a statutory limitation imposes use of a criterion which, in practical application, would in many cases be found more perplexing than helpful.

It will be observed from this analysis of the first new proviso that nothing in it calls for modification of what was said in our report to the Senate committee except, beginning on page 28, as to the proviso in the original bill which is in part replaced by this first new proviso.

The second of the new provisos, beginning at sheet 4, line 7, of the amended bill reads:

"And provided further, That nothing in this section contained shall prevent the commission from authorizing or approving departures from the provisions of this section in so far as applicable to import or export rates or to a block system of express rates established by order or with the approval of the commission, or permitted by it to be filed."

The words "nothing in this section" will embrace the two paragraphs which compose it, viz, paragraph (1), here under amendment, and paragraph (2), left unchanged by this bill. They include the prohibitions as well as the requirements contained in both paragraphs. The effect of this second new proviso will be to cure the exclusion of express rates by the original bill, commented upon at pages 4 and 5 of our report of March 19, 1924. It will also provide for such situations as those discussed on pages 21 and 22 of our report with reference to export rates, maintained for the purpose of equalizing ports. It does not cover rates to or from possessions or dependencies beyond seas of the United States. That traffic is important but does not ordinarily come within the definition of foreign commerce. No reason appears why such traffic should not fare as well as export or import traffic with foreign countries. No mention is made in this second new proviso of fares for the transportation of passengers, which remain covered by the prohibitions and requirements of the section, or of charges, such as demurrange, storage, and other, incident to the movement of export and import traffic, which seemingly also remain covered by the other provisions of the section.

With these exceptions, the matters laid before the Senate committee in our report appear to be still pertinent and appropriate for consideration.

Passing from this somewhat detailed analysis of the amendment made on March 19, some observations more general in character may next merit your attention.

The number of published rates now in existence will never be known. They almost surpass computation and would certainly not repay it. They cover almost without exception the movement of every article from any station to any other station on the railroad system of the United States. The system embraces some 250,000 miles of road, and the number of railroad stations named or designated in the tariffs may range anywhere from 50,000 to 100,000. The latter figure was recently mentioned in argument before us. It follows that the number of railroad rates available for use by the shipping public must run into the billions. No one will ever count them. But if only one in a thousand presents some fourth-section departure, the number of such rates would necessarily run into the millions. These exceptional rates are in use all over the United States, probably on some line or lines of every important carrier. Many of them are used on important and extensive traffic and are in effect under the statutory relief afforded by applications filed prior to February 17, 1911, or by order made by this commission. Under the wording of the first new proviso substituted by the amendment of March 19, 1924, apparently the commission will not only be prevented for a year from requiring the removal of any such fourth-section departures but will also be prevented from requiring reductions in any of such rates, from dealing with their reasonableness or unreasonableness, and from removing any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage in any respect whatsoever, which may exist with respect to any of such rates. There are no doubt now pending before us a number of formal proceedings involving many such rates which can not, under the amendment, be disposed of for a year, thus depriving complainants of the relief to which they may be entitled under the provisions of the act. The 12-month period now substituted for the 6-month period in the original bill is not open to all the criticism of the latter in our report, but still affords inadequate time, under any construction, for the many important adjustments which would become necessary if the amended bill should be enacted.

You also invite an expression of views with regard to statements contained in the committee report (No. 302) as to the hardships suffered under existing law and the attendant arguments in favor of the proposed change.

Our report of March 19 to the committee is so wholly at variance with the committee report to the Senate that analysis in detail of the latter would seem unprofitable if indeed it be appropriate under the circumstances. To what extent the committee report reflects the whole record made at the hearings before it can better be determined by the members of that committee. It portrays a situation of hardship and oppression in the interior of the South and West which, in the judgment of the commission, does not exist.

Two fundamentals seem to have been overlooked in that report.

1. At least 85 to 90 per cent of all relief granted by the commission and still in force covers solely the meeting by circuitous lines or routes of the competition of direct lines or routes. If the indirect routes are not so circuitous as to result in wasteful transportation, no shipper, community, or section of the country is adversely affected to any material extent by relief granted on account of circuity. Certainly no undue prejudice or undue preference as between shippers results from such relief, and certainly the growth or development of no community or section of the country has been appreciably affected by such relief. That this is so is evidenced by the fact that for many years shippers have had the right to file formal complaints with the commission seeking correction of their grievances against carriers, and I know of no single one of the more than 15,000 complaints filed which attacked rates solely or primarily upon the ground that fourth-section relief on account of circuity existed with respect to such rates, whether that relief had been granted by the commission or by the statute itself.

2. The only form of relief which in all fairness could be said to affect the growth or development of communities or sections of the country is relief over the direct or "rate-making" lines. Practically only two forms of such relief exist, (a) to meet water competition, and (b) to meet the competition of carriers leading to or from other markets or sources of supply. Little relief of either kind, particularly the latter, has been granted since 1920, but, as explained in our report of March 19, in some instances seriously detrimental effects upon certain carriers will undoubtedly result if relief can not under any circumstances be granted on these grounds. Such detriment to the carriers will in most instances be reflected in detriment to the communities and shippers served by those carriers. If the railroads are not prosperous their condition is apt to be reflected in the territory served by them.

I may be pardoned if I refer to one sweeping affirmative statement in the committee report. This reads:

"The West and South are treated differently than the East in the matter of fourth-section applications; in the East no fourth-section relief is granted on account of water competition, notwithstanding in the East there are great waterways and intense water competition. In the West there are practically no inland waterways and the railroads of the West always have been permitted to charge more for the short than for the long haul to meet water competition."

It is true that practically no fourth-section relief to meet water competition is now extant in the eastern territory, but this is because of two important factors, (1) the volume of traffic is so much greater there than in the West or South that it is not a matter of so much moment to rail carriers whether water lines deflect traffic from them, (2) the level of the rail rates, because of greater density of traffic and consequent lower operating expense per unit of traffic, is lower in the East than in the West or South, particularly the West, and there is little necessity for reducing the standard rail rates to meet the competition of water carriers. In other words, the rail carriers obtain without relief a fair share of the traffic as against the water carriers, and accordingly little or no such relief is in force. It should further be said that, with respect to fourth-section relief on account of water competition, the commission has not pursued a different policy in the East from that which it has followed in other sections of the country.

There is in fact little relief on account of water competition in the West. The only important instances are between ports on the Pacific coast, as between Portland and San Francisco, or between northern points on the one hand and the Gulf coast country on the other, to meet the competition of water lines from the Atlantic seaboard or from foreign countries. Since the early part of 1918, or during a period of about six years, there has been absolutely no water-competition relief or any relief other than that based on circuity as described above and similar to that prevalent throughout the country, including the East, on westbound traffic which involves the intermountain country. There is practically no relief on eastbound transcontinental traffic through the intermountain country. Wool is the only important commodity on which such relief exists, and the existence of that relief at this time is directly due to the suspension, at the request of the intermountain people themselves, of tariffs which the carriers filed when we denied relief and which would have corrected the existing departures.

Throughout the committee's report in this matter there is frequent reference to the "interior" as a territory against which unjust discrimination and undue prejudice have been created by the manner in which we have administered the fourth section. This term in its broadest meaning would apply to all of the interior of the United States, but it probably refers to the territory intermediate to the Pacific coast, or the so-called intermountain territory, and the interior of the South. I have already called attention to the fact that for the past six years there has been practically no fourth-section relief to and from the intermountain territory except to circuitous lines in order to enable them to meet the rates on direct lines, and whatever conditions may exist at present in that region can not be said to be due to fourth-section relief.

In the South there are important situations where all of the rates have not yet been adjusted so as to conform to the provisions of the fourth section. These are being corrected as rapidly as possible. The commission has for a number of months past been actively investigating the entire class-rate structure in the South with a view to a general revision which will remove all existing fourth-section departures therein except upon the ground of circuity and will dispose of all pending applications in so far as they involve class rates, the class-rate readjustment to be followed as promptly as possible by a similar readjustment of all commodity rates, thus disposing of all applications in the South.

It has not come to our attention that any portion of the population of any particular community has been constrained to migrate to other sections where lower freight rates prevail because of fourth-section relief either granted or existing by reason of applications not passed upon. On the contrary, as is well known, there has been a steady movement of the population from the rural sections and towns to the larger cities for a number of years past. This phenomena, nation-wide, has probably been as marked in the East and Middle West, where there are comparatively few fourth-section departures, as in the South and far West. What, if any, part fourth-section relief has played in this general tendency toward centralization of population in larger cities is problematical, to say the least. I am unable to perceive that it has been a factor to any appreciable extent. I attach two tables, marked "Appendix A" and "Appendix B," showing growth in population of representative cities in the intermountain States beginning with 1890 and growth in value of manufactured products for five-year periods beginning with 1889. The statistics are taken from reports of the United States Bureau of the Census and need no comment.

For the reasons above outlined, supplementing those set forth in our report to the committee, we are unable to express approval of the bill as amended.

H. C. HALL, Chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. For the purpose of having the bill conform to the amendment that was disposed of on Saturday, I offer the following amendments: On page 2, line 5, after the word "carrier," I move to strike out the words "by rail"; in line 9, after the word "applicant," to strike out the word "rail," and after the word "or" strike out the word "rail"; and in line 10, after the word "some," strike out the word "other."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 5, after the word "carrier," strike out the words "by rail"; in line 9, after the word "applicant," strike out the word "rail"; in line 9, before the word "carriers," strike out the word "rail"; and in line 10, after the word "some," strike out the word "other," so as to read:

That upon application of the commission a common carrier may, after public hearing, be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property only in a case where the route via the applicant carrier or carriers is longer than via the route of some rail carrier or rail carriers between the same points, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McLEAN. I think the Senator ought to explain briefly the purpose of the amendments. I do not know that it will make any difference in the vote, but sometimes it is advisable when we are amending the transportation act to know what the author of the amendment considers will be the effect.

Mr. PITTMAN. The proposition is simply this: The act itself defines what is a common carrier under the act. A common carrier under the act is a rail carrier or a joint rail-and-water carrier under the same management or control, or acting together with joint rates. The term "common carrier" covers the definition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments submitted by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing before the Senate except reporting the bill from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. I shall wait until the bill is passed, and then shall ask the Chair to recognize me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be proposed to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BRUCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Edge	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell
Ashurst	Edwards	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.
Ball	Elkins	Keyes	Robinson
Bayard	Ernst	King	Sheppard

Dill	Jones, N. Mex.	Ralston

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is, Shall the bill pass? On that question, the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the roll was called.

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, I withhold my vote. If allowed to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS. My colleague [Mr. FESS] is unavoidably absent on this roll call. I am informed, however, that if he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. ELKINS. I have a pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], and vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I wish to get the floor at the conclusion of this business. I have already voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The result has not as yet been announced.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WHEELER] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—54

So the bill was passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. EDGE, Mr. WARREN, Mr. KING, and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

Mr. KING. I had the floor a moment ago, Mr. President, as I understood.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I think the Presiding Officer recognized the Senator from New Jersey. I so understood.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. I claim the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LODGE. There is a unanimous-consent agreement to go into executive session to-day, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a unanimous-consent agreement to hold an executive session before the day is over.

Mr. LODGE. I thought it was for 4 o'clock.

Mr. KING. I think it was.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the hour was fixed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour was not fixed in the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if I may——

Mr. LODGE. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I move, as an amendment to that motion, that the Senate now proceed to the consideration——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can not offer an amendment to that motion. In the first place, it is a privileged motion.

Mr. EDGE. I will withhold my motion, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 50 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

EXTRADITION WITH LITHUANIA

In executive session this day, the following treaty was ratified, and on motion of Mr. LODGE the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate of the United States:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty for the extradition of fugitives from justice, signed between the United States and Lithuania at Kovno on April 9, 1924.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 7, 1924.

THE PRESIDENT:

The undersigned the Secretary of State has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, a treaty for the extradition of fugitives from justice, signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Lithuania, at Kovno, on April 9, 1924.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 5, 1924.

The United States of America and Lithuania, desiring to promote the cause of justice, have resolved to conclude a treaty for the extradition of fugitives from justice between the two countries and have appointed for that purpose the following plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:

Frederick W. B. Coleman, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America;

The President of the Republic of Lithuania:

Ernestas Galvanauskas, Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE I

It is agreed that the Government of the United States and the Government of Lithuania shall, upon requisition duly made as herein provided, deliver up to justice any person, who may be charged with, or may have been convicted of, any of the crimes specified in Article II of the present treaty committed within the jurisdiction of one of the high contracting parties, and who shall seek an asylum or shall be found within the territories of the other; provided that such surrender shall take place only upon such evidence of criminalty, as according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had been there committed.

ARTICLE II

Persons shall be delivered up according to the provisions of the present trenty, who shall have been charged with or convicted of any of the following crimes:

1. Murder, comprehending the crimes designated by the terms parricide, assassination, manslaughter when voluntary, poisoning, or infanticide.

2. The attempt to commit murder.

3. Rape, abortion, carnal knowledge of children under the age of 12 years.

4. Abduction or detention of women or girls for immoral purposes.

5. Bigamy.

6. Arson.

7. Willful and unlawful destruction or obstruction of railroads, which endangers human life.

8. Crimes committed at sea:

(a) Piracy, as commonly known and defined by the law of nations, or by statute;

(b) Wrongfully sinking or destroying a vessel at sea or attempting to do so;

(c) Mutiny or conspiracy by two or more members of the crew or other persons on board of a vessel on the high seas, for the purpose of rebelling against the authority of the captain or commander of such vessel, or by fraud or violence taking possession of such vessel;

(d) Assault on board ship upon the high seas with intent to do bodily harm.

9. Burglary, defined to be the act of breaking into and entering the house of another in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony therein.

10. The act of breaking into and entering the offices of the Government and public authorities, or the offices of banks, banking houses, savings banks, trust companies, insurance and other companies, or other buildings not dwellings with intent to commit a felony therein.

11. Robbery, defined to be the act of feloniously and forcibly taking from the person of another goods or money by violence or by putting him in fear.

12. Forgery or the utterance of forged papers.

13. The forgery or falsification of the official acts of the Government or public authority, including courts of justice, or the uttering or fraudulent use of any of the same.

14. The fabrication of counterfeit money, whether coin or paper, counterfeit titles or coupons of public debt, created by national, State, provincial, territorial, local, or municipal governments, bank notes or other instruments of public credit, counterfeit seals, stamps, dies, and marks of State or public administrations, and the utterance, circulation, or fraudulent use of the above-mentioned objects.

15. Embezzlement or criminal malversation committed within the jurisdiction of one or the other party by public officers or depositaries where the amount embezzled exceeds $200 or Lithuanian equivalent.

16. Embezzlement by any person or persons hired, salaried, or employed, to the detriment of their employers or principals, when the crime or offense is punishable by imprisonment or other corporal punishment by the laws of both countries, and where the amount embezzled exceeds $200 or Lithuanian equivalent.

17. Kidnaping of minors or adults, defined to be the abduction or detention of a person or persons, in order to exact money from them, their families, or nay other person or persons, or for any other unlawful end.

18. Larceny, defined to be the theft of effects, personal property, or money, of the value of $25 or more, or Lithuanian equivalent.

19. Obtaining money, valuable securities, or other property by false pretenses or receiving any money, valuable securities, or other property knowing the same to have been unlawfully obtained where the amount of money or the value of the property so obtained or received exceeds $200 or Lithuanian equivalent.

20. Perjury or subornation of perjury.

21. Fraud or breach of trust by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, executor, administrator, guardian, director, or officer of any company or corporation, or by anyone in any fiduciary position where the amount of money or the value of the property misappropriated exceeds $200 or Lithuanian equivalent.

22. Crimes and offenses against the laws of both countries for the suppression of slavery and slave trading.

23. Willful desertion or willful nonsupport of minor or dependent children.

24. Extradition shall also take place for participation in any of the crimes before mentioned as an accessory before or after the fact, provided such participation be punishable by imprisonment by the laws of both the high contracting parties.

ARTICLE III

The provision of the present treaty shall not import a claim of extradition for any crime or offense of a political character, nor for acts connected with such crimes or offenses; and no person surrendered by or to either of the high contracting parties in virtue of this treaty shall be tried or punished for a political crime or offense. When the offense charged comprises the act either of murder or assassination or of poisoning, either consummated or attempted, the fact that the offense was committed or attempted against the life of any sovereign or head of a foreign state or against the life of any member of his family shall not be deemed sufficient to sustain that such crime or offense was of a political character, or was an act connected with crimes or offenses of a political character.

ARTICLE IV

No person shall be tried for any crime or offense other than that for which he was surrendered.

ARTICLE V

A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered under the provisions hereof when from lapse of time or other lawful cause, according to the laws of the place within the jurisdiction of which the crime was committed, the criminal is exempt from prosecution or punishment for the offense for which the surrender is asked.

ARTICLE VI

If a fugitive criminal whose surrender may be claimed pursuant to the stipulations hereof be actually under prosecution, out on bail, or in custody for a crime or offense committed in the country where he has sought asylum, or shall have been convicted thereof, his extradition may be deferred until such proceedings be determined and until he shall have been set at liberty in due course of law.

ARTICLE VII

If a fugitive criminal claimed by one of the parties hereto shall be also claimed by one or more powers pursuant to treaty provisions on account of crimes committed within their jurisdiction, such criminal shall be delivered to that State whose demand is first received.

ARTICLE VIII

Under the stipulations of this treaty neither of the high contracting parties shall be bound to deliver up its own citizens.

ARTICLE IX

The expense of arrest, detention, examination, and transportation of the accused shall be paid by the government which has preferred the demand for extradition.

ARTICLE X

Everything found in the possession of the fugitive criminal at the time of his arrest, whether being the proceeds of the crime or offense, or which may be material as evidence in making proof of the crime, shall so far as practicable, according to the laws of either of the high contracting parties, be delivered up with his person at the time of surrender. Nevertheless, the rights of a third party with regard to the articles referred to shall be duly respected.

ARTICLE XI

The stipulations of the present treaty shall be applicable to all territory wherever situated, belonging to either of the high contracting parties or in the occupancy and under the control of either of them, during such occupancy or control.

Requisitions for the surrender of fugitives from justice shall be made by the respective diplomatic agents of the high contracting parties. In the event of the absence of such agents from the country or its seat of government, or where extradition is sought from territory included in the preceding paragraphs, other than the United States or Lithuania, requisitions may be made by superior consular officers. It shall be competent for such diplomatic or superior consular officers to ask and obtain a mandate or preliminary warrant of arrest for the person whose surrender is sought, whereupon the judges and magistrates of the two governments shall respectively have power and authority, upon complaint made under oath or in any other judicially prescribed form, to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the person charged, in order that he or she may be brought before such judge or magistrate, that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered, and if on such hearing the evidence be deemed sufficient to sustain the charge, it shall be the duty of the examining judge or magistrate to certify it to the proper executive authority, that a warrant may issue for the surrender of the fugitive.

In case of urgency, the application for arrest and detention may be addressed directly to the competent magistrate in conformity to the statutes in force.

The person provisionally arrested shall be released, unless within two months from the date of arrest in Lithuania, or from the date of commitment in the United States, the formal requisition for surrender with the documentary proofs hereinafter prescribed may be made as aforesaid by the diplomatic agent of the demanding government or, in his absence, by a consulate officer thereof.

If the fugitive criminal shall have been convicted of the crime for which his surrender is asked, a copy of the sentences of the court before which such conviction took place, duly authenticated, shall be produced. If, however, the fugitive is merely charged with crime, a duly authenticated copy of the warrant of arrest in the country where the crime was committed, and of the depositions upon which such warrant may have been issued, shall be produced, with such other evidence or proof as may be deemed competent in the case. In either case a duly authenticated text of the law under which the charge is made shall be attached.

ARTICLE XII

In every case of a request made by either of the high contracting parties for the arrest, detention, or extradition of fugitive criminals, the appropriate legal officers of the country where the proceedings of extradition are had shall assist the officers of the government demanding the extradition before the respective judges and magistrates by every legal means within their power, and no claim whatever for compensation for any of the services so rendered shall be made against the government demanding the extradition: Provided, however, That any officer or officers of the surrendering government so giving assistance who shall, in the usual course of their duty, receive no salary or compensation other than specific fees for services performed, shall be entitled to receive from the government demanding the extradition the customary fees for the acts or services performed by them, in the same manner and to the same amount as though such acts or services had been performed in ordinary criminal proceedings under the laws of the country of which they are officers.

ARTICLE XIII

The present treaty shall be ratified by the high contracting parties in accordance with their respective constitutional methods and shall take effect on the date of the exchange of ratifications, which shall take place at Kaunas as soon as possible.

ARTICLE XIV

The present treaty shall remain in force for a period of 10 years, and in case neither of the high contracting parties shall have given notice one year before the expiration of that period of its intention to terminate the treaty, it shall continue in force until the expiration of one year from the date on which such notice of termination shall be given by either of the high contracting parties.

In witness whereof the above-named plenipotentiaries have signed the present treaty and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate at Kaunas this 9th day of April, 1924.

TRAVELING SALESMEN IN COSTA RICA

In executive session this day, the following convention was ratified, and on motion of Mr. LODGE the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a convention to facilitate the work of traveling salesmen, and a protocol supplementary thereto, both signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Costa Rica at San Jose on March 31, 1924.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 14, 1924.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned the Secretary of State has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to their transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a convention to facilitate the work of traveling salesmen, signed between the United States and Costa Rica at San Jose on March 31, 1924, and a supplementary protocol, signed on the same day.

Respectfully submitted.

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 14, 1924.

CONVENTION CONCERNING COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS

The United States of America and the Republic of Costa Rica, being desirous to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen, have agreed to conclude a convention for that purpose and have to that end appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Mr. Roy T. Davis, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States in Costa Rica, and the President of Costa Rica, Prof. don Miguel Obregon Lizano, Minister of Public Education, in charge of the Portfolio of Foreign Relations of Costa Rica, who, having communicated to each other their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

Manufacturers, merchants, and traders domiciled within the jurisdiction of one of the high contracting parties may operate as commercial travelers either personally or by means of agents or employees within the jurisdiction of the other high contracting party on obtaining from the latter, upon payment of a single fee, a license which shall be valid throughout its entire territorial jurisdiction.

In case either of the high contracting parties shall be engaged in war, it reserves to itself the right to prevent from operating within its jurisdiction under the provisions of this convention, or otherwise, enemy nationals or other aliens whose presence it may consider prejudicial to public order and national safety.

ARTICLE II

In order to secure the license above mentioned the applicant must obtain from the country of domicile of the manufacturers, merchants, and traders represented a certificate attesting his character as a commercial traveler. This certificate, which shall be issued by the authority to be designated in each country for the purpose, shall be visèed by the consul of the country in which the applicant proposes to operate, and the authorities of the latter shall, upon the presentation of such certificate, issue to the applicant the national license as provided in Article I.

ARTICLE III

A commercial traveler may sell his samples without obtaining a special license as an importer.

ARTICLE IV

Samples without commercial value shall be admitted to entry free of duty.

Samples marked, stamped, or defaced in such manner that they can not be put to other uses shall be considered as objects without commercial value.

ARTICLE V

Samples having commercial value shall be provisionally admitted upon giving bond for the payment of lawful duties if they shall not have been withdrawn from the country within a period of six (6) months.

Duties shall be paid on such portion of the samples as shall not have been so withdrawn.

ARTICLE VI

All customs formalities shall be simplified as much as possible with a view to avoid delay in the dispatch of samples.

ARTICLE VII

Peddlers and other salesmen who vend directly to the consumer, even though they have not an established place of business in the country in which they operate, shall not be considered as commercial travelers, but shall be subject to the license fees levied on business of the kind which they carry on.

ARTICLE VIII

No license shall be required of:

(a) Persons traveling only to study trade and its needs, even though they initiate commercial relations, provided they do not make sales of merchandise.

(b) Persons operating through local agencies which pay the license fee or other imposts to which their business is subject.

(c) Travelers who are exclusively buyers.

ARTICLE IX

Any concessions affecting any of the provisions of the present convention that may hereafter be granted by either high contracting party, either by law or by treaty or convention, shall immediately be extended to the other party.

ARTICLE X

This convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington or San José within two years, or sooner if possible.

The present convention shall remain in force until the end of six months after either of the high contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, each of them reserving to itself the right of giving such notice to the other at any time. And it is hereby agreed between the parties that, on the expiration of six months after such notice shall have been received by either of them from the other party as above mentioned, this convention shall altogether cease and terminate.

It testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these articles and have thereunder affixed their seals.

PROTOCOL

For the better fulfillment of the provisions of the convention concerning commercial travelers, signed to-day, the undersigned, Mr. Roy T. Davis, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America, and Prof. don Miguel Obregon Lizano, Minister of Public Education, in charge of the Portfolio of Foreign Relations of Costa Rica, representing their respective countries, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

Regulations governing the renewal and transfer of licenses and the imposition of fines and other penalties for any misuse of licenses may be made by either of the high contracting parties whenever advisable within the terms of the present convention and without prejudice to the rights defined therein.

If such regulations should permit the renewal of licenses the corresponding fee will not be greater than that charged for the original license.

If such regulations should permit the transfer of licenses upon satisfactory proof that transferee or assignee is in every sense the true successor of the original licensee and can furnish a certificate of identification similar to that furnished by the said original licensee, he will be allowed to operate as a commercial traveler pending the arrival of the new certificate of identification, but the cancellation of the bond for the samples shall not be effected before the arrival of the said certificate.

ARTICLE II

It is the citizenship of the firm that the commercial traveler represents, and not his own, that governs the issuance to him of a certificate of identification.

In order to obtain practical results the high contracting parties agree to empower the local customs officials to issue the said licenses upon surrender of the certificate of identification and authenticated list of samples, acting as deputies of the central office constituted for the issuance and regulation of licenses. The said customs officials shall immediately transmit the appropriate documentation to the said central office, to which the licensee shall thereafter give due notice of his intention to ask for the renewal or transfer of his license, if these acts be allowable, or cancellation of his bond, upon his departure from the country. Due notice in this connection will be regarded as the time required for the exchange of correspondence in the normal mail schedule, plus five business days for purposes of official verification and registration.

ARTICLE III

It is understood that the traveler will not engage in the sale of other articles than those embraced by his lines of business; that is to say, he may sell his samples, thus incurring an obligation to pay the customs duties thereupon, but he may not sell other articles brought with him or sent to him, which are not reasonably and clearly representative of the kind of business he purports to represent.

ARTICLE IV

Advertising matter brought by commercial travelers in appropriate quantities shall be treated as samples without commercial value. Objects having a depreciated commercial value because of adaptation for purposes of advertisement, and intended for gratuitous distribution, shall, when introduced in reasonable quantities, also be treated as samples without commercial value. It is understood, however, that this prescription shall be subject to the customs laws of the respective countries.

ARTICLE V

If the original license were issued for a period longer than six months, or if the license be renewed, the bond for the samples will be correspondingly extended. It is understood, however, that this prescription shall be subject to the customs laws of the respective countries.

ARTICLE VI

Samples accompanying the commercial traveler will be dispatched as a portion of his personal baggage; and those arriving after him will be given precedence over ordinary freight.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed this protocol and have affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate, in English and Spanish, at San José, Costa Rica, this 31st day of March, 1924.

REJECTION

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate May 19, 1924

POSTMASTER

William C. Harbach to be postmaster at Des Moines, Iowa.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, May 19, 1924

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Give us a grateful and happy sense of all our blessings and help us to look on the bright side of all situations. May we remember all Thy benefits by yielding our hearts to Thee. In all our ways help us to acknowledge Thee and to be deeply conscious of the truth that unto the upright there ariseth a light in the darkness, and the path of the just is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHREVE. Mr Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill H. R. 8350 for printing under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania presents a conference report on the bill H. R. 8350, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report to accompany H. R. 8350, a bill making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rules.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Welch, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments the bill (H. R. 8905) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Hungary to the United States of America.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

S. 3272. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Panola-Quitman drainage district to construct, maintain, and operate a dam in Tallahatchie River.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2922) to authorize the President to reconsider the case of Frederic K. Long and to reappoint him a captain in the Regular Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 5325. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6355. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue certificates of citizenship to Indians;

H. R. 5855. An act to fix the salaries of officers and members of the Metropolitan police force and the fire department of the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 3104. An act granting 160 acres of land to the Western State College of Colorado at Gunnison, Colo., for the use of the Rocky Mountain biological station of said college.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1765) for the relief of the heirs of Agnes Ingels, deceased; had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. CARAWAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 365) for the relief of Ellen B. Walker; had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. TRAMMELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], who presided over the Committee of the Whole two weeks ago, requests leave of absence on account of illness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARBITRATION OF RAILROAD DISPUTES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 7358.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky suspend a moment so the gentleman from South Dakota may state his parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I assume that this morning a motion would be made to go into Committee of the Whole on the Howell-Barkley bill. If that motion should be voted down, would it be in order to-day to move to suspend the rules to bring up S. 2255 or H. R. 8869, a bill providing legislation for disabled ex-service men?

The SPEAKER. That raises a question which the House may be called upon some day to decide and perhaps the Chair had better state his views.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the views should be heard by a larger membership than is present, and therefore I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, would a roll call revert on my motion which has been made to go into the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. No; it would not. It is clear there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll; when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Drane	Luce	Sites
Bacharach	Dyer	Madden	Stengle
Beck	Fish	Moore, Ill.	Sullivan
Boies	Fleetwood	Morin	Ward, N. Y.
Buckley	Garber	Mudd	Ward, N. C.
Burdick	Howard, Okla.	O'Brien	Wason
Cable	Hudson	Park, Ga.	Weller
Clark, Fla.	Hull, Tenn.	Peavey	White, Me.
Collins	Kahn	Perlman	Williams, Tex.
Cramton	Langley	Quayle	Wilson, Miss.
Curry	Larson, Minn.	Reed, W. Va.	Winter
Deal	Leavitt	Rogers, N. H.	Zihlman.
Doyle	Little	Sanders, Ind.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and eighty-two Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The doors were reopened.

The SPEAKER. When the point of no quorum was made the Chair was answering a parliamentary inquiry which was made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], to know whether, if the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Barkley bill was voted down, it would be in order for him to move to suspend the rules and pass the disabled veterans' bill.

This may not be important at present, but it raises a question in the construction of this rule which may some day be important, and the Chair will state just how it lies in his mind.

The rule provides that when a bill is brought up the first day, if the question of consideration is voted down—and the Chair stated two weeks ago he thought that the question of consideration in a bill on the Union Calendar like this could be raised by moving to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—if that was voted down the rule provides that the bill goes onto the ordinary calendar; but if it is not voted down it becomes a privileged question. The Chair is inclined to think now, subject to suggestions by Members, and, of course, subject always to the decision of the House, that after the day when a bill first comes up, if the House has decided to consider it, after that when it is called up, either as at present to go into the Committee of the Whole or if the question of consideration should be raised in the case of a bill that was not on the Union Calendar, the Chair is disposed to think if that motion should be voted down that the bill would not lose its privilege; that it has attained its privilege the first day by consideration being given, and that instead of going to the calendar it would still be privileged business on the days provided in the rule—the first and third Mondays; and reverting to the exact question to-day, if the motion to go into committee should be voted down, then this bill would be in order again two weeks from to-day, just as it is to-day, and would not lose its privilege and go to the calendar, and therefore the Chair will answer the question in the affirmative.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Chair is not passing definitely on that?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. I gather from the Chair's remarks that, if a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to-day is voted down, that disposes of the matter for this day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think so, and that the suspension of the rules and Consent Calendar would then come up.

Mr. BARKLEY. The provision in the rules with relation to the exception of the last six days would exempt it from consideration two weeks from to-day, if in the meantime adjournment had been decided on for June 7.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say offhand, no; that it would be privileged two weeks from to-day. The Chair had not thought of adjournment.

Mr. BARKLEY. The rule excepts the last six days of the session.

The SPEAKER. The last six days of the session are never determined on in the long session until near the close of the session. We never know when the last six days are until the concurrent resolution is passed providing for the adjournment. Unless that has been passed before two weeks from to-day, the Chair thinks it would still be privileged.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not care to enter into an argument with the Chair on that now, but I reserve all rights when that question is raised.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Then I understand that, if the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Barkley bill is voted down, it will be in order for me to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill with reference to the disabled veterans' legislation.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would not be any more in order for that bill than it would for any other Member of the House to make a motion with reference to some other bill.

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I now prefer a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that the privileged business before the House, which is in order, the Barkley bill, be postponed temporarily so that I may ask to be recognized to suspend the rules and pass the disabled veterans' legislation.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from South Dakota has brought the disabled soldiers before us every day, and it is clearly for the purpose of filibustering, and I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. They should be ahead of you.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7358.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky renews his motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7358.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARKLEY) there were 188 ayes and 146 noes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 180, answered "present" 4, not voting 46, as follows:

Mr. Doyle (for) with Mr. Bacharach (against).
Mr. Fish (for) with Mr. Winter (against).
Mr. Sabath (for) with Mr. Ward of New York (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Dyer with Mr. Weller.
Mr. Anderson with Mr. Buckley.
Mr. White of Maine with Mr. Collins.
Mr. Larson of Minnesota with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Morin with Mr. Mansfield.
Mr. Zihlman with Mr. Stevenson.
Mr. Perlman with Mr. Williams of Texas.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, having paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. BOIES, who would have voted "aye" if he were present, I desire to withdraw my vote of "no," and vote "present."

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. FLEETWOOD. I voted "aye." I withdraw my vote of "aye" and vote "present."

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. CABLE, was called out of the city on account of the death of his father. I am paired with him, and withdraw my vote of "aye" and vote "present."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. SABATH. I had just stepped out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must take the responsibility of answering affirmatively, whether he was listening when his name was called.

Mr. SABATH. I am obliged to admit that I did not listen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7358) to provide for the expeditious and prompt settlement, mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of disputes between carriers and their employees and subordinate officials, and for other purposes, with Mr. TILSON in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW and Mr. BARKLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propound a request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time which has been fixed for debate, three hours, be divided equally, one-half for and one-half against the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the gentleman did not make that request before we went into the committee, because it is too late now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It can not be done in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARKLEY. It can be done either in the House or in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the time can not be divided. The control of the time can be determined in the committee if the division is made as a part of the action of the House, but when the House has fixed the time and done nothing else, you can not divide the time in the committee, because it is controlled by the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. You could by unanimous consent.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Not in the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am asking that the control of the time be fixed. It can be done either in the House or in the committee.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the motion that was made did not divide the time equally for and against, and the time is not equally divided for and against. The time is controlled under the general rules of debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and while it is true that ordinarily before we go into the committee we have either in a rule or by unanimous consent divided the time, in the absence of such action when there is a direct motion to close debate, the rule then is that recognition must first be accorded alternately hour by hour to those for and against; when there has been debate on the one side the other side is next entitled to recognition. It is not equally divided at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that when the Cape Cod Canal bill came up under the rule we provided three hours of general debate. The control of the time was not fixed in the House; and after the House had gone into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union I suggested that it seemed quite desirable that there should be a control of the time. I was doubtful myself whether that could be agreed to in the Committee of the Whole, but it was suggested by a gentleman on the majority side of the Chamber, and I think the present Chairman was one of those who made the suggestion that the control could be arranged in the Committee of the Whole, and it was so arranged by unanimous consent.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee undertakes to state that accurately, but there is this difference, and I call attention to it: When we were considering the Cape Cod bill we had adopted a rule which divided the time equally for and against, which we had the right to do in the House. We fixed the division of the time, and it was only a question of who should control it. The gentleman from Tennessee suggested that perhaps that could not be done in the committee. I interrupted the gentleman from Tennessee and said that when the time was fixed in the House and divided in the House, that then it could be controlled by unanimous consent in the committee.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to make any arrangement with the gentleman, but it can not be done now; and, for one, I would not oppose a motion to rise and immediately go back into the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Kentucky for the purpose of submitting a request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Kentucky up to this time has not had the opportunity to submit that request, so that properly he ought to be recognized for that purpose; and then if a point of order is made the Chair can decide the matter.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, the gentleman went far enough with his request to allow me to ascertain that it was for a division or control of the time. Personally, I regret that the request was not made at the proper time, but it can not be arranged now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Two weeks ago, when I moved in the House to limit debate, all I could do was to move to limit. It was impossible to make a motion to divide the time, to control it, and I eliminated that part of my motion. It would have been in order for me to make this request in the House, and it is in order to make it in the Committee of the Whole, because it is a request for the control of the time, and the division of the time between the two sides is a part of the request for the control of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not entirely accurate.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The only trouble about that is that under the agreement, under which we are now acting, there is no arrangement for a division of the time whatever, and none for the control of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. If the time had been divided by the rule, the Chair is clear that it would be in order for the committee to arrange as to the control of the time, but the division as well as the control of the time having been left under the general rules of the House by the House itself, the impression of the Chairman is that it would not be in order to now fix the control of that time in such a way that it would make a division of the time, which the House itself did not make.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the rules any gentleman who is recognized would be entitled to an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And he may yield any of that time he sees fit to other Members.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has been recognized as the proponent of the bill, and has occupied an hour or such part as he saw fit to use.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I reserve the rest of my time if I have been recognized for an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks at this time the recognition should pass to the gentleman from Massachusetts and recognizes him.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WINSLOW. I do not know that I have any authority to yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the gentleman has.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Chair hold my recognition to make a unanimous-consent request is a recognition within the rule that entitles me to an hour?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman was recognized for a specific purpose and the Chair so stated at the time.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Chair does not hold that would bar me from recognition for the hour during the three hours' debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair makes no ruling of that kind.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a parliamentary inquiry for information for myself and the committee in regard to the situation? The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] was recognized for an hour in general debate, and consumed, if I recall, 20 minutes. Now would the gentleman understand that these three hours of general debate are to the exclusion of the remainder of his former hour?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then would the gentleman think it was fair under those circumstances that this side be given the benefit of the extra 20 minutes?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the rules of the House where general debate has been fixed and a portion of that time has been used on a certain day that portion is taken from the whole time. The 20 minutes used the other day is taken from the three hours. There is no question about that being chargeable to the three hours.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is a very serious question about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course that has been the rule of the House for a long time.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I make the point of order that the question is not before the House, and I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Texas is overruled. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the bill which we have before us for consideration was introduced and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce comparatively late in the present session. The committee then undertook to get information as usual from the departments in interest and otherwise prepare itself for consideration of the bill. Before a reasonable time had elapsed with the other important legislation before the committee, there suddenly came a volcanic action designed to pull the bill from the committee and pass it upon the floor of this House. That action prevailed, and after more or less delay we have the bill before us to-day, and we are supposed in three hours, plus the time occupied under the five-minute debate, to settle the provisions of a bill than which no more intricate bill has ever been brought before this House for consideration.

We propose on sight to consider and act on a bill than which no more difficult bill to understand has ever been brought before Congress. We propose here by a vote of this body to run it through in 4, 5, 6, or 10 hours, no matter about enlightenment, no matter about information on the bill, no matter about hearings from which we might learn something, we propose with our eyes shut, possibly not with our ears shut, as we might wish, but with our eyes shut we are supposed to settle this bill here and now, and why are we doing it? Is it because Members in their great wisdom are incompetent to act? No one suggests that. Is it because the great masses of our people have asked our action to-day and now? No; nobody suggests that. Is it asked that we do it in the interest of all the people after due deliberation? No; absolutely no. Then why are we doing it? Because organized labor represented by four great brotherhoods plus a lot of little labor organizations are saying, "We want it, that is enough; we will have it."

We ought to get in possession of a little knowledge on some of the methods by which it is proposed to rush through this bill. Those who favor the bill have urged in one way and another that a great propaganda of the great interests are flooding Congress with suggestions and statements that they do not want the bill passed. They say that opponents of this bill are putting forth their influence here and there. It is not denied, I assume, the right of a citizen or an organization to do such a thing, but we do not want people who are forcing this bill along to undertake to make the public believe that they are the fair-haired boys who would not exert legislative influence, and that the men who have the money involved are the wicked devils who are trying to postpone the consideration of the bill. I ask the Clerk to read this communication which came into the hands of at least one Member of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS,
BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
Cleveland, Ohio, May 9, 1924.

To all Grand Lodge Officers, General Chairmen, Chairmen of State Legislative Boards, Officers and Members of Divisions, and Subordinate Lodges.

SIRS AND BROTHERS: Senators and Congressmen are receiving scores of telegrams and letters daily protesting against enactment of the railway labor bill. The convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce at Cleveland, May 8, went on record as opposing enactment of the bill, which doubtless will result in many more protests by various interests.

This action can be counteracted only by the sending of additional telegrams by our officers and members to their Senators and Congressmen urging their full support of our railway labor bill and assuring them that the class of people most directly concerned and affected are heartily in favor of the enactment of this legislation. Where your Congressman is on record as having voted to discharge the House committee from further consideration of the bill, he should be complimented for such action, so that he will know that he is being supported by his constituency in the position thus taken.

While many of our officers and members have wired their Senators and Congressmen upon the subject, such telegrams have not been of sufficient quantity, as compared to the great number received from opposing interests, to properly indicate the extent to which railroad employees are demanding this legislation, and this fact is observed to the extent that it is being freely commented upon in Washington. This will indicate to you that a deluge of telegrams from now until May 19 will do much to strengthen our position and our opportunity for the enactment of this bill.

The sending of these telegrams should not be restricted to general and local officers, but individual members in large numbers should be prevailed upon to also assist us by sending similar telegrams. Copies of such telegrams and responses received should be filed with the grand chief and the international president.

Yours fraternally,

W. S. STONE,
Grand Chief Engineer, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
D. B. ROBERTSON,
President Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.

Mr. WINSLOW. It may be that the great interests, and the railroads, the executives, and the others have approached Members of Congress and have asked for some sort of support of their own views on this proposition, but it comes with bad grace for those who are trying to rush the bill through to complain of the activities of their opponents when they flood their own membership with appeals, if not orders, of that character of the general order as just read by the reading clerk.

To show that it is not all one-sided, in spite of the pronunciamento that you have just heard, here is a significant bunch of petitions [exhibiting] from independent orders of railway employees indicative of opposition to this legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. How large a bunch of protests is that?

Mr. WINSLOW. You mean by measure?

Mr. BLANTON. The RECORD does not show anything about what you exhibit.

Mr. WINSLOW. About 2 inches by 15 inches by 9 inches solid. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman refers to "operatives." The gentleman refers to operating employees?

Mr. WINSLOW. Quite so; employees connected with the operating and clerical deparments of railroads.

We have also available unnumbered communications from little railroad employees' organizations which have been ignored by this proposed legislation put forward by the four great brotherhoods, and although we have the brotherhoods holding out in a pleasant kind of way that they will look after the chickens later on, the chickens distrust the old hen. They do not want to submit their lives and fortunes to the great brotherhoods, and they are opposed to this legislation for that reason. It is not my purpose to occupy all this time.

We have another letter, one which shows the friendly (?) attitude of those who are proponents of this bill, and gives evidence of the fact that they really want a careful consideration of this bill, and that they approve of the old Democratic-Republican Republic idea of things, that this is a Government of reason, and that we are supposed to know something of what we do. However, in spite of that, they send to us as Members a letter, which I ask to be read. I will withhold the name of the Member who received this letter, but if anybody objects and calls for the name of the Member I will give it. It is addressed to a Member of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA SYSTEM LINES,
SUPREME FEDERATION NO. 90,
Harrisburg, Pa., May 16, 1924.

* * * * * * *

HONORABLE SIR: Under date of May 5, by majority action, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was discharged from further handling of the bill known as H. R. 7358, or commonly called the Barkley bill. We note in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that you were listed as voting against this motion or absent or not voting; for that reason we are communicating with you for the purpose of expressing our dissatisfaction in the action taken by you and sincerely hope that when H. R. 7358 comes up for action May 19, 1924, that you change your position from May 5 and be found on the list with those voting in favor of the measure as introduced.

The men this office represent are constituents of yours and have been on strike against the Pennsylvania Railroad since July 1, 1922. The main cause of this strike was and is the flagrant violation of the transportation act by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and through the action of said company it is clearly demonstrated that the labor provisions of said act have proven failure and mainly the United States Railroad Labor Board.

Your failure to comply with this request will make it necessary for this office to notify each voter that we represent in your district of your action and thereby point out to them just where you failed to represent them when you had an opportunity to do so.

Sincerely trusting that we will have the pleasure of informing our members that you are willing to give them a square deal, I am,

Sincerely yours,

A. J. BURGER, President.

Mr. WINSLOW. It would be a waste of time to undertake to suggest or even state the purpose of that letter. It is "Hands up!" That is all there is to it.

Now, a query in my mind is whether or not this Congress, regardless of the merits of the bill, is prepared on four or five hours of vocal utterance, with no deliberation, no investigation, no hearings, to say to the people of the United States, "We will pass this most complicated and intricate labor bill, and we will put all the affairs of the railroads in this country subject to our legislative conclusions" under such circumstances.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. As I heard the reading of that last letter, it was signed "A. J. Burger, president." President of what?

Mr. WINSLOW. It is a labor organization. It appears at the head of the letter.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. If the gentleman will permit me, I for one think it is unfair to the members of the labor unions in my district to have a letter of that nature appear in the RECORD without its showing what State or district it appears from.

Mr. WINSLOW. I see the point. To relieve your mind, I will say it is headed from the Pennsylvania System Lines and represents—

Supreme Federation No. 90, Railroad Employees' Department, A. J. Burger, president.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. I think in all fairness to the House, somebody gave you that letter. If he had the courage to give it to you he ought to have the courage to give his name. He ought to have that courage.

Mr. WINSLOW. I can answer you without a speech. It was the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. In just a moment. I will yield first to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. I think perhaps it would clear up this situation a little if I made this statement. This morning, in talking with the chairman about this legislation, I showed him this letter, and he suggested that he might like to have it read. I said that so far as I was concerned it was a matter of indifference to me whether he asked me to read it here or not. I suppose every Member of the House received one like it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I happen to know that the Members from a certain Southern State who saw fit to vote against taking this matter up received just such a letter; Members from one of the oldest Southern States of this Union. After all, is it not a fact that the American people are interested in this bill, because the railroads are not the only people at interest?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes. I had the letter read so that the American people could know what was going on and not so much for the enlightenment of Members of the House. They all know of these things.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky wish to claim an hour?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I desire to be recognized for an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes of that time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] has just told us about the activities of labor organizations. That is true, but they are appearing in the open, they are doing it directly, and they are presenting their case to Congress in a straightforward way. I wish to show what propaganda is being carried on by the railway interests under cover. We know, of course, that certain great railroads are opposed to the Howell-Barkley bill, but all do not know that they are directing the whole stupendous propaganda. We get letters from business men and chambers of commerce in a stereotyped way and without discussing the merits of this proposition, and all instigated by these gentlemen. We get all kinds of correspondence from labor unions, dummy unions, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] referred to some of them, but the record shows that they are financed and directed by the railway interests and simply communicate that which they are told to communicate.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. How many of the total number of railroad men are represented by the unions demanding this bill.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Oh, about 90 per cent, or 95 per cent.

Mr. MILLS. I will say to the gentleman it is nearer 50 per cent.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. No; I differ from the gentleman. Supply concerns that fatten out of fat contracts with the railroads are organized and are pushing this thing. I am going to give you some of the proof. It is easily subject to proof, and I would like to have the North and South Dakota Members listen to some of the telegrams, and so on, as it may be interesting to them to find out where this propaganda comes from.

On April 23, Mr. M. L. Countryman, general counsel for the Great Northern Railway, sent the following telegram to Mr. H. E. Judge, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak.:

House bill introduced by Barkley abolishes Labor Board and puts national labor unions in very powerful position as against railroads. Under new rules bill has been called out of committee for consideration by House and comes up on or about May 5. Please confer with other railroad counsel in your State and see whether through cooly plaster and mattings in your stroll abide by leech craft cars drunk time rebuke chide * * *. At conference of railroad counsel to-day all agreed if any useful results are possible they will be obtained through remit stoles thinly by sex filch.

It may be well not to attempt to translate this secret message, but to wait and see what translation the railroad will offer of these mysterious instructions for influencing the Congress of the United States. By "cooly plaster and mattings" great results are evidently to be achieved. By "leach craft" and "cars drunk" it is apparently intended to "rebuke" and "chide" the servants of the public. Eminent railroad lawyers meeting in counsel on the basis of their long experience in defeating legislation in the public interests have agreed that "useful results" are only possible through the "remit." Of course, we should not assume that this means through remitting money. The railroads, since the wicked days when Mr. Huntington spent millions of dollars in Washington and was exposed, have repeatedly assured the public that direct bribery of public servants is no longer their practice. Better and safer methods of obtaining votes have been found. It is an interesting speculation as to what is to be accomplished by "sex filch." To save misconstruction it should be pointed out that the words are not "sex filth" but "sex filch."

Of course, the railroads should not be judged too hastily by these peculiar instructions in secret code. We may be informed that they were only urging that the Interstate Commerce Committee should be asked to hold hearings so that they could talk the bill to death or that a filibuster should be staged by their dear friends in order to prevent the House from exercising its constitutional right to legislate.

It will be helpful, however, to follow the activities of Mr. Judge after he received this code message. In the Sioux Falls Press of April 30 we find the following item:

There was a meeting of the Sioux Falls Traffic Bureau at the chamber of commerce on April 29, and the Sioux Falls Press reports as follows:

"H. E. Judge in a brief talk before the bureau severely criticized the Howell-Barkley bill, now pending in Congress, which would abolish the present Labor Board and place in its stead commissions composed of members of union organizations with a lesser representation of employees of the railroads and employers. The cost of the proposed change would roughly be $1,000,000 a year, according to Mr. Judge, which burden would be added to the taxpayers' load. A resolution was made and unanimously approved to telegraph the South Dakota Congressmen urging that they vote against the measure, and that they seek other opposition to the bill. Individual members of the bureau voted to send personal telegrams to the Congressmen, stating their opposition to the proposed bill."

It appears that Mr. Judge discussed the merits of the bill with as little regard for its actual provisions as that shown by the Republican leader in the debate of May 5. Probably Mr. Judge did not bother to read the bill, but took his statements regarding it from Mr. Countryman, because we read in the Minneapolis Journal of April 29, on the authority of Mr. Countryman and other railroad attorneys, the following statement:

The bill provides for elimination of the Railroad Labor Board and the substitution of a series of so-called adjustment boards, to consist of members of nationally organized railroad unions and railroad officials. These boards would consider all disputes.

The article in the Minneapolis Journal continues as follows:

The bill eliminates public representation on the present Labor Board, and this public representation is something which the public and all the shippers should be interested in, M. L. Countryman, general counsel for the Great Northern Railroad, said.

The telegram and newspaper articles quoted show plainly that it is no accident that business associations and newspapers generally have flatly misrepresented the provisions of the Howell-Barkley bill and have protested against eliminating the public by a bill which substitutes a board of five public members for a present board of three public members and six partisans. It is also interesting to note that upon the first roll call of May 5 all three Members of Congress from South Dakota voted against consideration of the bill.

It does not seem unfair to translate the mysterious code telegram as including instructions that useful results can only be obtained by telling untruths about the Howell-Barkley bill and then getting misinformed business men to telegraph their ignorant opposition to Members of Congress, in the hope that they, being equally ignorant regarding the bill, will vote upon prejudice instead of upon facts.

Let us take up now an example of the activities of other gentlemen who are financially interested in influencing Members of Congress. Here is a telegram, dated May 6, from Mr. A. H. Mulliken, chairman legislative committee, Railway Business Association, to Mr. Charles A. Symington, chairman membership committee of that association. It should be understood that the Railway Business Association is an organization of the principal railway supply companies in the country, all of whom are greatly interested in keeping rates up and wages down, so that the railroads can waste as much money as possible in giving contracts for supplies to supply companies in which the railroad officers themselves are financially interested. The relationship of these railway supply companies to the railroads has been fully exposed in the hearings before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce on Senate Resolution No. 23, in the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress. Here is Mr. Mulliken's telegram:

Organized labor yesterday demanded of House, and by 194 to 181 obtained discharge of standing committee from consideration of Howell-Barkley bill, upon which no hearings had been held. With parties nearly equal and no caucus on either side, 27 Democrats voted "no," but 40 Republicans voted "yes" and 59 Members did not vote. In House or Senate or White House this bill must be beaten, if possible. In strongest fight of our 16 years as an association we were not strong enough. As proof to Congress that American industry approves policy urged by us, and as reinforcements in our intensive field campaign, earnestly recommend membership committee undertake to enroll at once 100 members. Time presses. Suggest eligible concerns be asked to authorize enrollment by wire for publication here, stating why they are joining.

Mr. Mulliken's telegram was inclosed in a letter of May 10, sent by Mr. Symington to railway supply concerns, which reads as follows:

See Mr. Mulliken's telegram. The Howell-Barkley bill is scheduled for a three-hour debate May 19, after which the parliamentary struggle to prevent its immediate passage by the House will be resumed. Will you be among the 100 concerns to respond with your enrollment and say that you do so to show approval of our course in resisting the exactions of the labor organizations? Telegraph authority to record your membership. Application and check can follow.

State delegations—in forming which our officers and members are everywhere active—are carrying directly to Members of Congress assurance of industrial need in their districts for a let-up in legislative experiment affecting railways. Busy men of large affairs are spending time and strength to protect you and all of us against class legislation forced upon Congress by a well-organized labor minority.

You believe, do you not, that the adjustment of railway wages is fair to labor already?

You believe, do you not, that the intention of organized labor in forcing a change in the law is to speed up wage advances?

You believe, do you not, that the purpose of this bill is to restore nation-wide strikes as a weapon of menace?

You believe, do you not, that under this bill, through unjustified wage increases and wasteful regulations, the tendency of railway operating cost would be turned upward again?

Have you any doubt that in consequence:

(1) Freight rates would be higher and service impaired?

(2) Net railway income would decline, with a consequent loss of confidence in railway securities and neglect to provide sufficient facilities for future traffic?

(3) Business recession would be intensified by keeping railway purchases below normal?

If you do believe all these things, we are sure you will help avert the calamity in the way suggested by Mr. Mulliken.

The application blank calls for check for $100, covering dues for 12 months from date of application.

It will be noted that this efficient organization kills two birds with one stone. In stirring up opposition to the Howell-Barkley bill the association seeks to drag in additional members at $100 a year by terrifying supply companies with a fear that if the railroads are annoyed by regulation in the public interest they will not be able to give as many fat contracts to their friends in the railway supply business. How these railway supply companies profit at public expense was clearly shown by the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Committee on March 7, 1922, when the commission reported that the Pennsylvania Railroad could have saved $3,000,000 in one year by making repairs in its own shops on some 200 locomotives which it sent to the Baldwin Locomotive Works, and that in the same year the New York Central could have saved some $3,000,000 on its contracts for locomotive repairs made through the American Locomotive Co. and the Baldwin Locomotive Works. It was shown that this work was sent out to favored contract shops when the railway employees, who are supporting the present bill, were being laid off by the hundreds in the railroad shops and denied a chance to earn a living.

The Baldwin and American locomotive companies pay $500 a year for five memberships each in the Railway Business Association, but when they are conducting what they call an "intensified field campaign" in the Halls of Congress they do not explain their real reason and their financial interest in opposing legislation to promote the continuity and efficiency of labor in the transportation industry. The membership roll of the Railway Business Association shows a very large membership all over the United States, including practically all the principal concerns engaged in furnishing railway supplies. It appears from this membership roll that they must have an income of something like $75,000 a year from memberships alone, and it is quite evident that they can put a very large amount of money into opposition to legislation, such as the present bill, and that they can bring enormous pressure to bear upon business associations and newspapers all over the country for the purpose of convincing Members of Congress that there is widespread opposition to any legislation which their railroad clients desire to oppose.

Here is another example of how supposed public sentiment is created by the railroads. On March 7, 1924, the following letter was sent by the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co. to surgeons along the line of the railroad dependent upon the railroad for professional employment:

ATCHISON, KANS., March 7, 1924.

To all local surgeons:

A meeting was held in the office of the general solicitor of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe at Topeka with reference to the situation at Washington.

The situation at Washington indicates that there is danger of legislation in the Senate and House striking at the transportation act of 1920, and there is so much activity in the direction mentioned as to make it necessary to intensify our efforts to defeat the same without delay.

It was decided at the meeting to call on all local surgeons to proceed at once and secure letters from business men, farmers, and others, directed to the Congressmen of their districts, setting forth, briefly, why the transportation act should not be repealed or amended but given a fair trial.

I am sending you herewith the following documents:

Memorandum dated Chicago, January 21, prepared by S. T. Blodsee, Santa Fe general solicitor.

Letter from Earl H. Ellis, Santa Fe solicitor for Colorado, to Mr. Gardiner Lathrop, dated January 18, 1924.

Points to be used in the letters above referred to.

I am also inclosing a copy of an editorial article entitled "The transportation act," from the Kansas City Star, December, 1923, which argues against the amendment of the transportation act.

It is of supreme importance that we get as many letters as possible forwarded promptly to our Congressmen and Senators. We do not expect them all to be in the same form. This should be avoided. I am asking you, therefore, to give preferred attention to the subject matter of this letter and lose no time in getting as many letters as possible and having them sent to our Senators and Congressmen.

If you are put to any expense in this matter, such as automobile hire in going to other towns to secure these letters, let me know amounts thereof and I will make vouchers to cover. I shall thank you, within the next 10 days, to send me a list of persons who have written letters at your request. You can assist the writers of these letters in preparing the form, having them as different as possible, and not of a rubber-stamp, stereotyped character. Immediate attention to this matter is specially requested.

If you can get a few prominent farmers to send in such letters, it would be of much benefit.

Please regard this communication as confidential and not for publication.

Yours truly,

W. P. WAGGENER, General Attorney.

In connection with the employment of surgeons, it may be worth while to refer for a moment to the interest of the public and the employees in the maintenance of harmonious labor conditions on the railroads. The rules and working conditions which the employees seek to have established are, in many instances, designed to protect their lives and health, and in the protection against accidents in the transportation service the public itself has an immediate interest. In the year 1922, 32,434 employees were injured and 1,298 were killed on the steam railroads. Forty-seven thousand nine hundred and eighty-nine passengers and other nontrespassers were injured and 5,851 were killed. Bad working conditions in the shops are directly reflected in defective equipment or inefficient operation. Neither the railroad managements nor the general public has anything like the vital interests that railroad employees have in maintaining efficient and safe conditions, in preventing overwork and unfair strains upon human beings that result in accidents. Payment of insufficient wages and the establishment of unfair working conditions are reflected directly in diminished efficiency and safety of transportation service.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I am sorry I can not at this time.

Mr. MICHENER. Will not the gentleman please discuss the bill?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I want to finish this, and the gentleman should have this information.

Yet when the railroad employees come forward with a program to require conferences for the consideration of their interests, to require a settlement of technical disputes through competent boards of technicians, to require that the public shall have the right and power to mediate any disputes over wages and working conditions, and that unsettled disputes shall be submitted to impartial arbitration, they are met with a barrage of falsehood and misrepresentation proceeding apparently from the persons disassociated from the railroads, but in fact being merely secret agents of railroad managements. Perhaps the most unfair use of secret methods of opposition has been the employment by the railroads of the officers of so-called company unions to protest to Members of Congress against legislation for the benefit of all railroad employees. It is the grossest hypocrisy for these company union officers to pretend to represent the employees whom they are hired to betray. It was admitted on cross-examination before the Senate subcommittee in hearings on this bill by Mr. Anderson, of the Union Pacific Railroad, who claimed to represent 140,000 employees, that he had been assisted in his presentation by the management (p. 382), and was shown in Mr. Richberg's statement (p. 210) that on the Union Pacific and other railroads men are compelled to join the company unions, the expense being paid either by dues deducted from wages or by the company direct.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I would rather not yield at this time.

Mr. MILLS. Would the gentleman mind giving me that citation?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Page 382 and page 210.

Mr. MILLS. I do not find any such citation; 364 is the last page.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. It was admitted by Mr. Peterman, claiming to represent the Pennsylvania shopmen, that the company union officers were paid for service and expenses by the company (p. 300); and Mr. McDonald, claiming to represent the clerks, insisted that "it is perfectly legitimate for the company to assume the expense of this work." In other words, it is well recognized that company union officials are paid agents of the managements. Probably few Members of Congress realize that almost all the company unions are mere paper organizations; that the employees do not have any local craft organizations or lodge meetings, or the form of organization whereby their so-called representatives are required to express the wishes of their membership. These company unions are simply set up so that the company can make the pretense of entering into agreements with the employees, when, as a matter of fact, the company is represented by its own agents on both sides of the table. The officers of the national labor organizations and some Members of Congress have received numerous letters from railway employees protesting against other misrepresentation by company union officers; protesting against being compelled to sign petitions of opposition to this bill in order that they might not be discharged. Any Member of Congress who assumes that the protest of a company union officer represents the sentiment of railway employees is simply ignorant of the facts in the case.

Time will not permit an indefinite exposure of all the devious means by which the railroads have sought to mislead Congress; but the day is not far distant when Members of Congress and the country at large will be more fully advised of the methods adopted to prevent the passage of this bill. Many Members are undoubtedly ignorant of the sources of pressure and influence that has been brought to bear upon them. They do not know why and how this bill has been misrepresented by a campaign of organized falsehood. They do not know the means that have been used to write fabrications into the editorial and news columns of the daily papers. But it is well to utter a word of warning here and now that the day is approaching when these things will be brought into the light. There were some Members of the House who resented the statement made on the floor that the vote made upon this measure would be a test vote. But it may be a more important test vote than many realize. It may turn out to be a test vote, not only of friendliness to the men who do the hard manual labor that moves interstate commerce, but it will be a test of the ability of many a new Member of Congress to withstand the pressure of powerful corrupting influences that are using falsehoods and appeals of self-interest to persuade Members of Congress to violate their duty to give legislation a careful and impartial consideration and then to vote as public servants, not as the deceived or willful agents of private interests.

The proponents of this legislation have worked in the open. They have sent their representatives here to give information, to furnish statistics, to persuade by all honorable means the representatives of the people that this bill is a measure in the public interest and is worthy of support. They have openly asked the men on the trains and in the shops to write their appeals to Members of Congress so that they may know that this legislation is really desired by the railway employees. The American Federation of Labor has joined vigorously in this effort to convince the Members of Congress that all organized labor regards the Howell-Barkley bill as a constructive measure to maintain peace and harmony in a most essential national industry.

The opponents of this bill have worked under cover, through secret agents. They have insinuated their false statements into the newspapers through secret channels of influence. They have operated through concealed agents, using unfair pressure and misrepresentation as the means for misleading and coercing Members of Congress to defeat this bill by any means, but particularly through parliamentary strategies and tricks, through suppression of discussion and filibuster, through any means except the honorable means of fair and open debate upon the merits. As a result, the issue on this bill has become even greater than that of the merits of the bill itself. It has grown to be an issue of the integrity and dignity of the exercise of legislative power by the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BERGER and Mr. MICHENER rose.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania). Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. There are so many crowding for time that I do not like to take more time.

Mr. BERGER. Just a short question.

Mr. MICHENER. I hope the gentleman will yield for a question. The gentleman has talked for 25 minutes and has not mentioned the bill. I would like to hear what the gentleman thinks about the provisions of this bill.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I shall discuss the bill on its merits subsequently this afternoon. I wanted the gentleman to know the sort of propaganda that is behind some of the letters you are receiving.

Mr. BERGER. Is not the gentleman also of the opinion that this propaganda will continue and must continue as long as the railroads are in private hands?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I rather think so.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Then the gentleman is in favor of Government ownership?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. No; I am not.

Mr. BERGER. The gentleman is not?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. No; I am not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] I yield the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] 10 minutes out of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am sure every Member of the House will join me in expressing thanks for the lucid explanation of the bill by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON], who has just closed his speech. [Applause.] I was deeply interested from line to line to discover when he was going to talk about the bill, and I regretted exceedingly to see him yield the floor without mentioning it.

Now, I want to talk about what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] said about the bill when he made his celebrated speech a few days ago.

Mr. BARKLEY said in his speech of the 5th of May that—the bill makes no radical changes in existing law.

Well, does it? Does not it provide that four different boards consisting of about 40 men, equally divided among the railroads and the unions of the brotherhoods, shall be selected by them, named by the President, and paid for by the public? Is there any such provision as that in the existing law? I think no one will say there is.

These boards are authorized to employ such help as they may think proper and fix the pay of such help. There appears to be no restriction on the number who may be employed nor the pay they may receive, but the public is to pay the bill and I suppose nothing else matters. Yet my friend from Kentucky says there is no radical change from existing law. The poor public. It becomes the football of every plunderbund. How it survives I am at a loss to understand. It seems an unusual demand to make that the people shall be required to pay the expenses without limit of boards whose only functions are to adjust grievances between themselves under contracts between themselves in which the people have no voice whatever.

It is true that these boards have to deal only with grievances between the men and the railroad companies; that they have nothing to do with fixing wages or making contracts of employment. What they have to do is to adjust differences between a single individual employed by a railroad and the railroad, or between groups of individuals and the railroads. The purpose of the boards is to adjust working conditions; to settle disputes between superintendents and the men. The public is not represented on these boards, except as it is connected with them through the Treasury of the United States.

I would like to ask Mr. BARKLEY, or anybody else, why the Government should pay an unknown sum annually as compensation to such boards. They are not transacting any business for the Government. The business they are transacting is for the unions and for the railroads. Why should not the unions and the railroads pay them? Why should the general public be taxed to meet their expenses?

Mr. MILLS. May I suggest that that is in entire harmony with the general proposition of this bill, which legalizes the unions, gives them legal recognition, and, therefore, it is appropriate, under the circumstances, that the United States should pay the expenses of the unions.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I decline to yield further.

The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BARKLEY, says that the appointment of these boards, if you pay them out of the public Treasury, will almost certainly insure against strikes. How does he know that? How does anybody know it? Who can say what will cause a strike, or when it will be caused, or what course it will take?

The gentleman from Kentucky says that the last railroad strike cost the Government, through the Department of Justice, about $2,000,000. It is true it did, and it cost the railroads and the public a very large sum; nobody knows what. All strikes do that, but this bill does not insure against strikes. The provisions he describes give no assurance against strikes. Mr. BARKLEY says the bill does provide for a public board of mediation and conciliation. True it does, but what is there that this board could do? When do they get into action; how do they get into action? Who puts them into action? They can not function except when the railroads and the men agree between themselves that a matter should be referred to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. Mind you there must be an agreement between the other people first. There is no place anywhere in this bill that gives the Board of Mediation and Conciliation original jurisdiction to begin to function. It can do nothing until asked, and can not do anything until everybody agrees, and when everybody agrees, of course, there is nothing to adjust. It has already been adjusted or there would be no agreement.

The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BARKLEY, says that these boards are national boards. Well, what of it? What is the difference between being national or local? If they do not represent anybody but themselves they might just as well be international as national or local. The boards are organized to protect their own interests and not in any way to represent the public.

The gentleman says:

> the objection that was made to the original bill providing that the expenses of these groups of men on each side should be paid for by the respective sides was that as long as their expenses and their salaries are paid for by private interests and out of private funds that they would still hold that they were representative to the last degree and they would never cross over and agree with the other side, and, as a result, making them Government officials makes it easier for these men, with equal representation on both sides, to agree.

So the gentleman thinks that although these men have no Government function to perform that they will be more complacent and less interested in the preservation of their own rights and less insistent upon the terms of their contracts than they would if they were merely railroad representatives or union representatives, as the case might be.

Of course there is no logic in such a statement, and there is no one who stops to consider the question who would be willing to agree with the conclusions drawn by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I wonder whether I could have three minutes more.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three additional minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says that the objection to the boards that were proposed in the existing law, but which in fact were not incorporated into the law, was that by setting up these equipartisan boards and having their employees on respective sides it took away from them perhaps that degree of impartiality that might enable them, or at least some of them, to agree with those on the other side in arriving at a conclusion.

Well, if the matter was not so serious this would be a laughable reason for authorizing the unions and the railroads to appoint their own men and have the President name them after they appointed them and have the public pay them after all this detail had been gone through with.

Of course we know that the boards do not deal with the question of wages; that they have no jurisdiction over increases or decreases. That is a matter left entirely with the employers and the employees under this bill. I do not object to the matter of wages being left to the employer and the employee.

I think that is the way it should be. I was not for the Railroad Labor Board when it was provided for in the present law, and I would not care if it were abolished now, but I would not set up in its stead the boards that this bill provides. Whatever chance the public has with the existing Labor Board on which the public is represented it will have no chance at all with the proposed boards. The public is out if this bill passes. God help the public! If this bill passes nearly half of the men employed by the railroads will be out, because there are only a little more than half that have the selection of the men for these boards, and these men are human, and they will be appointed by their friends who are human, and their job will be to see that those who appointed them are protected against their fellow workmen who are not of the brotherhoods.

I think it might be just as well now to call attention to the insistent demand on the part of the agricultural sections of the country for reduced freight rates. I notice that some of the people from agricultural districts here are voting for all the provisions of this bill. If this bill passes and becomes law the door of opportunity is forever shut in the faces of those who are looking for lower freight rates. Their dreams of relief are ended. They might as well know it now as any other time.

If there is anybody anywhere in the agricultural regions of the United States who believes for a minute that there will ever come a time, if this bill becomes a law, when his agricultural constituents will ever have any chance whatever to get reduced freight rates, let him quit his pipe dream now. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TILSON). Does the gentleman from Massachusetts reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in order that the debate shall be equally balanced between the proponents and opponents of this measure I shall be glad to yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RATHBONE].

Mr. RATHBONE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RATHBONE. Mr. Chairman, it is with regret that I find myself in opposition to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who has just addressed you, and to the majority of my colleagues on the Republican side of this House.

This is not a party question, but if it were I maintain that those who are supporting the Howell-Barkley bill are at the same time maintaining the true principles of the Republican Party. I deny that adherence to the discredited Railroad Labor Board is a test of Republicanism.

How shall we determine whether or not a measure should be regarded as true Republican doctrine? Undoubtedly by ascertaining if the principles embodied in such a bill have been approved in the national platforms of the party or by the utterances of its acknowledged leaders. Let us apply these tests to the present transportation act and to the Howell-Barkley bill now under consideration.

There are three essential elements in the bill before us. First, it provides for collective bargaining. In the national Republican platform of 1920 we find the following:

> We recognize the justice of collective bargaining as a means of promoting good will, establishing a closer and more harmonious relation between employers and employees, and realizing the true ends of industrial justice.

What is the meaning to be given to these words? The word "collective" implies unity. On the one hand the stockholders united in their corporate organization and on the other hand the workers united in their labor unions are to be the parties to the transaction in question.

The word "bargaining" implies freedom of contract. No one can be said to bargain when under restraint.

This important feature, therefore, of the Howell-Barkley bill is supported by the distinct expression of the last Republican National Convention.

It has been well said that the progress of humanity is from status to contract. The creation of the Railroad Labor Board was reactionary because it was designed to make the employment of the workers dependent upon status. It sought arbitrarily to fix their wages and the working conditions of their employment. This was a step backward in the direction of involuntary servitude.

The bill before us is a progressive measure in that it accepts contract and not status as the true principle to be followed in such legislation. It gives to the railroads and the workers alike the right to determine wages and working conditions by mutual agreement.

Second, the bill provides for mediation and conciliation. The proponents of the Howell-Barkley bill contend that the Labor Board has been a failure and that the previously tried machinery of Federal mediation was a success, and that therefore the Labor Board should be abolished and the Board of Mediation restored. Let us examine the records of the past 4 years' operation of the Labor Board and then the records of the previous 20 years of mediation.

Perhaps it would be well first to explain the principles of mediation in order that it may be clearly understood why the Labor Board as an attempt at combination of mediation and arbitration failed, and will continue to fail, to preserve peace.

The development of the principle of mediation has been one of slowly and steadily improving efficiency. During the eight and a half years following the passage of the first mediation law, the Erdman Act in 1898, the law was used only once, when the trainmen requested mediation and the railroads refused to enter mediation proceedings. From 1907 to 1913 the use of mediation increased and 61 cases were settled under the Erdman Act, affecting over 250,000 employees.

It should be borne in mind that the Erdman and Newlands Acts only provided mediation for controversies involving the train-service men, and that labor disturbances on the railroads prior to the passage of the Transportation Act not affecting the train-service men can not be charged up as failures of mediation.

The technique developed by Federal mediators improved as their experience grew, and the result was an increasing disposition of both carriers and employees to invoke mediation. It is desirable to understand this technique in order to see clearly why the present Labor Board can not operate as a body of mediators.

The Federal mediators never called both of the parties before them for either public or private hearings. In fact, they learned very soon that they must keep the parties separated in order to mediate successfully. If one mediator were acting, he would vibrate between the opposing groups. If two mediators were acting, one might work with one group and the other with the opposing party. It was absolutely necessary for the mediators to enjoy confidential relations and for both parties to be assured that confidences would not be violated. Thus, a mediator could argue vigorously against unjust demands and obtain concessions which he would be very careful not to communicate to the other side. So by an adroit combination of pleading and pressure the mediators would be able to narrow the dispute down to a few issues, with perhaps slight differences between the parties in the end, and determine how far each party would be willing to go in making concessions to the other.

The majority of mediations under the Erdman and Newlands Acts resulted in settlements by the mediators. Where arbitration was necessary, the mediators had been able to narrow the issues and also to force the parties into a position where neither could afford to reject the arbitration proposal. Then the mediators were able to exercise their final function of naming neutral arbitrators where the parties were unable to agree upon such neutrals, which was usually the case.

The success of arbitration always lay in the fact that the parties agreed to abide by the award, and provision was made, as in the proposed law, for entering a judgment upon the award, if necessary for its enforcement.

The Labor Board was constituted as a board of arbitration, being composed of three partisans of each side and three neutrals. But its composition violated two fundamental principles of successful arbitration. In the first place, as parties were compelled to submit disputes to the board, its decisions could not be made enforceable without the result being compulsory arbitration. The principal value of arbitration lies in the voluntary agreement of the parties to submit their controversy and to abide by the award.

In the second place, the board, being a permanent board, was unsuited for arbitration. Inevitably a permanent board of arbitration will become in fact partisan to one side or will be forced by the logic of events to render so many decisions offensive to one or both parties that one or both parties will lose confidence in it.

This is one reason why trial by jury has obtained such public confidence, particularly among English-speaking people. A man has always the opportunity to have an issue of fact tried by a newly formed tribunal, against which he has acquired no prejudice and which has no prejudices against him. The permanent officers of court, the judges, are supposed to be limited to determining issues of law; but issues of fact, upon which a man may be deprived of liberty or property, are to be submitted in each instance to a new tribunal chosen for that purpose.

This analogy to trial by jury may show clearly why a board for the arbitration of industrial disputes to determine the property rights, the working conditions, and other matters of grave importance to thousands of men and to the owners of vast properties should be constituted anew for each controversy. And again it may be pointed out that the very fact that a dispute must ultimately be decided by such an unknown board, which must be especially created, will exercise a powerful influence upon the parties under pressure of Government mediators to adjust their disputes in conference between themselves, if possible.

The transportation act offended against all these sound principles for the mediation and arbitration of industrial disputes. Since the Labor Board could not make enforceable awards, its function must be essentially that of a body of mediators. But to put three partisans of each side upon a mediation board was a manifest absurdity. For the board then to appear to be a court—and with even more formal procedure than that of an arbitration board—was to insure its failure as a mediating body. Perhaps the most tragic example of the inevitable failure of the Labor Board is found in its utter failure to cope with the shopmen's strike.

The record of governmental mediation as a means for the peaceful adjustment of disputes affecting the train service employees is one of exceptional success. Two sentences from the official report of the Government mediators of December 8, 1917, are significant:

> In no instance has a strike followed the intervention of the board, some plan of adjustment having always been agreed to by the contending parties. When account is taken of the numerous and distressful strikes that have occurred in the industrial field and on street railroads it is a noteworthy fact that the interruption of interstate railway service caused by labor disputes has been almost negligible during the entire period mentioned.

The board concluded that the law seemed to be the—> best plan yet devised for bringing to a peaceful settlement the disputes which most frequently occur, and which otherwise would be likely to result in serious consequences to the public.

The person who studies without bias the records of the development and success of Federal mediation and conciliation and arbitration for the settlement of railway labor controversies, and reviews with similar lack of bias the failure of the provisions of Title III of the transportation act to promote the continuity and efficiency of transportation service, must come to this conclusion: The organized railway employees have presented to this Congress not a new and radical proposal but, on the contrary, urge that the radical experiment of the creation of the Railroad Labor Board was a legislative blunder and that conservative counsel should approve of the abandonment of a machinery of proven failure and the return to a machinery of proven success.

Every advantage has been taken in the proposed bill of the lessons of experience. Improvement has been made in the old machinery of mediation and arbitration. Revisions of former legislation have been made to remedy defects which developed in the use of the former mechanism of mediation and arbitration, but the essential principles that have been tried and found true are the underlying principles of the Howell-Barkley bill.

The value and importance of mediation were long ago recognized by the Republican Party. In its platform of 1908 we find the following:

> The successful exercise of the power of mediation and of arbitration between the officials of railroads and their employees * * * were the most commendable accomplishments of the present administration.

Third, the most important principle of arbitration is clearly recognized in the Howell-Barkley bill as the one which should finally govern in cases of industrial disputes. This is also sound Republican doctrine, for in that party's platform of 1920 we read:

> The Government should take the initiative in inviting the establishment of tribunals or commissions for the purpose of voluntary arbitration and of investigation of disputed issues.

Compulsory arbitration is a failure. Wherever it has been tried this fact has been demonstrated. Over 20 years ago its adoption by the Government was heralded as a wonderful step forward in New Zealand, but in his latest work "Modern Democracies" James Bryce practically condemns it as a failure.

Liberty of contract, including contract of employment, is essential to the maintenance of civilization. Employers must be free to employ or not to employ and employees must be free to work or not to work. Coercion is un-American and is repugnant to all the fundamental principles of our institutions.

This bill leaves both parties free until they have submitted to arbitration. After that they are morally and legally bound to abide by the award. This is in line with all experience and enlightened progress.

If the intention of the framers of the transportation act was to coerce the workers, then it was not only abortive but wrong. The Transportation Act was apparently intended to compel the railroad workers to submit to the jurisdiction of the Labor Board but not to its decisions, whereas the proposed bill makes their submission to arbitration voluntary, but their abiding by the award compulsory.

The Transportation Act has been severely criticized by the leaders of the Republican Party. The late President Harding on December 8, 1922, in his address to Congress, said:

> In a previous address to the Congress I called to your attention the insufficiency of power to enforce the decisions of the Railroad Labor Board. Carriers have ignored its decisions, on the one hand; railway workmen have challenged its decisions by a strike on the other hand. * * * It is now impossible to safeguard public interest, because the decrees of the board are unenforceable against either employer or employees.
> The labor board itself is not so constituted as best to serve the public interest. With six partisan members on a board of nine, three partisans nominated by the employees and three by the railway managers, it is inevitable that the partisan viewpoint is maintained throughout hearings and in decisions handed down.
> It need not be surprising that there is dissatisfaction over delayed hearings and decisions by the present board when every trivial dispute is carried to that tribunal. The law should require the railroads and their employees to institute means and methods to negotiate between themselves their constantly arising differences, limiting appeals to the Government tribunal to disputes of such character as are likely to affect the public welfare.

Secretary Herbert Hoover, addressing the National Transportation Conference, composed of representatives from all the groups directly interested in the railroads, held in Washington, January 9, 1924, said in part:

> The present set-up of labor adjustment has not given entire satisfaction and in considerable degree this is due to inherent faults in the construction of the board and in its authorities.
> We have in this board confused four different functions in labor relationship. The board has in parts the machinery for collective bargaining, for arbitration, for conciliation, and judicial determination.

Secretary James J. Davis, in his annual report for 1923 to the President, as head of the Department of Labor, said, in part:

> Apparently the differences between the management of the railroads and their employees have been increased and complicated rather than diminished by the operation of the machinery provided by section 300 of the law—transportation act. The practical operation of that plan brings about unreasonable delays in the adjustment of minor disputes and accentuates to the dignity of a contest petty differences with reference to wages and conditions of labor.
> The machinery has proved unwieldy. It seems to me that some machinery less complicated and less cumbersome should be set up to provide for the equitable and expeditious settlement of these disputes through well-known and oft-used channels in order that our transportation system may function at its highest rate of efficiency in the interest of the country.

The fatal defect in the conception and construction of the Railroad Labor Board was and is that it sought to combine things essentially incompatible, force and persuasion. It could not employ either to good advantage. It turned its back on persuasion and yet stopped short of compulsion.

The representation of the public on the board is of no advantage, for it constitutes a minority of the membership, it controls nothing, and it is swept aside by partisanship or soon becomes partisan itself. It is an innovation, a misfit tribunal without power, a court without authority, an alleged board of conciliation that does not conciliate.

It was condemned to failure from the beginning. It was hatched in eight days in a conference room behind closed doors. It was never debated in public. It was never held up to inspection in the light of day. It was not in the original Esch bill nor the original Cummins bill. It was the result of hasty compromise. It is an ill-considered experiment without historic background, without proper evolution; a futility, as has been clearly proven by four years of continuous friction and failure. It has not brought industrial peace, but resentment, resistance, industrial strife, and a great nation-wide strike, resulting in enormous loss to the railroads and the public. It can not bring peace in the future, because its basic conception is essentially unsound. Emerson was right when he said, "Nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles."

It must cause humiliation to every true American to see any agency of this great Government, such as the Railroad Labor Board, flouted, scorned, and repudiated, as it has been. For 30 years before the Transportation Act there was no nation-wide railroad strike. Let us return to the methods and principles of the Newlands and Erdman Acts, under which the Nation enjoyed industrial peace in transportation service. Let us return to the paths of our fathers, where we can neither stumble nor wander, and march steadily forward to peace and prosperity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has remaining 43 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in what the preceding speaker had to say upon this subject. He quoted Warren G. Harding, for whose memory, of course, all of us have the greatest respect, but when Warren G. Harding pointed out a possible deficiency in the present railway act, that did not in any way mean that if he were alive to-day, he would favor the proposition which is now before this House.

I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RATHBONE] that I would a good deal rather take the handiwork of men who sat upon the committees of the two Houses of Congress, who heard all of the testimony and the evidence that was produced there, and then, finally, after debates in each House and the whole matter had been thoroughly gone over in conference, decided upon the present Railway Labor Board feature, than I would to take the results of the work of attorneys of the railway labor brotherhoods, who worked in secret to produce something that they were willing to present to Congress. Naturally, when they did that work, they were looking at these matters largely from a prejudiced and partisan standpoint.

It would be too much to expect these attorneys representing the brotherhoods and doing their work in secret without consulting the railroad executives, without referring to the thought of the country on this subject, to produce a bill which would protect the public in every respect in which the public should be protected.

Mr. RATHBONE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Michigan. I can not yield, I have not the time. The time has passed when it should be made possible for executives of the railroads and men working upon the railroads to get together and arrange without scrutiny a schedule of pay and the other things which mean expense and must necessarily be passed on to the public and be borne by them. So I say to my friend from Illinois that rather than tear to pieces the Railroad Labor Board, would it not be better at this time to amend the act where necessary? [Applause.]

It is needless to say that the subject of railroad legislation in all its aspects is one with reference to which I have a great deal of concern. I am well aware of the fact that the transportation act of 1920 is not fully satisfactory in every respect, either to the management of the railroads or to the men who are employed by the roads. This is not surprising in view of the fact that the legislation was necessary to meet the many complicated situations growing out of Government operation and in connection with the return of the roads to the former owners, and the fact that the legislation was along new lines. Even assuming that it was well based fundamentally, it would take a considerable number of years to correct features that experience under it would indicate should be changed.

The questions touched upon in the law dealing with railroads are of the most vital importance not only to the investors in railroad securities and the men who are employed on the roads, but to the general public as well, which is compelled to pay the bill through transportation charges. We should not approach the consideration of these questions from a prejudiced or narrow viewpoint.

The Howell-Barkley bill proposes to repeal the entire labor section of the present transportation act, do away with the United States Railroad Labor Board, and substitute therefor a number of so-called adjustment boards and a board of mediation and conciliation.

The unfortunate part of the present situation is that this bill was introduced in the House on the 28th of February, and in about six weeks proceedings were started to withdraw it from the committee, which could not previously take it up because of precedence having first been given to other measures. It is now being brought up for consideration by the House as a whole without any opportunity for hearings at which could be voiced the various and conflicting views that would necessarily exist with reference to such an important and far-reaching subject. I feel that those who are sponsoring this legislation are acting ill-advisedly in attempting to force it through Congress without a full opportunity not only for hearings and the expression of views by those who have studied and have had actual experience with the subject, but without a full reaction upon the part of the public generally. I believe that if this legislation should be forced through Congress at this time it would create a very adverse public opinion and would be viewed as was the Adamson law at the time it was adopted. It seems to me that every real friend of the railroad workers must now feel that it was a mistake to have given the Adamson proposal the appearance of having been forced through Congress so abruptly and without an opportunity for full discussion and consideration, even though the Adamson law may have been proper in itself.

Fortunately the present proposal is not being advanced by any threat of strike, but when all is said and done it is rather distasteful to be forced to consider and vote upon a matter which has not been thoroughly thrashed out, as can only be done in the regular way before a committee of Congress. With a large membership such as we have in this House, it is impossible to consider thoroughly and properly or rewrite on this floor a bill as comprehensive as the one now before us. It took the attorneys for the railroad brotherhoods 18 months to write this bill in the first instance. No one is so brilliant as to be able to produce a bill of this importance that would not be subject to many proper suggestions and changes, which can only be brought out by committee hearings and discussions. Neither can it be presumed that attorneys representing the railroad men's organizations alone could or would write the bill in such form as to protect other interests, including that of the public.

In this, as in all other matters, I propose to do the best I can under the circumstances and try to reach a fair and just conclusion and understanding of the subject without prejudice and without fear or favor, keeping in mind the best interests of our entire population.

As one who has gone through life only by the route that has involved constant struggle and effort, I have the greatest sympathy for workers in every line of activity.

While I regret that we are compelled to pass upon this matter with so little real definite information bearing upon it pro and con, yet in the light of present information on the subject I am compelled to say that I do not approve in several vital respects the measure which is now before us, and it will be impossible therefore to give it my support in its present form.

I would not so seriously object to the entire elimination of the Railroad Labor Board so as to leave the matter in such shape that through a board of mediation and conciliation, or otherwise, opportunity would be given for the employees of each road to adjust with the management of such road their difficulties and problems as they arise, either by direct negotiation or by arbitration. I believe, however, that it would be better not even to take that step at this time, but to retain the present Labor Board and add two members representing the public, so that the board would stand with five instead of three public representatives, two representing the railroads and two representing the employees. This would leave the matter of decision in the hands of the public representatives on the board, and I think that such an arrangement would give the decisions of the board greater weight with the country as a whole and with the railroads and their employees in particular.

In passing, permit me to say that I have not approved of the action of certain of the railroads in disregarding the decisions of the Labor Board as it is now constituted. I think such conduct is ill advised and should be severely condemned. My notion about these matters is that when we have a law, it does not make any difference what it is, everyone should live up to it and do his very best under it so long as it stands upon our statute books.

I can not approve the number or nature of the adjustment boards which are provided for under the Howell-Barkley bill. Forty board members, each with a salary of $7,000 per year, together with many attendant expenses, all to be paid out of the Public Treasury, seem to be entirely unnecessary. The work that these adjustment boards are supposed to do, in my opinion, can be better done by representatives of the men and management on each road, who can look after and attend to such matters as might come up on any given road at a nominal expense and without any charge upon the Government. That is the way that these matters are being handled at the present time, as I understand it, and I can see no reason for changing to the method proposed under this bill. The adjustment boards provided for by the bill would find it exceedingly difficult to arrive at decisions, because each party to a controversy would be equally represented on such boards. They are made up of an equal number of representatives of certain crafts from all of the railroads of the country and of the railroad managers generally. Two of these boards have 14 members each and two of them 6 members each. I do not believe that the plan proposed under the Howell-Barkley bill will do other than to accentuate in a nation-wide way controversies that may arise between the workers and railroad managers. It must be remembered that in addition to these boards there is also a proposed board of mediation and conciliation of five members, each with a salary of $12,000 per year. This board has no power to make decisions, and the only way that a controversy can be finally worked out, except by mutual agreement, is by arbitration boards chosen from time to time. The decisive factors on such arbitration boards would not have familiarity with railroad matters as would a permanent board. Furthermore, the adjustment boards provided for under the bill are named in effect by certain railway labor unions. These unions do not represent much, if any, more than one-half of the railway employees of the country. I can not approve of the idea of taking such steps as will obviously tend to force all railway employees either to have no representation upon these boards or to become affiliated, whether they desire to do so or not, with the unions that have the right to make such appointments.

The present transportation act does not apply to interurban or suburban electric railways not operating as a part of the general steam railroad system of transportation. The Howell-Barkley bill, on the other hand, is made expressly to apply to interurban and suburban electric railways operating as independent units or as a part of the general railroad system of transportation, and the bill under discussion also includes boats, barges, tugs, bridges, ferries, and other transportation facilities owned and operated by electric, gas, or steam railways. What is the purpose of including these instruments of transportation which were excluded by the act of 1920? As I view it, this has been done by the authors of the Howell-Barkley bill for the purpose of drawing into the railway labor unions all of the workers engaged in any way in transportation in this country, so that when in the future any controversy may arise the entire transportation system of every kind may be subject to be tied up by a general strike. Such a plan as this can not meet with my approval or support, although I have the most kindly feeling for the workers upon the railroads and wish to see them given full justice in every respect.

There are a number of other features of this bill which should not escape our attention. It is impossible for me to refer to all of the objections that should be made to this proposal. I do, however, wish to refer to the very disastrous effect upon the short-line railroads of the country if this proposal should be enacted into law. These small railroads, as a rule, are having a very difficult time to avoid bankruptcy. Anything that will add to their burdens or cause them greater financial difficulties will force many of them to cease operations entirely, to the detriment of the people they are now serving.

The nature and scope of this bill is such that it will unquestionably bring all of the employees upon these short-line roads to a standard of wage and activity which will apply to the larger roads of the country. As it is now, on these smaller roads most of the employees do anything that they may be called upon to do in connection with the operation of the road. Their work is light, as a usual thing, and they are glad to do this. To force upon these weaker roads the practices with reference to employees that are made to apply to the stronger roads can only result in a great and serious detriment to the sections of the country through which they run.

This proposal is one which should not have been brought before Congress in its present form, in my judgment, and, being here, should not receive the sanction of a majority of the Members of this House.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RATHBONE], in sponsoring the bill that is before us, quoted the late President Harding to sustain him in his position on this question. I was reminded as he quoted from his speech of some of the testimony that has been given before the committee of another body in reference to the attitude of men who have passed on.

Of course, there can be no question but what the views of President Harding on a question of this importance should carry considerable weight, although it would not be controlling. It would seem to me that the proponents of this bill before bringing in their character witnesses should at least prove their main facts by discussing the detailed provisions of the bill. So far in this debate this has not been done. But, Mr. Chairman, if the proponents choose to rely only on quoting the opinion of others they at least ought to be careful whom they quote and quote them correctly. I deny that President Harding ever advocated the passage of this bill or the general principles upon which it was drawn.

The President appeared before Congress on December 8, 1922, and called the attention of the people of this country to transportation conditions in general and the labor conditions in particular. He reminded us that the Railroad Labor Board, after hearing from the carriers, employees, and the general public and following a thorough investigation, had made a decision; that that decision had not been complied with and that the board was powerless to enforce it. The burden of his message to Congress, as any man reading it, reading it in its entirety, could tell, was the necessity for amending the law, not for the purpose of striking it out, not for the purpose of going back to the provisions that we had before, but by inserting some sort of a provision which would make their decisions effective.

Let me quote also from the same page given by the gentleman from Illinois:

> Only the public group of three is free to function in unbiased decisions. Therefore the partisan membership may well be abolished, and decisions should be made by an impartial tribunal. [Applause.]

He still speaks of the decision. There is nothing in the Barkley bill for a decision excepting through a mutual agreement arrived at through voluntary conference, voluntary adjustment, or voluntary arbitration. Then, even if both parties have agreed to submit the matter to arbitration, the decision only binds the carriers. It does not bind the individual workmen to abide by the award nor prevent them from conspiring or agreeing with others to break the award.

Let me read further:

> The substitution of a labor division in the Interstate Commerce Commission, made up from its membership, to hear and decide disputes relating to wages and working conditions which have failed of adjustment by proper committees created by the railways and their employees offers a more definite plan. [Applause.]

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No; I can not. The gentleman took 25 minutes and did not discuss one single provision of the bill. [Applause.] I do not want to be discourteous, but I want to try and have this bill here considered as if we were in a deliberative assembly and not doing business at the instance of any group, whether it is the propaganda the gentleman from Wisconsin referred to or at the instance of the propaganda to which the gentleman from Massachusetts referred to. [Applause.] I think it is time that the House of Representatives was doing business as a deliberative body free from the influence of propaganda from either of two selfish interests. [Applause.]

I would like to inquire why the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RATHBONE] did not read this paragraph to the Members when he quoted President Harding as approving the principles of the Barkley-Howell bill?

Mr. RATHBONE. All right; I presume the gentleman yields, then; does he not? He has asked me a question. Does the gentleman want me to answer it?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. RATHBONE. Very well. It is because what I read was sufficient condemnation for any fair-minded man, and stamped the bill with the approval of the President, and it was not necessary to read volumes to know where he stood.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. We will let the Members decide as to that question. Let me read further for the benefit of the gentleman and the House:

> Public interest demands that ample power shall be conferred upon the labor tribunal, whether it is the present board or the suggested substitute, to require its rulings to be accepted by both parties to a disputed question.

He wanted something that would require a compliance with the rulings of the board. There is not one single provision in this Barkley bill admitting of any such construction, nor is it contended by its advocates that there is any such provision. I read further:

> Let there be no confusion about the purpose of the suggested conferment of power to make decisions effective. There can be no denial of the constitutional rights of either railway workmen or railway managers. No man can be denied his right to labor when and how he chooses, or cease to labor when he so elects; but, since the Government assumes to safeguard his interests while employed in an essential public service, the security of society itself demands his retirement from the service shall not be so timed and related as to effect the destruction of that service.

Further:

> We have assumed so great a responsibility in necessary regulations that we unconsciously have assumed the responsibility for maintained service; therefore, the lawful power for the enforcement of decisions is necessary to sustain the majesty of government and to administer to the public welfare.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No. Mr. Chairman, here was the President of the United States calling for a tribunal which would have the power to enforce its decisions. Yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RATHBONE] cited this speech to the House as an example of his approving the provisions of a bill which has no enforcement power back of it excepting that it is enforceable as against the carrier.

I have referred to this not that I am in accord with all of the views expressed, but for the purpose of refuting the claim made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RATHBONE], that President Harding approved the provisions of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have been of the opinion for some time that the labor provisions were in need of substantial amendment. I doubted the wisdom of some of the provisions when they were under consideration here. A great many railway employees have been of like opinion. Their experienced representatives and able lawyers, after 18 months' deliberation, have finally agreed upon the provisions of this bill. Any bill so introduced in good faith should have the careful consideration of this House. In this connection it must be borne in mind that there are substantial groups of employees who are not included in these nationally organized crafts who have protested against the passage of this bill. The bill has the opposition of practically all the railway managements. Then there is the general public, interested incidentally in the employees, interested incidentally in the carrier, but interested primarily in obtaining transportation at a reasonable cost. Neither these groups of employees, the railway managements, nor the general public in any way participated in the 18 months' deliberations of those who drafted this measure.

This bill should first have been heard by a committee where all parties concerned could be heard. The public especially should have been given this opportunity, and it is the great mass of the public generally whom we in the House of Representatives primarily represent. [Applause.]

Mr. RATHBONE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I can not yield, I am sorry to say. An opportunity ought to be given to hear from each and every one of these parties. As a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, no representative of any carrier or employee ever came to me and even intimated a desire to have a hearing upon this bill. Mr. Chairman, we can not have representative government without deliberation, and we can not have deliberation without information coming from a congressional committee. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I was one of those who voted to put teeth in the decisions of the present Railway Labor Board I fought against and voted against the passage of the Esch-Cummins bill, but in the end when it became clearly apparent that there were but two alternatives, namely, to vote either for the conference report or to accept the unthinkable, vicious Plumb plan, I accepted the lesser evil.

When that bill was being considered, I then called attention to its worthless, expensive board members, and I predicted it would be condemned just as it is now by everybody, because it had no teeth. I voted for the Webster amendment which would have made it worth while, but in a mood the House created such a board as we have now, and you are preparing by this bill to create not one but five boards just as worthless, and each one far more extravagant, four of them with 40 members drawing $7,000 a year each, with the public having no representation upon them at all. The only board on which the public is represented is a little fifth board which has no jurisdiction at all, unless all of the parties agree to come before it. It can not function unless they all agree to come before it, and I know and you know they will never agree to come before it. Let us analyze this bill just for a moment.

We are reliably informed that this bill of 35 pages of printed matter was prepared by one class of people in the United States. We are reliably informed that it was specially prepared by representatives of the railroad employees. We may presume, therefore, if we knew nothing more about it, that it specially represents their interest; that it represents their views as they may be antagonistic to the views of all other classes of people that live in this country.

When the able and distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] first discussed this bill for an hour before it was taken from the committee, he said that to prevent the bill from being a partisan measure, on the same day he introduced it in the House it was also introduced in the Senate by a Republican. He being a Democrat and it being introduced in the Senate by a Republican was to keep it from being partisan. His idea of a partisan measure therefore seemed to be confined to a political standpoint. He thought if a Republican could introduce it in the Senate and a Democrat in the House there would be no partisanship about it. Well, there are several kinds of partisanship. Partisanship is not confined merely to politics. There could be a partisanship that would favor one class over another. And there is such partisanship in this bill to a superlative degree. While the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky was speaking he kindly yielded to me. I then said to him that he had intimated that the ideal situation on the settlement of disputes between railroad employers and employees was for them to sit across the table, the railroad employers on one side and the railroad employees on the other, with no other parties present, and for them to settle it in that way. I then asked him what about the other very important and very vitally affected third party to the transaction, the public, the 110,000,000 people of the United States, who had a just right to be at that settlement table, and what was going to be done in respect to them? I asked him why they, too, should not be at that council table, when their interests above all others are mostly involved, because they are the ones for whose benefit all railroads are operated and who pay the traffic tolls that are inaugurated and fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. They are the ones who pay the bills. The gentleman from Kentucky said, "I will discuss that a little later." But he devoted only one short sentence to a discussion of the public's rights. I want to show you what his discussion was. I have looked through his entire speech for a reference to the public, and find just one line, and here is what he says:

> There are some here who may think that the public only has an interest.

He stopped there and said nothing else. That is as far as he went in his argument concerning the rights and interests of the American people, and that is just as far as the 35 printed pages of his Barkley bill go with reference to the interests and rights of the 110,000,000 American people.

Let me show you just what this Barkley bill does, which 154 of you colleagues have taken from a committee of Congress, and which you are going to force on the floor of this House for passage without due consideration by any committee. Do you remember that petition which a member of the Republican steering committee, Mr. DARROW, brought in here, which covered that stand there, from 350,000 actual dirt farmers scattered all over the United States, telling you that they did not want you to create any more boards; telling you that they did not want you to create any more commissions; telling you that they did not want you to raise any more salaries or expenses of Government; telling you that they demanded that the expenses of the Government should be reduced? Do you remember that petition? It will pay us to remember it. Keep that in mind when you consider what this Barkley bill does, which was specially drawn up by the representatives of only one class of employees in the United States—certain employees of railroads, and for their especial benefit. It creates an adjustment board No. 1, to consist of 14 members, 7 railroad employers and 7 railroad employees. There is no public interest represented, no place whatever is made for the public, although it is most concerned; there is no looking after and providing for the interests of the general public at that round-table session. It is only a two-sided table, with the railroad employees on one side and the railroad empoyers on the other, and both willing to let the general public pay the bill. Each one of those 14 members of that adjustment board No. 1 is to receive a salary of $7,000, aggregating $98,000 alone for that one board. They are given a secretary at $4,000 a year, and they are given the right to employ just as many employees, including private secretaries, clerks, stenographers, and janitors, and messengers for each, as they want, and they are further given the authority to fix their salaries at whatever sum they deem expedient.

The bill also provides that these 14 members of this adjustment board No. 1 shall have a central office at Chicago, but that they may sit anywhere in the United States they desire. They may junket into every one of the 48 States. They can divide themselves up and sit anywhere over this big Nation at your expense and at mine.

Then there is also provided an adjustment board No. 2, likewise with 14 members, 7 from the railroad employers and 7 from the railroad employees. The public has been given no representation at all; the public has no representation whatever at this second two-sided counsel table or in its settlements. Each one of these 14 members of adjustment board No. 2 is to receive a salary of $7,000 a year, or an aggregate of $98,000. A secretary is provided for them also, at $4,000, and they, too, can employ just as many employees, including secretaries, clerks, stenographers, janitors, and messengers as they want and fix their salaries at will without any limitation whatever as to salary or number. They, too, can sit anywhere in the United States that they want to and junket regularly into every one of the 48 States at will.

Then we have provided in this bill an adjustment board No. 3, composed of six members, three railroad employers and three railroad employees. Again the public has no representation. The public has no look in; the public has not a right to say a word about their deliberations or settlements, although it will pay the bill. Each one of these members of adjustment board No. 3 is to receive a salary of $7,000 per year, or an aggregate of $42,000. They are also supplied with a secretary, at $4,000 a year, and may employ all the private secretaries, clerks, stenographers, janitors, and messengers they want at salaries they fix, and they can sit anywhere in the United States and junket regularly into all of the 48 States of the Union at public expense. We have to pay the bill out of the tax money in the Treasury that we levy upon the already tax-burdened people of our country.

Then there is provided in this Barkley bill an adjustment board No. 4, to be composed of six members, three railroad employers and three railroad employees, with the American public again given no representation whatever. The public is given no voice in the settlements, yet it will pay the bill. Each one of these members of adjustment board No. 4 is to receive a salary of $7,000 per year, or an aggregate of $42,000. They are given a secretary at $4,000 a year and they, too, are given all of the employees, including private secretaries, clerks, stenographers, janitors, and messengers, they want at salaries fixed by them. There is no limitation as to salary and no limitation as to kind or class or number of employees. It is within their discretion alone, and they, too, can sit anywhere in the United States that they desire and junket regularly into all of the 48 States at will, at the expense of the taxpayers of the country.

Do they stop there? Do you know how many members of boards that already makes? That already makes 40 high-salaried members of these various boards, and their salaries alone amount to $280,000 per annum, not counting the salaries of the army of their employees and their expenses. Do you not know that every one of these 40 commissioners will have to have a private secretary? That means 40 private secretaries; and don't you know that when they are not restricted as to fixing salaries they will pay them at least $5,000 a year each, which will amount to $200,000 more?

Then each one of these 40 commissioners of these four adjustment boards will have to have a clerk or two, and a stenographer or two, and a messenger or two, and a janitor or two to sit outside of their front door. I say to you that before you get through, under the provisions of this bill, you will be putting at least 500 new, high-salaried employees on the pay roll of this Government, with a pay roll ranging up to several million dollars.

That is not all. The Barkley bill then provides for a board of mediation and conciliation to consist of five members. Their salary is fixed at $12,000 a year each, or $4,500 more than a United States Senator receives, which is $60,000 per year for this board, and ultimately to hold office for seven years. It is provided that this board shall have authority "to employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, assistants, special experts, clerks, and other employees" as they deem necessary, without any limitation whatever by Congress either as to number of employees or the amounts of their salaries. You will have another Shipping Board situation, with an army of high-salaried, worthless employees. You will have another Department of Justice situation, with an army of high-priced attorneys and worthless employees on the pay roll that even they themselves can not count and keep up with.

After you appoint them all, what has been accomplished? Absolutely nothing! I was rather interested in the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. He is a very distinguished Member of this House. He is an able man, and when he speaks on this floor he speaks with authority; but I say to him concerning this bill he has introduced for one class of employees only, that if he would carefully study this bill he would not force it to be passed here without due consideration, no matter how many railroad employees there are demanding its passage. I gathered from what he said that we were going to have a workable means of adjustment that would force a final settlement; that would force a settlement upon all these men, employers and employees, with the public safeguarded; but when I looked through this bill and gave it careful study I found it was simply a makeshift, a sham, something that is as useless and worthless and decisionless, far more so than even the present board which we have. There is no improvement whatever.

It does not prevent strikes. On the contrary, just as many strikes as ever are possible under it. And in providing them these five boards, 40 of whom draw $7,000 and 5 of whom draw $12,000 each per year, we are granting to these railroad employees about ten times as many ways and means of forcing their will upon the railroads, which means forcing their will upon the public, for the public eventually and ultimately pays the full bill every time. When there is a raise in salary it is always passed on to the public. When there is an added expense put on the railroads it is always passed on to the public. It is the public, the 110,000,000 American people, who have to pay the bill.

FOUR ADJUSTMENT BOARDS ABSOLUTELY WORTHLESS

When controversies are submitted to any of these four adjustment boards, and they decide the issue, there is no way whatever to enforce the decision against the employees. It is possible that it could be enforced against the railroads. But it is very clear that the employees are given the privilege of disregarding and disobeying it at will. So what is the use of having these four boards of 40 members, each drawing $7,000 per year and each having a horde of high-salaried employees, and each authorized to incur huge expenses against the Government each year, when a decision made by any of them is absolutely worthless in that it is not enforceable against any employee? It is buncombe, pure and simple.

But when any of these four boards fail to decide a controversy submitted to them, which in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred they would do, as no board composed equally of railroad employees and railroad employers would ever agree, unless they could pass the burden of the agreement on to the public, the bill provides that in such cases such board would so notify the parties. And that is an end of action by such four boards of 40 members. A notice is sent to the parties that the board has failed to decide the issue.

AND THEN THE FIFTH BOARD FUNCTIONS

When the notice is given that the adjustment board has failed to decide the controversy, then the parties submit the matter to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, and through all of its gyrations provided for in the bill, in the end there is no way whatever to force any employee to abide by any decision. He is allowed to disregard and disobey any decision at will. No penalty whatever is placed on him.

AMPLE MEANS OF ESCAPE PROVIDED

And throughout the bill, where means of arbitration are provided, whenever the employees become dissatisfied with the deciding arbiter they are given many ways to have him sidetracked before final decision is made.

COURT APPEALS PROVIDED ARE FARCICAL

And the provisions in the bill providing for appeals to courts are futile and worthless, as the only thing the court decides is whether a decree is upheld or not, and when upheld the decree is not worth anything, as it can not compel any employee to abide by it, and employees will disregard and disobey it at will, as there is no penalty provided.

ATTEMPT TO CONTROL INTRASTATE AFFAIRS

In line 24, on page 2, and line 1, on page 3, the expression "or between points in the same State" is used in defining what "commerce" as controlled by this bill means, and such term clearly embraces intrastate railroads. And this would specially affect practically every short-line railroad in the United States.

WOULD MAKE RAILROADS HELPLESS UNDER STRIKE

In subdivision (2) on page 3 the following language is used:

> It shall be deemed a violation of the obligations herein imposed upon carriers for any carrier or its officers or agents to interfere with or attempt to influence or control, directly or indirectly, the organization of employees, or participate in the functioning thereof, or the designation of employees.

And so forth.

The above could be construed to prevent railroads from attempting to run their trains with other employees during strikes, and would make railroads absolutely helpless whenever a strike occurred. This would allow employees to force their will upon railroads, and thus force the public in the end to bear the burden and expenses of all forced settlements.

EACH AND ALL OF THE 40 MEMBERS GIVEN UNUSUAL POWERS

Subdivision (f) on page 12 has the following provisions:

> (f) When necessary to the efficient administration of the functions vested in any adjustment board created by this act, the board or any member thereof shall at any time, for the purpose of examination, require the production of, or have access to and the right to copy any book, account, record, paper, correspondence, or memoranda relating to any matter which the board is authorized to consider or investigate. Any person who upon demand refuses any member of any adjustment board such right of access or copying, or hinders, obstructs, or resists him in the exercise of such right, shall upon conviction thereof be liable to a penalty of $500 for such offense. Each day during any part of which such offense continues shall constitute a separate offense.

There will be 20 representatives of railroad employees on these four adjustment boards, and any one of them, and every one of them, is given the right to force every railroad and every railroad officer to turn over to them upon demand every book, account, record, paper, correspondence, or memoranda that any one of said 20 members might be seized with some insane desire to see, and would provoke endless worry, expense, dissatisfaction, annoyance, and trouble, all of which ultimately is visited upon the suffering public, which has to pay the bill and all expenses.

PRESENT PAY FIXED AS MINIMUM

Under section 6 the present pay to employees is fixed as the minimum, and can not be changed except by decision of the board provided for in this bill. And note that subdivision (B) of section 6 provides the following:

(B) Any attempted change of rates of pay, rules, or working conditions by the carrier without notice, or prior to final action as heretofore provided, shall be void, and the offender shall be liable in damages to each and every party aggrieved to the amount of double any loss occasioned by such unlawful action. Such damages shall be recoverable by appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district wherein the offense was committed, which proceeding may be brought by individuals or by representatives of classes of individuals aggrieved.

You will note that a penalty is fixed by the bill, should the carrier attempt to change the rates of pay, rules, or working conditions, but no such penalty is fixed on the employees, who may attempt any changes they desire, when, where, and how they desire, with no penalty against them whatever. We did not have to be told that this bill was specially drawn by representatives of certain railroad employees. Even a casual reading of it would reveal who drew it.

ARBITRATION ONLY BY AGREEMENT

Section 7 provides that there shall be arbitration only by agreement. As stated the other day by the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY], parties now can arbitrate by agreement without all these expensive 45 commissioners drawing salaries from $7,000 to $12,000 each. We do not have to have these expensive boards to make parties arbitrate "by agreement." They can do that now. What we need is a board to make them arbitrate, whether they want to or not, when the rights and interests of 110,000,000 people are vitally involved. And note the following proviso in section 7:

Provided, however, That the failure or refusal of either party to submit a controversy to arbitration shall not be construed as a violation of any legal obligation imposed upon such party by the terms of this act or otherwise.

The above clause alone ought to condemn this bill as a makeshift, a sham, and absolutely worthless.

MORE ADDITIONAL EMPLOYEES

In addition to the army of employees already mentioned as provided for in this bill, note that the following subdivision (7) of section 7 provides more employees and lets the board fix the salaries:

(7) The board may employ such assistants as it deems necessary and proper in carrying on the arbitration proceedings and fix the compensation of such employees. Whenever practicable, the board shall be supplied with suitable quarters in any Federal building located at its place of meeting or at any place where the board may conduct its proceedings or deliberations.

INDICATION OF WHAT THIS BILL WILL COST

In violation of the rules of the House, this bill attempts to make an appropriation. That is subject to a point of order. Just to cover the time between when the bill becomes a law and June 30, 1924, this bill appropriates $500,000 as an initial appropriation, which indicates what it is to cost hereafter.

In the first place, you can not force these men to arbitrate unless they want to. It is a voluntary matter with them. It is a matter that they can do or not do, according to their own preference. And then, after they submit to arbitration, and a decision is rendered, and all the appeals are gone through that they are given a right to resort to at great expense to the public, before the decision becomes final, the decision is not worth anything after it is rendered, as it carries with it no penalty.

Listen to this last paragraph. Let me read to you the last paragraph, which absolutely makes it a nullity. It says:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to require an individual employee or subordinate official to render labor or service without his consent, nor shall anything in this act be construed to make the quitting of his labor or service by an individual employee or subordinate official an illegal act, nor shall any court of the United States or of any State issue any process to compel the performance by any employee or subordinate official of such labor or service without his consent.

And that is the kind of a measure now offered the country, when it effects nothing but added expense. We are to provide five boards of 45 members, drawing salaries from $7,000 to $12,000 each, and given unlimited authority to employ all the employees they want and pay them all the salaries they want and go to all the expense they want, and have their vouchers paid on their own signatures, without acts of Congress; and then it is all worthless after we provide it. The decision is absolutely worthless.

I know that the public is not fairly represented here. The 110,000,000 people of the United States are not organized. They have not any newspaper that comes to us telling us what we shall do.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not yield, as I have only a few minutes. They have no organization to send us letters telling us that if we do not do so and so what will be done to us. They have no organized representatives to come and sit in the galleries to watch us on this momentous occasion. They are at home depending upon us, their Representatives in Congress, to do their voting and in their interests. Many of you who voted against taking this bill from the committee got just such a letter as was placed in the RECORD this morning by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW]. Ask your colleagues from Virginia who voted against taking this bill up and they will tell you that they received one. Ask your colleagues from Kentucky who voted against taking it up and they will tell you that they received one. What does that letter say? "If you do not come in here and vote to take this bill up and pass it to-day, they are going to put the matter before every voter in your district." I know how that appeals to you. I know that it is lots safer politically for us to take the path of least resistance, the easy path. The people back at home may not know anything about it, but these organized boys in the gallery do know about it. Their editors know about it, their newspapers and their officers know about it, and they are going to send them to our districts against us if we oppose them.

Three weeks ago I spoke against this bill. Three weeks ago my speech went into the RECORD. Two weeks ago to-day, I voted against taking this bill from its proper committee. What has happened? They are operating on me already. The last 10 days my opponent has spent here in Washington, not coming near me, but going from organization to organization in Washington, and from colleague to colleague seeking adverse statements against me to take to my district, to try to put me out of office. That is what happens to you when you oppose them.

I can hardly blame you. They can make it awfully unpleasant for you. They can influence newspapers against you, and cause them to place you in a bad light before the country. They can send delegates all over your district like they have done in mine in the years past. My district is as closely organized right now as any district in the United States. If I do not get 40 per cent of the labor vote of my district, I could not come to Congress. I want to say this to you—and I want to say this to the 1,200,000 railroad men who are pushing this bill through the Congress—I want to say to the numerous railroad representatives now in the gallery watching us, if everyone of you go to my district and work against me from now until the primary election, you can not put me out of Congress [applause], because my loyal people, many of whom are worthy members of union labor, know me better than you do, better than they know you, and you could not make them believe I am an improper person to send here to represent them. You could not do it. [Applause.] Let me tell you, colleagues, something. If you, colleagues, stood upon this floor and talked to them like I do, you would feel better. [Applause.]

I know that your union railroad constituents have wired you. They have wired me, too. Let me quote just a few of their telegrams:

SWEETWATER, TEX.

THOMAS L. BLANTON, Washington, D. C.:

Speaking for 2,000 members maintenance of way employees on the Texas & Pacific Railway, we urge you to work, vote, and do everything possible to bring about the passage of the Howell-Barkley railway bill.

R. A. FARRIS, General Chairman.

SWEETWATER, TEX.

T. L. BLANTON, Washington, D. C.:

Sweetwater Lodge 675, maintenance of way, composed of 100 members, earnestly urge that you get right and work and vote for passage of Howell-Barkley bill.

J. D. WEBSTER, President.

SWEETWATER, TEX.

THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.:

Texas & Pacific bridge gang No. 2, foreman and eight men urge you to work, vote, and do everything possible to bring about the passage of the Howell-Barkley railway bill.

W. A. SMITH.

BROWNWOOD, TEX.

Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.:

The Maintenance of Way Lodge desires you to support the Howell-Barkley bill, S. 2646.

Yours truly,

W. D. ANGELL, Secretary.

BALLINGER, TEX.

THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.:

This is to advise that we ask you to support the Howell-Barkley bill, S. 2646.

Yours truly,

W. R. WHITWORTH,
Secretary Local 1864, Ballinger, Tex.

The foregoing is a fair sample of them. But I am thinking more of the interests of the 315,000 people living in my district. Let me quote you one telegram from their organization. The West Texas Chamber of Commerce is composed of farmers, stockmen, merchants, laborers, lawyers, doctors, dentists, judges, preachers, teachers, bankers, clerks, editors, and every other class of persons living west of Fort Worth, Tex.:

BROWNWOOD, TEX., May 15, 1924.

T. L. BLANTON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

West Texas Chamber of Commerce, which is being attended by 20,000 people from all sections in annual convention assembled, Brownwood, May 13 to 15, by unanimous vote passed resolutions condemning Barkley labor bill and urge defeat of this measure. West Texas in dire need of more railroad facilities and feel that legislation of this nature will be detrimental, and besides organization expressed sentiments that public has rights that should remain inviolate. Hope to have your opposition to such a measure.

PORTER A. WHALEY, Manager.

I am thinking of the farmers who work all the year and make only $500 to $1,000 for their year's work. I am thinking of the worthy women and little girls who plow all day in the hot sun in Texas, Mississippi, and many other States, to make crops to feed city people, and then have to pay more in freight rates to get their crops to market than their products are worth.

Let railroad employees compare earnings with farmers, preachers, teachers, and clerks in stores and banks, and they will see how very favored they now are. I am for the really poor people of the country first. I am no better than you colleagues are; I am no braver than you colleagues are; it is just because I believe that I know the pulse of the people of my district a little better than you know the pulse of the people of your district that I am willing to disobey these unions. Why, some of the strongest union-labor men in my district will back me up when I get home, because I am going to take this bill home and explain it to them. I am going to tell them about these five extravagant boards of 45 members being placed on the pay roll.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Forty-five men to be paid from $7,000 to $12,000 a year out of the Treasury. I am going to tell them what that means to them in taxation. I am going to show them that in opposing this bill that I am representing the 110,000,000, and not the little 1,200,000 that are interested in this bill. Oh, they say, it is going to prevent strikes.

What is in the bill to prevent strikes? What is in the bill to make a man work if he says, "I am not going to work"? Not a thing. On the contrary, there is a provision in this bill which says that not a decision that could be rendered by any one of these boards could make any man work unless he says, "I am willing to work." That is the condition of this bill. Now, if you will substitute a proper bill here, if you will help the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER]—and there is not a better friend of organized labor in the world than COOPER of Ohio—pass his substitute bill, H. R. 9298, it would be far better. He has fought their troubles here on this floor; he knows what is good for them; he has got the bravery to stand up here and fight for what he believes is right, and he is a very able and worthy citizen of the United States who has good judgment; he has spent 17 years in an engine cab, and if you help him pass his bill that he has here for an alternative for these worthless boards, a bill that will protect the railroad men and at the same time protect the public, I will vote for his bill, I will vote with you to help pass it.

Mr. WEFALD. He voted to get this bill before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; do you blame him? So did you.

Mr. WEFALD. I did.

Mr. BLANTON. He has the same kind of constituents at home you have, probably——

Mr. WEFALD. And I am proud of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Except they are a little different. [Laughter.] What are you going to do about this bill? Are you going to let this organization, strong that it is—I know it is strong—force the passage of this bill? In its weekly paper it has already sent our names to our districts. Those who did not vote to take this bill up have been put on a blacklist. Those of you who have voted to take it up have been put on the white list. Your constituents have been told about it. They have been told to reward you and to punish us, and there is a slogan here in Washington that organized union labor stands by and reelects its friends and it fights and defeats its enemies. That is the slogan.

Mr. WEFALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. If they will give me more time.

Mr. WEFALD. What about organized capital?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I have not any more use for it than I have for organized anything else. I am for the 110,000,000 people of the United States and not for any class. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, of any bill that has been before this House since the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] arrived that was for the benefit of the men and women who toil but what the gentleman did not oppose it. He has been against the poor woman, the poor child, and the poor man of this country from the first speech he has made until this hour. [Applause.] Of course, we can not have a bill introduced here for any employees in any department of the service of the Government or on the farms or in the industries of this country that would suit the gentleman from Texas. Whom he represents I do not know; but I do know that he appeals to the great, wealthy manufacturing classes of this country to contribute to his campaign in order that he may be here to misrepresent the toiling people of the United States. [Applause.] He complains now of this bill and every other one that helps laboring people. He says the public is not represented. What portion of the public does he represent? According to the statistics, 85 per cent of the people of the United States are laboring people, and he fights them all the time in their legislation. This bill is in many respects a good measure. The Labor Board ought to be abolished and this measure substituted in its place. It has in it the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, which represents the public. Where is the public represented in the iniquitous Esch-Cummins bill?

You know that 2,000 cases have been absolutely ignored which the Labor Board passed on. You know that that very bill was framed by the owners of railway securities, represented by their attorney, Mr. Thom. It was framed at the instance of the railroad owners in the United States, and the public was not considered at all. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that of course the agricultural people of this country—the farmers and the workers who get their freight on the railroads—are not represented in the Esch-Cummins measure. They are overcharged from one end of the United States to the other. They are overcharged on the fertilizer that they must have, the freight rate in the South being 116 per cent higher than it was in 1914; and in some portions of the North and West it rises some 200 per cent more. Yet the gentleman says here that that is a fine measure.

Yes; gentlemen from the agricultural districts are going to get some help for the farmers. We are asking you now to help us pass this bill and sign up the petition to secure the consideration of a bill to repeal section 15a, to allow the farmers to get decent freight rates. That is all we ask. We can not get one piece of legislation through by itself. We are bound to work together as farmers and laboring friends. These laboring people are entitled to relief and the farmers of the country are entitled to relief, and it can not come from the gentleman who heads the important Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or from the gentleman who heads the important Committee on Appropriations. It must come from that part of the House which represents the farmers and laboring people.

The great Chamber of Commerce of the United States, with its magnificent marble-front building here on Pennsylvania Avenue, had propaganda sent all over the United States not to molest the transportation act. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States claims that the operation of that act is so fine that it must not be interfered with. They started that propaganda back in December. What for? They wanted to impress upon every Member of Congress that that act was working finely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. QUIN. May I have three minutes more?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. QUIN. They said the transportation act was working so finely for the railroads and for the holders of railroad securities that it must not be molested or interfered with. Not one of that group ever said that the freight rates were too high. None of them ever said, "We will stand by your farmer friends to get freight rates lowered." They never intended that amendments to the railroad bill should be brought up, and none could be considered by the House if it were not for a revision of the rules. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair kindly advise me how many minutes remain on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 26 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Ohio 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Kentucky 40 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I can not get the time properly to present this matter to the House here, and I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, in the few moments given me I shall attempt to call the attention of the House to a few plain facts that it seems to me should guide us in our vote upon this bill entitled:

A bill to provide for the expeditious and prompt settlement, mediation, conciliation, and arbitration of disputes between carriers and their employees and subordinate officials, and for other purposes.

This title sounds good, but I shall attempt to show that this is a bill to fool the people, to deceive the farmers, to injure the laboring man, to burden the taxpayers, and to inevitably bring upon this country the waste and destruction of Government ownership of railroads.

It has been said by the proponents of this bill that it is not a party measure, and yet we find lined up in this House in support of the measure the solid Democratic Party together with its allies, the so-called Farm-Labor Republican radicals.

Three weeks before the national election in 1916 it was understood and believed all over the country that Hon. Charles E. Hughes, now Secretary of State, would be elected President. The Democratic Party was in desperate straits. They had no issues and no record to which they could successfully appeal to the people.

In this crisis organized labor, more particularly railroad-organized labor, induced Representative Adamson, then Democratic chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, to introduce a bill, drawn by organized union-railroad labor, that would raise the wages of the employees all along the line; and they insisted as a price for their votes that the Democratic Party should be delivered to them in the passage of that bill, or they would strike on the eve of the election. President Wilson and his party joined hands with the great railroad organizations throughout the country, passed the bill, and Hughes was defeated.

We did not understand it at that time as anything more than a political move on the part of certain politicians which was successful, but we now know it was the first step in this railroad-labor program to obtain Government ownership of railroads. That Adamson Act forced upon this country the 8-hour day upon railroads and the increase in the railroad-labor bill by $271,000,000 in 1917 over the previous year.

Then came the great World War when the railroad employees, whose forces had been doubled and whose wages had been greatly increased, united with the administration to force Government control during the war. And then during the period of four years they raised wages from $271,000,000 in 1917 to more than eight times, or $2,230,000,000 in 1920.

Further, the Government operation of railroads during the war was conducted by labor with the intent and purpose to force this Government, under the Plumb plan, to take over the railroads and put them under Government ownership for the future. Under Government control there was combined against the railroads, war-time wages, war-time taxes, increased employees, increased taxes, until in 1920 the taxes alone for that year against the railroads amounted to $279,000,000, whereas the return to the railroads on the capital invested in that year amounted to only $62,000,000.

In 1920 the railroads were returned to their owners in accordance with the contract we made with them when they were placed under Government control. In that year the wages paid by the railroads in this country exceeded in amount the total gross earnings of the railroads in 1916. In other words their gross earnings in 1916 were $3,596,865,766, while the wages they paid in 1920 were $3,698,216,351, an excess of $101,350,585.

Director General James C. Davis of the United States Railroad Administration during the war said that when the books were finally closed they showed that Government operation cost the taxpayers of the Nation practically $2,000,000,000.

In 1920, the war having come to an end, the Congress in carrying out its agreement in its contract with the railroads returned them to their owners under the transportation act of 1920, and under the act, which has since been in operation, a Labor Board was provided.

The provisions of that Labor Board were as extensive and their authority as unlimited as the bill before us. Section 301 laid down this injunction upon the carriers and their employees:

It shall be the duty of all carriers and their officers, employees, and agents to exert every reasonable effort and adopt every available means to avoid any interruption to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employee or subordinate officials thereof. All such disputes shall be considered and, if possible, decided in conference between representatives designated and authorized so to confer by the carriers, or the employees or subordinate officials thereof, directly interested in the dispute. If any dispute is not decided in such conference, it shall be referred by the parties thereto to the board which, under the provisions of this title, is authorized to hear and decide such dispute.

This Railroad Labor Board is composed of nine members, three constituting the labor group representing the employees and subordinate officials of the carriers, three constituting the management group representing the carriers, and three members constituting the public group representing the public, all appointed by the President. No fairer court for the settlement of disputes could be devised by the human mind.

Of course, it is well known that there is no such thing in law as compulsory arbitration. In other words, by all the decisions of the courts Congress could not provide by law that the railroads and their employees should be compelled to submit their disputes to any tribunal, and even the bill before us does not attempt to provide for such court or board of arbitration.

The present Labor Board has been functioning from 1920 to the present time. It has not been wholly satisfactory to the public. Its decisions have not always been approved by the railroad owners nor agreed to by the railroad employees. It could not be expected to satisfy everybody, having no power to enforce its judgments and decrees. And yet everything that can be done under this bill could be done under the present Labor Board in the settlement of disputes between the carriers and their employees.

A multitude of decisions have been rendered by the present Labor Board, both for and against the railroads and for and against the employees, of minor matters, grievances, and conditions growing out of the work. The only real, serious disputes coming before the board have been the matter of wages, which this bill can not settle any more than the present Labor Board.

Immediately after the passage of the Esch-Cummins law returning the railroads to their owners and organizing this Labor Board union labor accepted the law at once and made application for a wage increase in addition to the amount allowed them during Government control, upon the ground that the cost of living had risen to a point where it was necessary to receive more wages.

In July, 1920, the board gave a hearing to both parties and then decided that the railroad employees and railroad union workers should be granted an increase of more than 20 per cent—in the whole aggregating $600,000,000 per year. This was under a decision of the nine members—three representing the railroads, three the railroad workers, and three the public—and no one questioned the increase to the workmen; the railroads accepted it, and every interest abided by that decision.

This increase of wages continued until 1921, when the railroads proposed a decrease in wages by reason of the decrease in the cost of living, and the board, after full hearing of both sides, ordered a 12 per cent reduction effective July 1, 1921. This would be an annual saving to the railroads of four hundred millions per year.

This continued until 1922, when the Interstate Commerce Commission ordered a cut in the railroad freight rates of about $400,000,000 per year, thus wiping out the savings of the railroads in July, 1921. The railroads then applied to the Railroad Labor Board for a further reduction of wages that they might meet the reduction in freights, and the board after full hearings rendered a decision announcing a cut of forty-eight millions per year from the pay of the 400,000 maintenance-of-way workers. On June 6 it ordered a reduction of about sixty millions in wages of the 400,000 shopmen. On June 16 it ruled that there should be a decrease of $26,500,000 annually in the pay of clerical and station forces. This would then leave to the men sixty-five millions of the six hundred millions increase in 1920.

These decisions of the Railroad Labor Board were not accepted by the railroad employees, and they at once ordered a strike of the 400,000 shopmen.

I have not time to review that terrible strike of 1922, which was a deliberate attempt on the part of union railroad labor to tie up the transportation systems of this entire country, and for a time they succeeded.

Under Federal laws locomotives could not be used without daily inspection and examination as to their safety and repair. Repairs could only be efficiently made by the shopmen, and they had refused to work. The striking shopmen went further than this. They used force to prevent workers outside of their organizations taking the place of the strikers. They went further than this, and all over the country set about to injure and make defective every locomotive and endanger the lives of the public when traveling as passengers and thus bringing transportation to a standstill in the Nation.

The Attorney General of the United States, in behalf of the Government, quickly obtained evidence of over 50,000 violations of law by the strikers who had attempted by force to put out of commission and destroy the rolling stock of the railroads. With this evidence he appeared before the Federal courts and obtained a temporary injunction preventing further violations and criminal acts of the strikers against the transportation of the country.

On a hearing to make the injunction permanent the railroad strikers appeared by their attorneys and a full hearing was had. The court decided against the strikers and made the injunction permanent. This, of course, destroyed the strike, for without the weapon of violence the strike is always ineffective.

This rail strike cost our Government over one and one-half million dollars. The loss of wages during the strike has been estimated at over $2,000,000, while the cost to the public, both the consumer and the producer, reached a much higher figure.

This action of the Government made it almost impossible to make effective any strike in the future. This defeat of the unions in their attempt to hold up the Government and to challenge the authority and decisions of the Labor Board greatly incensed organized railroad labor, and they at once set about to obtain Government ownership of railroads.

The first move was to organize a propaganda against the Railroad Labor Board and to prejudice its work and decisions for the future and to seek its repeal.

In the congressional elections of 1922 organized labor made an issue before the people of the injunction obtained under the Republican administration against strikes. They formed a combination with certain radical farm organizations, socialists, and discontented, defeated politicians, claiming that the Harding administration was opposed to labor and the farmer and that these two should join in a Farm-Labor bloc to obtain their own Representatives in the next Congress.

The Democratic Party, then in a hopeless minority in Congress, readily formed a combination and fusion with these Farm-Labor organizations and railroad unions and sent to this Congress a large number of so-called independent Farm-Labor bloc Representatives and many Socialists.

So effective has been the work of the Labor Board and this injunction against the strike that for the last two years there has been no strike upon any railroad. The employees and the railroad executives have made their agreements between themselves, settled their differences by mutual understandings, until 75 per cent of all the railroads in the country to-day have no need of any Labor Board of any kind to settle their disputes.

This has not, however, satisfied certain groups of organized railroad labor leaders, who, recognizing the fact that a national election is near at hand and the Members of the Sixty-eighth Congress are soon to go home for reelection, have cunningly and craftily entered upon a political move to secure Government ownership of railroads at this time.

At the opening of the Sixty-eighth Congress it was very apparent to all that the Democrats in Congress had formed a fusion and coalition with leaders of radical railroad unions and these independent Farm-Labor bloc Members of Congress for the purpose of putting over the program of the so-called radicals, to wit, this Barkley bill and the McNary-Haugen price-fixing agricultural bill, and at the same time preventing the Republican administration from carrying out successfully its policy of legislation.

In the organization of the House of Representatives this Farm-Labor bloc, so called, brought about a deadlock for Speaker, and it became evident that the Democrats were willing to prevent the organization of the House by voting for their own candidate and encouraging the radicals to have a candidate of their own. The only way to prevent a deadlock and to elect a Republican Speaker was to make a compromise with the 17 so-called Farm-Labor bloc Members, who were voting and acting with the Democrats on every occasion. The price of this compromise was an agreement on the part of the Republicans to immediately bring before the House a revision of the rules of the House. This broke the deadlock and a Republican Speaker was elected by a few votes.

When the question of rules came before the House the Democrats and these radical Republicans or Farm-Labor Members again formed a majority against the regular Republicans in the revision of the rules. Their first act was the repeal of the rule adopted by the Democrats in the first Wilson administration that prevented the putting of amendments on revenue bills in the House, which rule was made necessary to pass revenue legislation. The result of this legislation was to open the late tax bill to disastrous amendments that defeated the Republican administration in the House.

The next move of this Democratic Farm-Labor combination was to adopt a rule that on application of 150 Members any bill in any committee might be immediately brought to the floor of the House and without debate put upon its passage. At that time no intimation was made that this combination on the part of the Democrats and the radical Republicans was formed for the purpose of bringing into the House and passing the radical railroad legislation contained in this bill; but that was no doubt the object of the rule.

Immediately after the adoption of this new rule to take bills from the committee without consideration and to pass them without consideration, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], Democrat, took the floor and announced that railroad union labor had prepared a bill that would abolish the Railroad Labor Board and would form five new railroad labor boards, and that bill had been sent by him to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and had not been considered by that committee, and that he intended to immediately file at the Clerk's desk a petition signed by 150 Members under this new rule, for the purpose of at once bringing this bill out of the committee without a hearing and to force it through the House without consideration.

In presenting this bill to the House the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] attempted to explain it as a great measure that would settle forever all railroad labor disputes on wages and every other matter arising between carriers and their employees and subordinate officials, and in the course of his remarks—RECORD of April 15—he said:

> If Congress shall enact this bill into law it will do more to restore the confidence of the great body of the public and of the working people of the United States in the agencies of government to adjust their disputes than any other legislation which has been proposed since I have been a Member of Congress. * * * When this motion has been submitted, I trust if the committee to which it has been referred does not take action upon it the House will, and having taken that action it will pass the bill and send it to the Senate, so that the Senate may enact it into law and we may complete what I believe to be one of the most constructive pieces of legislation that has ever been submitted to the Congress of the United States for the settlement of the problems of labor and those who employ labor.

Immediately on the filing of this motion to take this bill from the committee without hearing and pass it under this new rule, Members of Congress were flooded with labor propaganda to pass this bill without hearings, with the threat that if the bill was defeated the Members of Congress voting against this measure would also be defeated in the coming election.

An examination of this bill (H. R. 7358) discloses at once its serious and revolutionary nature. It repeals the present Railroad Labor Board of 9 members, composed of 3 members representing the carriers, 3 representing the employees, and 3 representing the public, and then substitutes for this board two adjustment boards of 14 members each and two of 6 members each, 40 members in all, at salaries of $7,000 per year; also 4 secretaries at $4,000 per year, and many other employees to be paid by the Government, their compensation to be fixed by the boards.

Then there would be a separate board of five members at $12,000 per year each with assistants and attorneys, and so forth, making in all an estimated cost of about $1,000,000 per year.

These four boards of adjustment are to be made up of an equal number from the railroads and from the railroad employees. The public or the Government is not mentioned or represented except in the paying of the bills.

By the provisions of the bill more than half of the railroad employees of the country are shut out from its provisions, and in its final decisions the railroads are bound but the railroad unions are not bound.

The main purpose of the bill is to put the arbitration of all disputes into the hands of the organized unions and to bring about Government ownership of railroads. Unless the parties agreed to arbitrate their differences under these adjustment boards these several boards have no authority or power to force the parties to arbitration, and without this agreement they have no authority to enforce their judgments and awards.

The true purpose of the Barkley bill was disclosed by an item in the last Sunday papers, which reads as follows:

THIRD PARTY SUPPORTED—KANSAS FARMER-LABORITES BACK UNITED STATES RAIL OWNERSHIP

SALINA, KANS., May 17.—The Kansas Farmer-Labor Party, at its convention here to-day, voted approval of the national third-party movement. A resolution was adopted which recommends affiliation with the national Farmer-Labor Party. Other resolutions favored the repeal of the Esch-Cummins Transportation Act and advocated Government operation of railroads.

Shortly before his death President Harding discussed at Kansas City the railroad-transportation question, the burden of high rates upon the farmer, and many other factors in the transportation problem. He spoke of the demand in some quarters for Government ownership and operation, and as to the former he said:

I believe it would be a colossal blunder, which would destroy initiative, infect us with political corruption, create regional jealousies, and impose incalculable loss upon the Public Treasury.

This complicated, ill-considered, revolutionary Barkley bill before us has been held out to the laboring man and the farmer as a great relief from financial troubles and a great benefit to the public in general. Why fool ourselves or attempt to fool the people? This bill is here for election purposes only. This combination between Democrats and radical Republicans is, first, for the purpose of obtaining new Members of Congress in the House and Senate at the next election that will fight the present administration, consolidate labor within the Democratic Party, bring about Government ownership of railroads, and destroy the great transportation systems of this country.

Do not let us further attempt to fool the public. Railroad rates could not be fixed or adjusted by this bill. That is done by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This bill is to give the railroad employees higher wages and shorter hours than that given in any other employment. There can be no natural or business alliance for the benefit of the public between railroad unions and farm blocs.

The farmer wants lower freight rates, but he can not receive lower freight rates when the million or more railroad employees are to receive higher wages. A raise in the present wages of the railroad employees—which are higher to-day than that of any other industry—must of necessity raise the freight rates upon the railroads.

An adjustment of the wages of railroad employees on an equality with wages received in other employments would mean lower freight rates for the farmer. The only way to obtain Government ownership of railroads and give them over to the railroad unions to operate is to wreck the railroads, raise the wages of the employees, burden the roads with new regulations, and handicap them by the methods proposed in this bill.

I represent a farming constituency, but I realize that my constituents receive no benefits but only higher taxes and freight rates from the passage of this bill. My farmers are interested in receiving regular and good service upon the railroads, and especially reasonable freight rates. They can not obtain these under Government ownership, which has been a failure in every country in this world where it has been tried, and which ruined almost beyond redemption the wonderful railroad system we built up in this country prior to the war.

Increased railroad wages must come out of the farmers as well as the great public outside of the railroad employees. No railroad company has a dollar with which to pay wages except it has to collect it from the public. Under the present Railroad Board and the injunction, strikes upon the railroads have become impossible.

My farmers do not believe that the same men who forced upon this country the Adamson law of 1920, who ordered the shopmen strike in 1922, have now framed a bill for the public and the farmers' interests.

As one who has always stood for the best interest of organized labor, as one who is not influenced by any organization or combination of capital or labor, as one who represents no interest but that of the people of the whole country and their welfare, I protest against the passage of this bill, which can only bring disputes, grievances, labor wars, and disaster upon this peaceful industrious Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine yields back half a minute.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SPROUL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it seems to me we get very much wrought up over the question of propaganda; to my way of looking at it, unnecessarily so. Under the Constitution I believe that we all have the right, wherever we may be in this United States, to petition Congress, to memorialize Congress. Hence why get so wrought up, as some of us do, over this question of propaganda? It not only is not wrong for us to receive the views of the public, but I think it is perfectly right, both for and against these bills; and why throw one fit after another over this propaganda? [Applause.]

Now it seems to me that in this committee we should consider the bill before us thoughtfully and considerately, in connection with the ideals and principles of our Government. It has been said that this bill is undemocratic; that it is unrepublican. Whether it is or not, in my candid judgment it is un-American.

We find in this country about 1,500 or more lines of railroad, and we find that the employees engaged in the operation of these lines of railroad number about 1,200,000—in other words, about 1 per cent, perhaps, of the total population of our country. And we find that the gross receipts of these great transportation arteries of our country, without which the Nation could not live, are about six and a quarter billion dollars a year. Think of it! Six and one-quarter billion dollars a year are paid to the railroad companies, to be paid out very much in wages. Now this six and one-quarter billion dollars is exacted from the 109,000,000 of people without their consent, without their representation on the boards provided for by this bill. I have reference to the four boards. The bill provides for the payment, by the 110,000,000 of people in the United States, of three or four hundred thousand dollars per year without representation.

Now if I remember correctly, about the years 1774–1776 the people of this country were very much opposed to the idea of taxation without representation. It was plain then, as I think it is now, that it is unfair and unjust and wrong to tax the people without representation. So we find to-day involved in this bill the policies of King George that were used against the people of this country in 1776. We said then that we would revolt against it; that we would not stand for taxation without representation. And so we revolted, as I think we should revolt against this bill. It calls for taxing the people of this country three or four hundred thousand dollars per year without their representation. Before railroads can be operated there must be contracts made between the employees and the railroad companies. There must be at least two parties to every legal contract. The contract made in this instance between the employees and the roads ignores a proper party that should be a party to the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. SPROUL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] a little while ago went out of his way to call attention to the manner in which the North and South Dakota delegations voted when the motion was made in this House to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from further consideration of the bill now before us. Then he spent a great deal of time telling us all about the propaganda originating in South Dakota and intimated that the South Dakota delegation had been influenced by that propaganda in its vote here in this House. I want to say to the gentleman that I have not received a single communication from any responsible official of the railways in my State since I came to Congress asking me to vote upon any proposition in favor of the railways. Those gentlemen know my record too well, during the 10 years I served upon the bench, to seek any favors from me as a Member of Congress outside of what I believe they are justly entitled to. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, they are not swamping me with propaganda; they are not asking me to support this, that, or any other kind of legislation. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another class in my district that has written me in regard to this bill. That class is made up of some of the boys I know personally who are working upon the railways in various capacities. I have a whole stack of letters and telegrams from those fellows, and if it were not for cluttering up the RECORD I would ask leave to insert them here to show you that not everybody in the railway service is in favor of this kind of a bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that on any kind of board of adjustment to settle railway disputes there should be representation on the part of all the employees and not simply representation on the part of the nationally organized crafts. [Applause.]

As soon as it became evident that an effort was to be made to force the Howell-Barkley bill out of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee without a hearing and without a report upon the measure having been submitted for the information of the Congress by any committee of either body, I at once procured a copy of the bill and made a study of its provisions. By the time this study was completed I had become convinced that the House ought not to undertake its consideration without a full hearing upon its merits and without the assistance of a report by the committee in charge of the bill. The chairman of the committee, during the discussion had in connection with the discharge motion, assured the House that hearings upon the bill would be proceeded with at an early date. The same assurance was given by other members of the committee. In view of the situation as it then stood, I refused to join in signing the discharge motion. The required signatures, however, were obtained, and on a close vote it was decided to discharge the committee and take the bill up for immediate consideration under the general rules of the House. Since then a tremendous propaganda has been conducted by the nationally organized crafts representing the various railroad brotherhoods, and a large number of paid lobbyists of such brotherhoods have personally visited practically every Congressman in this House in an endeavor to stampede and browbeat them into the support of this bill. Regardless of the merits of the measure, the methods adopted by the paid representatives of organized labor are wholly without justification and are of a character not designed to appeal to the judgment and conscience of the Members of Congress, but are calculated and intended to scare them into the support of the measure regardless of its merits and in total disregard of how the public might be affected by its provisions.

SAMPLES OF LETTERS RECEIVED

Let me give you a few samples of the character of communications sent to Members of Congress. The first ones received, while couched in respectful language, generally contained veiled threats. Of these the following is a fair sample:

[System Federation No. 76. Jurisdiction, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. Leased and operated lines. Affiliated with the railway department, American Federation of Labor]

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 1, 1924.

To the Hon. W. WILLIAMSON,
Care House Office, Capitol Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have just received a record of those Representatives in Congress who signed the motion to discharge the House of Representatives' Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from further consideration of House bill No. 7538, which is more commonly known as the Howell-Barkley bill.

We are very sorry to note the absence of your name from the record of those who supported the motion to discharge the committee, and as your constituency in the State you represent contains many voters who are associated with the organizations we represent, who are vitally interested in the enactment of the above-mentioned Howell-Barkley bill, the undersigned, speaking as their representatives, sincerely hope that you will give this bill your whole support when it comes up for consideration, because it must be obvious, beyond question or doubt, that the labor portion of the transportation act of 1920 is entirely incompetent to function as it was intended, as was evidenced by the utter incompetency of the United States Railroad Labor Board to adequately deal with the disputes between the railroad managements and their employees in 1922 and subsequently.

* * * * * * *

We trust that you may be disposed to explain your attitude toward the proposed legislation in such a manner as to restore the dissolving confidence of the members of your constituency who depend upon the undersigned for advice and counsel.

* * * * * * *

Yours very truly,

JOHN JOHNSON.
JOHN PELKOFER.
JAS. H. GUTRIDGE.
JOHN KOLANDA.
GEO. H. PEDERSEN.
W. C. SCHROEDER.

All of the above signers are members of the executive board of Federation No. 76.

Note the language in the concluding paragraph:

We trust that you may be disposed to explain your attitude toward the proposed legislation in such a manner as to restore the dissolving confidence of the members of your constituency who depend upon the undersigned for advice and counsel.

Clearly the purpose of this is to put Members of Congress on notice that unless they fall in line and pass the bill their reelection will be contested by the organizations represented by those who have joined in signing the communication.

Another one, under date of May 13, written on the letterhead of the Joint Federation of Shop Craft Employees, Northwest Railroads, and sent to Members of Congress from the Northwestern States, reads in part as follows:

ST. PAUL, May 13, 1924.

To the Senators and Congressmen, Northwest States.

GENTLEMEN:

* * * * * * *

If you are one of those who heard the call of special privilege and big business and voted against the bill [Howell-Barkley], when you return home tell your constituents the truth; say, "I represented you when big business told me that I could." In view of this, can you consistently ask for their suffrage again, or will you be satisfied to be placed in the discard or assigned to the lame-duck division?

However, it is not too late to mend your ways. Perhaps you made an error in not voting for the bill; if so, make the correction when it comes up for a vote and thereby place yourself in the position of a true representative of the people.

To the progressives who have carried the fight for proper legislation over the opposition of the reactionaries, much credit is due, and rest assured, honorable sirs, the folks back home are mighty proud of you and will show their appreciation at the ballot box by a decisive majority in favor of the true representatives of the people, such as yourselves.

With best wishes for your success in putting into effect legislation in the interest of humanity, we are,

Very truly yours,

John Williams, secretary-treasurer Federated Shop Crafts, Northwest Railways (general chairman carmen); Arthur Corrigan, general chairman Sheet Metal Workers' District Council; Albert Brown, general chairman Firemen and Oilers; F. H. Wibel, general chairman Blacksmiths, district 25; R. A. Henning, chairman Federated Shop Crafts, Northwest Railways; W. A. Parranto, general chairman Boilermakers, No. 25; C. J. McGlojan, general chairman Electrical Workers, regional council; S. L. Gipple, general chairman Railway Carmen, district 1.

The grotesque assumption that all Members of Congress who voted against the discharge rule are aligned with big business and special privilege is so patently false and unfair that no answer is required. The further charge that such Congressmen are reactionaries is equally unfounded. According to these men, who, in my judgment, misrepresent labor as a whole, any man who does not abjectly bow to their every command and who has the courage to stand up for his convictions and the rights of the people is a reactionary. On the one hand, we who represent the great Northwest are charged by big business as being radicals, and on the other we are denounced by the votaries of labor as reactionaries. Verily, he who comes here imbued with the idea that he is to represent the whole people must be a most skilful pilot if he is to keep the ship of his constituents from being wrecked by the Scylla of big business on the one hand or the Charybdis of militant labor leaders on the other.

On Saturday I received the following pungent communication from a man who claims to represent a good many constituents of mine:

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN,
SOUTH DAKOTA STATE LEGISLATIVE BOARD,
Marmarth, N. Dak., May 13, 1924.

Hon. C. A. CHRISTOPHERSON,
Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
Hon. WILLIAM WILLIAMSON (South Dakota),
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: This board technically represents not only about 350 members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen in South Dakota but voices the sentiment of every railroad worker in the State.

I have before me a record of your vote on the motion to discharge the committee on the Howell-Barkley bill. You are all running true to form; you have been on the wrong side on every issue that concerned us all the time. We take this occasion to tell you just what we think of you.

It occurs to us that each of you must aspire to become eligible for a Cabinet appointment in the near future. Be advised that the members of this board and this organization will spare no effort to make a "lame duck" out of each of you next fall if you do not see fit to change your "religion" when the Howell-Barkley bill is finally presented for passage in the House.

Yours very sincerely, HAROLD W. SCOTT,
Secretary-Treasurer.

P. S.: The writer is a resident of Mobridge, S. Dak.; is registered as a Republican voter in Walworth County; located temporarily at the above address account occupation.

H. W. S.

This last communication was intended as a knockout blow to the entire South Dakota delegation in this body. After recovery from this all but fatal shock, it is expected that we will execute a somersault on the double quick, yell "The farmers and general public be damned," and swallow the bill at one gulp.

Now, this is not the only letter of this character I have received. Gentlemen, if they think, or if anybody thinks, that the delegation from our young State can be browbeaten in that manner, they have their dog barking up the wrong tree. [Applause.]

COMMUNICATIONS DO NOT REPRESENT VIEWS OF LABOR AS A WHOLE

Other communications warn us that the bill must be adopted without an amendment and threaten us with political extinction if we dare change it. We are told that the representatives of the nationally organized crafts, in conjunction with skilful attorneys, spent 18 months in drafting this extraordinary measure. In whose interest were these people working during these long, weary months? Can anyone doubt in whose interest they were laboring so assiduously after reading the communications received and listening to their paid lobbyists? Were any representatives of the shippers and the fellows who pay the freight consulted? What officers of our farm organizations were called in to assist? Did anyone representing the consuming public get his head in under the tent? No; certainly not. It was not intended that the public interest should be consulted.

Judging from the letters I have received from many of the railroad workers themselves in my State, they neither subscribe to the methods being used by the so-called nationally organized crafts nor to the bill which they are trying to ram down the throat of Congress without either proper opportunity for study or adequate discussion upon this floor.

LABOR ENTITLED TO A SQUARE DEAL

I do not believe anyone can honestly say, after a study of my record here, that I have shown a disposition to favor big business or the special interests as against organized or any other kind of labor. On the contrary, the entire South Dakota delegation in this chamber has consistently fought and voted against every grab by such interests in whatever guise or form they have presented themselves, as is well known to every member of this body. My environment, training, and disposition have led me in every contest to espouse the cause of the ordinary man as against the powerful and rich.

Labor must and shall have a square deal, but in the end the interests of labor are wrapped up in the general welfare. That state of society is the best and happiest where industry and thrift are adequately rewarded no matter in what field they may be employed. The man who labors with his hands and who is willing to do a day's work for a day's pay is entitled to a fair and just compensation. This is not only in his own best interest and that of his family, but in the interest of society as a whole. Any man who would deny him this is unworthy to sit in this body or to serve in any other place of responsibility.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. But this is the fact: That any man who gives less than 100 per cent obedience to labor's orders is their enemy. You have got to give 100 per cent obedience.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Well, regardless of its attitude, I am going to give labor a square deal as long as I serve in this body, but I propose at the same time to protect the interests of the public. [Applause.]

NOT CONTEST BETWEEN EMPLOYEES AND CARRIERS

This is not a contest, as I view it, between the railways on the one hand and labor on the other. It matters little to the railways what may be the hours of labor or its wages so long as they can successfully pass on the operating cost to the public.

The questions of policy and procedure involved in the pending measure are too important to be decided by the snap judgment of Congress, and certainly too important to be made the football of politics on the eve of a national election. The bill is so manifestly unfair to the public and railway workers outside of the nationally organized crafts that if enacted at all it must be largely rewritten. The place to do this is in committee after full hearings, and not upon this floor after three hours of debate.

BOARDS OF ADJUSTMENT

In brief, the bill proposes to repeal Title III of the transportation act of 1920, which, among other things, creates the railway labor board. In lieu of this it proposes to establish four adjustment boards, each representing particular divisions of railway employees. The first two of these are composed of 14 members each, and the last two of 6 members each.

Board numbered 1 is composed of 14 members, 7 members constituting the labor group, representing the employees, and 7 members constituting the management group, representing the carriers. The labor group of 7 is to be appointed by the President from not less than 14 nominees, whose nominations shall be made by the employees and subordinate officials from among the membership of the nationally organized crafts entitled to representation on this board. The 7 representing the carriers are to be chosen in the same manner from a list of not less than 14 selected by the railways.

The other three boards are made up in the same manner. In other words, each of these four boards is made up of members representing only the employees and carriers, and, for all practical purposes, of men of their own choosing. Notwithstanding that the public has no representation whatever upon any of these boards, the bill provides that their salaries, at the rate of $7,000 each per annum, shall be paid out of the Public Treasury. In addition to this, each board is allowed to select a secretary at an annual salary of $4,000, and it is further provided that each board "shall employ and fix the salaries of such employees as may be necessary." Wide powers are given to each board, and provision is made that it may sit anywhere in the United States for the purpose of making any investigation it may deem proper, all at public expense.

BOARD OF MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION

In addition to these boards the bill provides for a board of "mediation and conciliation," consisting of five members at a salary of $12,000 each annually. Not only are these men to enjoy a fat salary, but this board—shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, assistants, special experts, clerks, and other employees as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper performance of its duties.

The above provision takes the lid off. No restraint from any source upon the expenditures the board may make exists, the sky and contents of the Federal Treasury alone excepted. And what are the functions of this board?

If any dispute arising only out of grievances or out of the application of any agreement concerning rates of pay, rules, or working conditions is not decided by the appropriate adjustment board, or if any proposed change in rates of pay, rules, or working conditions is not decided in conference between the parties, either party may invoke the services of the board of mediation and conciliation created by this act for bringing about an amicable adjustment of the controversy.

BOARD CAN ONLY CONSIDER CONTROVERSIES VOLUNTARILY SUBMITTED

It will be noted that this board can only consider such disputes as may be voluntarily submitted to it. It has no power to intervene and dispose of a controversy on its own initiative. Even where such a controversy is submitted and disposed of by it, it is left powerless to enforce its decisions.

ARBITRATORS HAVE LIKE LIMITATIONS

Finally, arbitrators are provided for in certain contingencies, but only such questions can be considered by the arbitrators as are voluntarily submitted by the employees or carriers. So far from making arbitration of controveries compulsory the bill expressly provides—

That a failure or refusal of either party to submit a controversy to arbitration shall not be construed as a violation of any legal obligation imposed upon any party by the terms of this act or otherwise.

No authority is provided for anywhere to enforce any award that may finally be entered. On the contrary, it is expressly provided "that nothing in this act shall be construed to make the quitting of labor or service by an employee or subordinate official an illegal act." The power of the courts to compel performance is denied. Even the salutary provision of the present law providing for enforcement by an appeal to the forum of public opinion is repealed.

AUTHORITY TO ENFORCE FINDINGS OF BOARDS OR ARBITRATORS DENIED

While the carriers are made subject to heavy penalties for any attempt to change rates of pay, rules, or working conditions without complying with the provisions of the bill, no reciprocal penalties are provided for against strike leaders or employees for failure on their part to carry out agreements. On the contrary, such penalties are prohibited.

After the establishment of all this vast and complicated machinery, the public in the end is left absolutely helpless either in the matter of the enforcement of agreements or in compelling the continuance of traffic upon the railways. The whole bill is a carefully worked out plan, not only to exclude the public from any voice in the fixing of wages and working conditions, but to exclude from representation in the settlement of these matters all railway employees who are not affiliated with the nationally organized crafts referred to in the bill. Instead of putting an end to strikes, it legalizes them. In place of discouraging controversies, it encourages them by making settlements impossible by creating boards upon which the employees and carriers have equal representation. Arbitration is voluntary only, and even where decisions are reached are not susceptible of enforcement. What conceivable purpose can be served in the public interest by the passage of such a bill?

To pay for the expense of this vast organization an appropriation of $500,000 annually is provided for. In all probability this will be insufficient to pay the salaries of the numerous officials and the expenses incident to providing quarters, secretaries, attorneys, experts, and other employees, to say nothing of the cost of elaborate hearings and for traveling expenses.

Mr. Chairman, we are not here to create endless jobs for useless officeholders. Neither are we here to set up new private bureaus and boards at public expense to settle private controversies, and more especially are we not called upon to create the machinery called for by this bill when it appears conclusively that such machinery is not in the public interest.

When the bill is fully understood by the people of the country, it will receive the condemnation it deserves. So far from denouncing those who to-day have the courage to stand up for their convictions and who are fighting the battle of the people back home, I have every confidence that the vast majority of the American people will give them their unqualified support. Regardless, however, of what may be the political aspect of this or any other question, it is our most solemn duty to stand like flint against all legislation that does not have as its basis justice and a sound public policy. It is infinitely more important that we shall have preserved the rights of the whole people than that we shall be returned here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Has the gentleman from Kentucky more than one speaker?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. I have but one more, and it seems to me the gentleman should use some time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the solicitude of the railroad people of this country for the public has become pathetic. When the Esch-Cummins bill was jammed through here with a provision that an earning should be provided for in the rates prescribed of 5¾ per cent of the total investment of all the railroads, watered stock and all, and the authority to levy taxes was thereby assigned to the railroads to make up an earning of 5¾ per cent upon all the investment of the railroad people in their property, I did not hear any of these gentlemen who are now weeping around here about the people not being represented raising their voices in the wilderness. [Applause.]

This was the only time that the right of taxation has ever been assigned to anybody except the protected manufacturers, and they wrote it into the law, and I said so at the time, and it has been cried out against by the constituents of the gentleman out in South Dakota ever since that the right of taxation has been assigned to the railroads and the commission has been ordered to fix rates so as to give them a certain return. The commission is compelled to do that under the law, and they are thereby given the right of taxation without even coming to Congress at all. Then they come here and weep about the people not being represented in this bill. Let us look at it for a moment. That is the only propaganda I have seen, and I do not care anything about propaganda anyway. But they have got it circulated in the newspapers of my State that the people have no representation on these boards. Let us see about that for a moment.

The boards of adjustment are boards to which are submitted controversies as to whether agreements as to pay or as to working conditions are being carried out. If a dispute arises about those matters, adjustment boards are created for the purpose of settling those disputes, and they are composed only of railroad laboring men and railroad men because they are peculiarly cognizant of all the details and can settle such matters without taking a year to hear testimony in order to become educaed on the subject. So much for that phase of it. If they do not settle these disputes, then they go to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, and that board has some considerable influence in settling those questions, and in addition to that, in determining the question of the recasting of contracts whereby rates of pay and working conditions are revised and rehabilitated.

This board is made up of people who can not be either of the laboring class or of the railroad ownership class. They are made automatically to go off of that board at the moment they get into either one of those classes. Therefore the public absolutely controls it, and in the law we are repealing the public has only 3 out of 9 members—being 3 laborers, 3 railroad owners, and 3 representing the public.

Then there is another feature in which they are represented. If the boards of adjustment do not agree and the craft and the railroad company go into an arbitration, the railroad company selects one, the craft selects one, and the board of conciliation selects the third, who is the umpire in the controversy, and is selected by people who are exclusively from the public, and he can not be taken from either the railroad people or from the railroad employees.

Therefore I stand for this bill. I am not like the gentleman from Texas. I am not always having to get up here and tell people how my opponents down in my district are after me about this, that, or the other. I have never had an opponent since I have been here. I have tried to conduct myself so that my people send me here regardless of whether I am for the railroads or for labor or anything of the kind.

For 18 years I represented one of the great systems in my State as State counsel. I have tried hundreds of cases for them. I know the inside of both the fights, and of all the men with whom I have been associated in a lifetime of work, one of the highest class men, without any exception, have been the engineers and the conductors who run the great trunk-line trains of this country, upon whom you can rely to tell the truth, and who are the most loyal, straightforward, and truthful body of men with whom I have ever associated, and I am not afraid of their misusing any power that they may be given in this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not feel the effect of all this labor propaganda complained of by various gentlemen to-day. In fact, I do not believe I have a single railroad man living in my congressional district. But why all this talk about propaganda on one side or propaganda on the other side? Certainly that is nothing new. It seems to me that the complaint from the opposition to this bill is directed toward the source of the propaganda rather than from the propaganda itself. It is amusing that after all we have been through in the last two or three Congresses that most of us are not yet propaganda proof. I do not object to getting information on any bill from both sides of any question. I do not object to people writing me that they will seek to defeat me if I do not agree with them. That is their privilege, and it is just that it should be so. We are approaching the day, however, gentlemen, where the people will really decide what kind of Representatives they desire to have here to speak for them; and the trouble is, permit me to say frankly, that the money powers and great interests who in the past could put thumbs down on any Member are fast losing their power, and know that we are inevitably approaching the time when Members of Congress will vote according to their best judgment and conscience, regardless of what may happen. Personally, I am responsible to my constituents and to them alone. In this instance, as I have stated, I have no railroad men in my district. Surely I can not be charged with giving way to pressure or to the covered threats suggested on the floor to-day. I believe in this bill because I feel that it will do a great good. Some of the gentlemen have talked about the drastic provisions of the bill. I venture the suggestion that it is the most conservative bill ever backed by organized labor. It is constructively conservative and conservatively constructive. If the same provisions, gentlemen, had been brought before this House in a bill sponsored and approved by the railroad magnates of the country, I am inclined to believe we would not have the organized opposition with which we are confronted to-day. In fact, the various provisions of this bill were approved by a committee of railroad executives. The great railroad brotherhoods saw that it would provide the machinery for the settlement of trade disputes, and, let it be said to their credit, got back of it and are now sponsoring it. I see no wrong in that.

It was intimated on the floor to-day and in previous debate that some of us had not yet seen the bill and have been only recently converted to it. I do not think that is a fair charge. Most Members of this House do their work conscientiously. There has been considerable publicity about this bill. It is the first bill brought before us under the new rule for which many of us fought hard. I have read the bill, I have studied the bill, and I am willing to credit my colleagues with having done likewise. I might say that over 30 years ago I made up my mind to vote for a bill of this kind if I ever had an opportunity.

I recall distinctly as a small boy out in Arizona when my father's regiment was ordered out in heavy marching order with ball cartridges to protect the railroads in the great Pullman strike. This made a profound impression upon my mind as a boy—that disputes of employees of the railroads had to be settled by ball and cartridges. Perhaps there are people who would want to see machine guns and bullets used to crush labor. I do not believe that there are many so wrong-minded as to believe that men can be forced to work, regardless of conditions, without a protest. We have made great progress since that great railroad strike that tied up communications in the entire country. But why should we not make progress for the benefit of labor as speedily as progress is made for the protection of capital? This bill is a step in the right direction.

There seems to be unanimous agreement that the present Railroad Labor Board is ineffective and should be abolished.

President Coolidge, in his annual message to this Congress on December 6, 1923, said:

> The settlement of railroad labor disputes is a matter of grave public concern. The Labor Board was established to protect the public in the enjoyment of continuous service by attempting to insure justice between the companies and their employees. It has been a great help, but is not altogether satisfactory to the public, the employees, or the companies. If a substantial agreement can be reached among the groups interested, there should be no hesitation in enacting such agreement into law.

That is all that this bill does. It provides an agreement among the groups interested. It does so simply, directly, and effectively. The Labor Board has not been a success. The Labor Board has been a complete failure. Therefore let us proceed to abolish it. The chief opposition to the proposed boards of the Barkley bill is the cost of the boards. Why, you appropriate millions of dollars every year for the courts and the Department of Justice for the adjustment of lawsuits between private parties. Here we provide the means of adjustment of labor disputes. A great deal has been said that the decisions of these boards are not enforcible. Why the decisions of your present board are not enforcible. What happens now if the decision is against the railroads; they simply ignore the decision. If it happens to be against the employees, and they refuse to obey it, the railroad orders a lockout. I do not believe there is a man on the floor of this House who would advocate compelling any man to work against his will. Labor of a human being is not a commodity or an article of commerce; it can never be treated as such. It should be permanently established in National and in State laws that human labor can not be treated like merchandise or chattels. It is quite true that no one can be compelled to labor. It is quite true, and no one will argue to the contrary, that if an individual leaves an employment anyone willing to take that individual's place has a right to do so. But when all of the labor of an industry find that conditions become intolerable and exhaust every remedy for proper adjustment with the capital side of the industry and are compelled to go on strike, then a different situation is created and must be differently considered. After all, labor constitutes the greater part of any industry.

The labor side of the industry acquires rights just as the capital side of an industry acquires rights. The law should, therefore, protect the rights of labor as fully as the property rights. It is often said, and perhaps properly, that capital and labor form a partnership and the two together are necessary to any industry or production. Suppose two partners own a business and disagree and one partner is compelled to leave. He may go to court and the court will protect his interest in the business, using the entire force of the State, if necessary, to protect his share of property in that business. Neither the law nor the court says to him "Well, you disagreed with your partner and you have walked out, now you must not interfere with anyone else going in and using your property." The law gives full protection to the money investment of any industry, yet when the "labor partner" is compelled to strike to protect his rights, their investment of a life devoted to work is in no way protected. The law instead of protecting labor investment is at present inclined to protect others compelled under the stress of need and poverty to usurp their rights. For example, if the railroad employees should go on strike their interests should be protected. These men have devoted their entire lives to the railroad industry of the country; collectively they have a vested interest in the railroads; without them there could be no railroads. Is it right to say that if they go on strike anyone desiring to take their place can do so, and as employees they have no more rights in the matter? If one of the stockholders of a railroad living in London or Paris or New York should feel that the company is not treating his interests fairly and impartially, he could go in the court and have his rights protected. Surely laws which will protect property and money should be sufficiently broad to protect human lives and human labor invested in an industry.

I will say frankly, I would not take the right of striking away from any man. That is labors' legitimate weapon. That right has been permanently established in this country. The great immortal Lincoln, the greatest and truest Republican of them all, in his speech at New Haven, Conn., on May 6, 1860, said:

> I am glad to see that a system of labor prevails in New England under which laborers can strike when they want to, where they are not obliged to work under all circumstances, and are not tied down and obliged to labor whether you pay them or not.

Lincoln was a great economist, he saw the economic troubles of his time, he predicted the economic issues of the future. Gentlemen, almost every question upon which there is difference in this House is an economic question, and in voting for this bill whereby we provide the machinery for the settlement of technical trade disputes, where we provide a board of mediation and conciliation, where we provide for arbitration, I say that we are doing the right thing in the right way. Why we do it for the benefit not only of the employees and the railroad, but for the benefit of the public. If we can prevent a strike we benefit the public. If we can adjust these matters amicably and speedily the public is benefited. Yes, and if we look out for the welfare of the million railroad employees—partners in the railroads, if you please—I say that we legislate for the benefit of the railroads, employees, and the public.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not now; I have only a few minutes.

I say the employees of the railroads who have contributed their lives to the great railroad systems of this country have an equal vested interest in the property of the railroads with the bondholders and the stockholders.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Not now.

Objection is made that certain unorganized employees or independent organizations are not specifically mentioned in the bill, and I will say to the unorganized employees of the railroad and to the independent organizations that whatever progress has been made in better wages and in better conditions for the employees of the railroads has been due entirely to the splendid organizations of the four big brotherhoods of railroad employees. Unless labor in this country is well organized to protect its own interests nobody else is going to protect them.

The railroad brotherhoods are splendid labor organizations. They have rendered great service to the labor movement in this country. I hope all the independent organizations will soon join with these great organizations.

I hope there will be no more filibustering on this bill. I am ready to vote for it now. A majority of this House have signified their intention of voting for it in no less than 20 roll calls. Let us get down to business and bring this bill to a final vote without further delay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the Barkley bill, H. R. 7358, proposing to amend the Esch-Cummins law, was introduced in the House of Representatives on the 28th day of February, 1924.

A Senate bill similar to the Barkley bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator HOWELL.

In the Senate extensive hearings were had before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce from March 18 to April 7, 1924. Witnesses representing the railroads, the labor organizations, Labor Board, and many business associations testified at great length. These hearings were given great publicity by the press. They were printed and make a book of 364 pages. Every Representative could procure as many of these hearings as he desired and all those who have been interested in the subject have undoubtedly made themsives familiar with the evidence before the Senate committee.

When Representative BARKLEY, a Member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, was unable to get a hearing on his bill, it was evident to every fair-minded person that the only way to get a hearing on this bill was to get the matter before the House of Representatives by discharging the committee. A petition was filed with the Clerk of the House in compliance with the rule on the 15th day of April, and soon received more than the 150 signatures required by the rule. If there was ever a case where there was justification for the rule, this was such a case. The rule providing the discharge of committees was passed in this Congress by a vote of 253 yeas to 114 nays—more than a two to one vote. It is a fair rule and so considered by the House.

PROCEDURE

It was not necessary to duplicate the hearing held by the Senate committee.

When the Esch-Cummins bill passed the House and went to the Senate, it was practically rewritten by the Senate and was then sent into conference and so changed that when the bill again appeared in the House its authors would not have recognized it. The bill was in conference eight days, no one knowing anything about the changes that were made in conference, as reported by the conference committee, except the conferees.

The bill contained 190 pages and the House was compelled to vote upon the bill after a comparatively short discussion.

The Barkley bill, which seeks to amend one provision in the Esch-Cummins law, a provision which President Harding stated in his Kansas City speech on June 26, 1923, should be amended, and which the President of the United States, Mr. Coolidge, in his first message to Congress, admitted should be amended, has had a great deal more consideration already than the Esch-Cummins bill that became a law. The bill has been before the House of Representatives for consideration 14 days since it was voted out, and very few bills have been studied and considered as much.

I do not care about going into the question as to whether the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Commitee have had time to consider this bill or not. The fact is they did not consider it and, according to the statement of the chairman, Mr. WINSLOW, of Massachusetts, as to the amount of business before the committee and the chairman opposed to the bill, there would, of course, be a very small chance of getting a consideration of the bill. The committee, during the pendency of this bill, has considered a great many other bills of very much less importance. It has considered and reported favorably on the bill appropriating money out of the United States Treasury to purchase the Cape Cod Canal in Massachusetts. It has not, however, seemed to have the time or inclination to consider the Barkley bill affecting over 1,000,000 laboring people. Neither has it had the time or inclination to consider the Treadway bill, which deals with the important anthracite-coal situation that affects millions of people.

LABOR BOARD

The Railroad Labor Board was a failure from the beginning. After 30 years of practically uninterrupted transportation, with not a single nation-wide strike, we have witnessed more discord and strife in the four years under the Esch-Cummins law than in the entire history of our country.

The Erdman Act, under which the railroad employees and the officers of the railroads sat around the table at conferences and settled their grievances, gave excellent satisfaction for over 20 years. Under this act all differences between the railroads and the employees of the railroads were settled amicably and the best of feeling prevailed between employer and employee.

The Newlands amendment to the Erdman Act provided for a conciliation or adjustment board when the railroads and their employees could not agree. It provided for grievance committees that took up the grievances arising between employer and employee in all parts of the country. In case their grievances could not be adjusted, the matter was taken up by the adjustment board, composed of the railroads and their employees, and settled. Both the railroads and their employees carried out the agreements, and there were no strikes or lockouts. This form of adjustment and settlement between the railroads and their employees went on for nearly 30 years without a strike or lockout of any consequence during that time. The Barkley bill under consideration is patterned after these laws.

FAILURE OF LABOR BOARD

The first decision of any importance that was made against the railroad company was questioned. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. refused to obey the decision and obtained an injunction, and was successful in overruling the decision of the Labor Board. Judge Page ruled that the decision of the Labor Board in regard to wages or rules was only advisory. After that the railroads violated the decisions of the board at will. In a statement by Chairman Hooper, of the United States Railroad Labor Board, he stated that between April 15, 1920, and December 15, 1922, the first two years of the law, 58 of the 201 class 1 railroads and 56 of the 892 short-line railroads had violated the decisions of the board. These violations of the decisions of the Railroad Labor Board by the Pennsylvania Railroad, involving over 200,000 workers, and the New York Central violations, affecting agreements with all classes of employees on that railroad (except the train and engine service organizations) were instrumental in bringing on the strike of 1922.

On July 31, 1922, during the strike, President Harding sent to the railroad executives and their employees, among other things, a proposal—that both sides should agree to recognize the validity of all decisions of the Railroad Labor Board and to faithfully carry out such decisions as contemplated by law.

The railroad employees agreed to do this, but the railroad executives refused. President Harding, in a speech at Kansas City on the 26th day of June, 1923, argued in favor of amending the law regarding the Railroad Labor Board. President Coolidge, December 6, 1923, advocated the amendment of the provision of the Esch-Cummins Act creating the Railroad Labor Board, and said it was a matter of great public concern "the Labor Board is not altogether satisfactory to the public, the employees, or the companies."

Secretary of Labor James L. Davis, as head of the Department of Labor, in his annual report for 1923 to the President of the United States said, in part:

Apparently the difference between the management of the railroads and their employees has been increased and complicated rather than diminished by the operation of the machinery provided by section 300 of the transportation act.

Judge George W. Anderson, judge of the circuit court of appeals, formerly a member of the Massachusetts Public Service Commission and Interstate Commerce Commission, testified December 20, 1922, at the hearings of the committee on the railroad consolidation in Boston as follows:

Turning to the labor provisions of the transportation act, the situation is still blacker. A large part of the dominant managerial forces did not accept in good faith the labor provisions of the act, etc. How the scheme would have worked if it had been accepted in good faith by practically all the railroad management, no one can say. It was not so accepted. The shopmen's strike of last July was the result. The general result is that the mass of railroad employees were, in my opinion, never so embittered and so distrustful of the railroad management as now * * *. The labor provisions of the transportation act are effectually discredited; so is the Labor Board.

LABOR BOARD NOT FUNCTIONING

Further failure of the Labor Board to function is shown by its inability to decide many cases and the delay in deciding others at the present time. The four organizations—Locomotive Engineers, Locomotive Firemen, Order of Railway Conductors, and Railroad Trainmen—have 845 undecided cases before the Labor Board which have been pending from three months to three years.

It was thought by those who voted for the Esch-Cummins Act that the board of adjustments, which was voluntary and whose creation depended upon the railroads and their employees in agreeing to it, would relieve the Labor Board and would decide many of the smaller disputes. The railroads refused to join with the employees in creating boards of adjustment, except in a very limited number of cases, and nothing was settled in conference, and every petty grievance was referred to the one national board, the Railroad Labor Board, which was overwhelmed with work, which was just what the railroad companies desired.

The record of the Labor Board's hearings on January 31, 1921, reveals a statement by Mr. Atterbury that the railroads would flood the board with cases; and they did so.

THE RAILROAD EXECUTIVES BULLIED THE RAILROAD LABOR BOARD

They first obtained injunctions restraining them from enforcing their decisions. They also carried on an extensive propaganda criticizing their decisions and attempted in every possible way to bring public opinion against their decisions which in any way favored the employees.

An exceptionally frank statement of this purpose of the railroads was made to the Labor Board by the Buffalo & Susquehanna Railroad in demanding that wage reductions be put into effect. The representatives of this railroad said:

The Buffalo & Susquehanna Railroad really expects your board to put into effect the rates proposed by it, and your failure to do so can have only one of two results—the sending away of the work to other shops where cheaper labor is employed, or in leasing the shops to outside parties, with the requirement that the total cost, including overhead, will not be more than the wages as proposed by the railroad. Therefore an adverse decision of the United States Railroad Labor Board can have one of two effects—that of either throwing these employees totally out of work, or reducing their wages from 10 per cent to 30 per cent more than is proposed by the railroad in order to absorb the overhead.

This policy was adopted by an increasing number of railways, including some of the most important systems, and bid fair to spread throughout the entire transportation industry, until a vigorous protest by the employees to the Labor Board resulted after 15 months' delay in decision No. 982. This case involved the Indiana Harbor Belt Railroad Co., a subsidiary of the New York Central. The importance of the question is well presented in the following quotation from the decision of the Labor Board, from which I quote the following:

No more important dispute has ever come before the Labor Board for adjudication. It goes to the vitals of the transportation act. If the carrier can legally do the thing which has been done under these contracts, then the entire transportation act can be nullified and the will of the Congress of the United States set at naught. If one class of employees can thus be taken from under the application of the act, there is no sound reason why each and every railroad employee in the United States can not be given like treatment.

HUMAN ELEMENT IN RAILROADING

President A. H. Smith, of the New York Central, stated before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, May 20, 1921, that—

95 per cent of this railroading is human. The other 5 per cent is merely coal and steel, and it is not worth anything if you do not get good men with it.

The railway employees are insisting that the 95 per cent human element of the transportation industry shall be made up of properly nourished, competent, energetic workers. Such workers can only be obtained through adequate wages and reasonable working conditions. Such workers are necessary for efficient and safe transportation service, which is essential to the general welfare and to national prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASEY].

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I had not intended to speak on this bill to-day and would not have done so were it not for the fact that there have been so many misstatements made with reference to it. I shall support the Barkley bill because I believe it is workable. I believe it will do more, if enacted into law, to prevent strikes on the railroads of the country than any law that has ever been passed by the Congress. When the Esch-Cummins bill was before the House for consideration I did all I could to have stricken from the bill the paragraph providing for the continuation of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, believing as I did that its retention in the bill if it became a law would provide the means of "passing the buck," so to speak, between the Railway Labor Board and the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. I predicted at that time that the Railway Labor Board provided in the Esch bill would not solve the problem nor would it prevent strikes on the railroads. I wanted at that time to centralize all authority with reference to railroad disputes in the Railway Labor Board, believing as I did that the board was not properly constituted; therefore it could not be expected to function in such a way as to prevent strikes on the railroads of the country. We never had a nation-wide strike on the railroads in the United States until the Railway Labor Board was created by the Esch-Cummins law.

The Railroad Labor Board as at present constituted can not, in my judgment, prevent strikes but will tend to bring on strikes on the railroads in the country more than anything I know of.

Now, what are the facts in connection with the Barkley bill? We are told that by the creation of the bipartisan boards provided for in this bill, upon which the employees and the companies are represented, there is opportunity for conspiracy against the public. The fallacy of this contention is immediately met when we take into consideration how the present Railway Labor Board is constituted. The railroads and the employees have 6 votes to the public's 3, and at any time they could enter into a conspiracy against the public if they so desired. But there is no danger of any such thing taking place. Statements of this kind are made to misrepresent the bill and mislead and frighten the public.

Now, let us examine into the question of the adjustment boards provided for in this bill. They say the public is not represented on these boards. In my judgment the public has no business being represented on these adjustment boards. The adjustment boards have nothing to do with the question of wages or working conditions. The adjustment boards have only to do with the interpretation and administration of contracts voluntarily entered into by the employees and the railroad companies, or awards resulting from the arbitration of disputes submitted to arbitration as provided for in the bill. Let me illustrate if I may. Board No. 1: The grievances pertaining to engineers, firemen, conductors, and so forth, shall go to that board for investigation and settlement. Experts representing both employees and the carriers are appointed on this board to settle the particular difficulties that are peculiar to this particular occupation. We find that on Board No. 2 experts are appointed as representatives of the machinists, boiler makers, and so forth. These experts on this board handle questions submitted to them similar to Board No. 1. Board No. 3 handles the grievances of clerks and other miscellaneous crafts similar to Board No. 1 and Board No. 2. Board No. 4 in a like manner handles the grievances of the water-transportation workers. Instead of taking the grievances of locomotive engineers and firemen to the water-transportation board composed of captains, marine engineers, and longshoremen, the bill provides that grievances of this character shall go to a board upon which there are locomotive engineers and firemen who know something about this particular grievance. These boards are created solely for the interpretation and administration of contracts voluntarily entered into by the railroads and the employees or awards made by boards of arbitration to which has been submitted disputes between the employees and the carriers.

Let me impress upon the members of the committee, if I may, that the purpose of this bill is to get back to conditions where the railroads and their employees shall by negotiation and voluntary contract settle their difficulties without outside interference. Those opposing this bill say the public is not represented on any of these boards.

The Board of Mediation and Conciliation, which is the important board of the whole machinery intended to be set up by this bill, represents only the public. There are no representatives of the railroad companies or the employees on this board, the members of which are appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate. They represent the public in all efforts to mediate and conciliate any differences that may exist between the employees and the railroads in their efforts to negotiate a contract.

If the parties interested do not agree, then this board acts. Anybody who has had anything to do with mediation and conciliation knows that it is their function to use every means within their power; every governmental activity is brought into use to bring both parties together in an effort to prevent a strike. I have had some experience in this work. During the war I devoted the greater part of my time to the question of mediation and conciliation, both for the United States Department of Labor and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. I was a commissioner of mediation and conciliation for the Department of Labor. I was also the director of labor for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, United States Shipping Board. It was my duty to keep the industrial plants, with which the Emergency Fleet Corporation had contracts, and the shipyards going by preventing strikes. I believe I know something about the question of mediation and conciliation, and I am trying to give you gentlemen the benefit of my views. When I say I believe this bill is workable I say to you in all sincerity that I believe it will do more to prevent strikes on the railroads of this country than any bill ever enacted into law by the Congress of the United States. Oh, but some say, there is no compulsion in this bill; we can not compel the railroad employees to work against their will. I would like to see any Member of this House who claims to be a red-blooded American that will stand up in his place and say that Congress should pass any law to compel any person to work against their will in violation of the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] Some gentlemen talk about doing this, and others talk all around it. But that is what is in the back of the heads of some of those opposed to this bill: They want to get a law through Congress to force the railroad employees, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, to work for the railroad companies.

Let us examine more carefully into the provisions of the railway labor bill (H. R. 7358) and see what we find.

Most of the arguments produced on the floor of the House against the Barkley bill have been composed of allegations, couched in general terms, and in not one single instance have the opponents of this bill undertaken to point out in detail a legal or practical defect in the machinery intended to be created by the provisions of the bill. General allegations as to the probable effect upon the railroad industry by the enactment of the railway labor bill (H. R. 7358) and the abolition of the Railroad Labor Board only serve to befog the issue and to prevent the facts concerning the real intent and purpose of the bill from being understood by the Members of Congress who are expected to give it consideration and to intelligently vote for or against its adoption.

I shall undertake to further explain, as best I can in simple terms, the practical operation of the machinery intended to be created by this bill, but, before taking up the matter in detail, it is, perhaps, appropriate to say that for many years I have been closely associated with the workers and have had considerable experience, and, consequently, have acquired knowledge of their working conditions and, as already stated, I have had the experience of serving as a Government mediator under a law, the general provisions of which were almost identical with the mediation provisions of the Barkley bill now under consideration by the House of Representatives. In my experience as a mediator and as a student of economics and the general problems confronting the workers of this country, I have long since learned that the railroad industry differs materially in many respects from other industries of the country, consequently the conditions under which both management and men are required to work also differ proportionately as compared with the duties imposed upon employers and employees of other industries. The public has long since recognized that the railroad industry of this country is a public-service industry, and for many years Congress has recognized the public interest in the railroads by providing for certain regulation of the railroads by law.

Since 1888 Congress has legislated for the settlement of railway labor disputes, although such legislation has never heretofore been generally supported by labor; in fact, the railway workers have in the past been generally opposed to legislation which restricted their right to negotiate terms of employment and to utilize their economic power to protect themselves against injustice at the hands of their employers. In this respect the railway workers have always felt that they should be permitted to exercise the same unrestricted rights and privileges for their protection as are exercised by the employees in other industries. However, in recent years the general trend of thought has been in favor of some kind of legislation which would provide for the settlement of railway labor disputes and thus prevent interruption of interstate commerce. The railway workers have themselves gradually yielded to public opinion in the matter of railway labor legislation, and after four years' experience under the labor provisions of the transportation act of 1920 they have come to Congress with a program which may not be perfect but is, without question, the most constructive piece of legislation upon this subject that has ever been presented to Congress, for the reason that it is a practical plan.

Statements have been made by Members of Congress and others concerning the probable effect upon the railroad industry if Congress were to substitute the provisions of the Barkley bill for the labor provisions—Title III—of the transportation act, 1920. Some of the statements that have been made clearly indicate that they have been made either through an attempt to deliberately misrepresent or because of a misunderstanding of the bill.

It should be understood that the bill simply provides for the repeal of the labor provisions—Title III—of the transportation act and thus abolishes the Railroad Labor Board. It creates a separate railroad labor act without interfering with any other provision of the transportation act.

Some of the Members of Congress seem to have gained a wrong impression in the matter of the public's representation on a board which primarily takes the place of the Railroad Labor Board and which will have jurisdiction over all disputes involving changes in wages and working conditions, which, by the way, are the major disputes the settlement of which are likely to affect operating expenses. In this connection it may be well to point out that disputes of this character will be handled by a board of mediation composed of five public members appointed by the President. Neither the railroads nor the employees have representation on this board, and should it subsequently develop that a member of this board is in any way connected with either the railroads or the organizations representing the employees he shall at once become ineligible for further membership upon the board of mediation. Before the board of mediation takes jurisdiction over any dispute the law makes it a duty of all carriers and their employees to meet in conference and exert every reasonable effort to adjust their difference. If a dispute involves an increase or a decrease in the wages of the employees or a change in the working rules which would increase operating expenses, and such dispute is not settled in conference between representatives of the carrier and the employees involved, the services of the Board of Mediation may be invoked by either party or the board may proffer its services. For example:

Should the employees on any railroad initiate a request upon the management for an increase in wages or a change in their working conditions, the provisions of the Barkley bill would require that representatives of both parties meet and, across the conference table, undertake to reach an adjustment. There is no limit fixed as to the length of time that may be consumed in conference. Days or weeks or even months may be consumed, according to the magnitude of the question, in discussing its various angles and attempting to reach a settlement satisfactory to both sides. As indicated above, should the parties be unable to reach a settlement in conference they may, separately or jointly, invoke the services of the board of mediation which, under the Barkley bill, is substituted for the present Railroad Labor Board. Should neither party invoke the services of the board, then the board is empowered to proffer its services, in which event the mediators would immediately go to the point where the controversy exists and would confer and arrange to meet with the parties separately for the purpose of investigating the dispute and learning from each side their respective views as to the merits of such controversy.

The records of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, under the Erdman and Newlands Acts, in effect 1898 to 1920, show that the length of time consumed in mediating railroad controversies varied from a few days to several weeks, and the same records show that a solution of all controversies was always found when the services of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation were utilized. That both the railroads and the employees appreciate the responsibility that attaches to them in controversies which threaten the interruption of interstate commerce is evidenced by the records of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, 1913 to 1919, which show that out of a total of 148 cases recorded the services of the board were requested and accepted as follows:

By the railroads, 29 cases; employees, 74 cases; jointly by railroads and employees, 27 cases; and by the public, 2 cases. The services of the board were tendered to railroads and employees jointly in 16 cases. In the total of 148 cases handled by the board during the period mentioned there were involved 586 railroads and 620,810 employees.

In the case of request for increases in wages, cited above, should the Board of Mediation—which, it should be kept in mind, is composed entirely of representatives of the public—fail to effect a settlement by bringing the parties together in agreement, as its final action it is required to propose that the parties arbitrate the controversy. In this connection statement has been made that there is no compulsion in the matter of arbitration. But let us see what has happened in the past when a Government board of mediation has taken jurisdiction over disputes which threaten the interruption of interstate commerce, with the possible exception of one case—the details with which the Members of Congress are evidently not familiar—arbitration proposed by a Government board of mediation has always been accepted by both parties.

In the exceptional case referred to, the President of the United States, himself finally acting as the sole mediator in the eight-hour controversy, proposed that the eight-hour day be granted, and that the controversy involving the payment of time and one-half for overtime be made the subject of investigation. To this the employees agreed, but the railroads declined to accept the proposal and the President requested Congress to legislate upon the subject, resulting in the enactment of the Adamson eight hour law. The records concerning this dispute show that the railroads themselves were the first parties to propose carrying the controversy to Congress, although they have since attempted to place this responsibility upon the employees.

Having accepted arbitration, the provisions of the Barkley bill would require that the carrier and the employees each name one arbitrator. Should the two arbitrators thus chosen fail to agree upon the third arbitrator within five days, such third arbitrator would be named by the Board of Mediation, and the provisions of the bill would require that such third or "neutral" arbitrator, who is the representative of the public, be entirely free from interest in or connection with any carrier or organization of employees. However, the carriers and employees may agree upon an arbitration board of six members, similarly chosen, on which the public, the carrier, and the employees have equal representation. The board of arbitration thus chosen would meet and arrange for hearing, giving the parties to the controversy a full and fair hearing, including an opportunity to present evidence in support of their claims, and the opportunity to argue their case in person or by counsel. The agreement to arbitrate would contain a provision fixing a period from the beginning of the hearings within which the board of arbitration should make and file its award, although a provision is made for an extension of this period if the parties so agree. The agreement to arbitrate would also provide that both parties accept the award as final and binding.

The agreement to arbitrate would further provide for the date from which the award would become effective and fix the period during which the award would continue in force. Having reached an award, same would be filed in the clerk's office of the district court of the United States in the district where the controversy arose or the arbitration was entered into, and when so filed such award would constitute the full and complete record of the arbitration. The award when filed would be conclusive as to the merits and facts of the controversy submitted to arbitration, and the court would enter judgment on the award, which judgment would be final and conclusive on the parties and be enforcible in the same manner as other judgments, contracts, and agreements.

If a controversy subsequently arose as to the meaning of the award, the bill provides that the same arbitrators would interpret the award and thus definitely dispose of any controversy that arose in connection therewith. What has been said herein concerning the method of handling a dispute involving a request for increases in wages would apply on any railroad, whether it be a "Class I" railroad or a "short-line" railroad. There is no difference in the application of the provisions of the Barkley bill to railroads coming within the scope of the interstate commerce law. The same machinery available to deal with disputes involving increases in wages is also available and applies in exactly the same manner in the treatment of cases involving decreases in wages. Although it is fair to assume that controversies involving increases in wages are initiated by employees, it is also fair to assume that controversies involving decreases in wages are initiated by the carriers. But in either event neither party is given any advantage under the terms of the Barkley bill, and in both instances the public is the only party represented on the Board of Mediation and it has equal representation in all questions of arbitration, which finally decides the controversy.

The statement has been made that on some railroads where certain classes of employees have been organized into what is known as "company unions" the provisions of the railway labor bill would discriminate against employees holding membership in such "company unions." In other words, an attempt has been made to create the impression that unless railway employees take membership in one of the 20 generally recognized standard railway labor organizations which have indorsed the railway labor bill their interests would not be protected in the same manner and to the same degree as would the interests of employees who hold membership in the standard railway labor organizations.

The railway labor bill does not discriminate, but, on the contrary, specifically provides that both the carriers and the employees shall each choose their own representatives without interference, influence, or coercion being exercised by either party over the other. There is an absolute guaranty to the employee, whether members of a "company union" or a so-called "standard railway labor organization," that they will be represented by men of their own choosing.

Should members of a "company union" initiate a request for an increase in wages it would be the duty of the representatives of the carrier and representatives of the employees interested to meet in conference for the purpose of considering and attempting to adjust the matter. Failing to reach a settlement in conference the representatives of the "company unions" or the carrier could invoke the services of the Board of Mediation or the Board of Mediation could proffer its services and the controversy would be handled in exactly the same manner as though the employees interested were members of one of the so-called standard railway labor organizations. Arbitration could be adopted if mediation failed and the representatives of the "company union" would be privileged to name one of the arbitrators, the carrier would also name one arbitrator, and the third or "neutral" abitrator would be named by the Board of Mediation if the two arbitrators chosen by the representatives of the "company union" and representatives of the carrier failed to agree upon the selection of the third or "neutral" man. The award of the board of arbitration would be binding on the carrier and employees—members of the "company union"—in the same manner and to the same extent that any arbitration award under the act would be binding on the employees, members of any other union.

I will now take up a more detailed discussion of the boards of adjustment, as created by the railway labor act, the purpose of which seems to be entirely misunderstood and in connection with which gross misrepresentation has been made by opponents of the bill with regard to representation of the public thereon. Members of Congress who oppose the creation of adjustment boards and who seem to be desirous of creating the impression that adjustment boards are something new and entirely experimental, appear to have overlooked the fact that adjustment boards, although voluntary, are provided for in the present transportation act, section 302, as follows:

> Railroad boards of labor adjustment may be established by agreement between any carrier, group of carriers, or the carriers as a whole, and any employees or subordinate officials of carriers or organization or group of organizations thereof.

It will be noted that section 302 of the transportation act provides for the creation of adjustment boards through voluntary agreement. The very fact that the creation of adjustment boards was made voluntary under the transportation act has alone prevented the establishment of such boards, except in the specific case involving but four of the organizations, a very limited number of employees, and only a portion of the roads in the eastern, western, and southeastern territories. Failure on the part of the railroads to voluntarily agree to the establishment of adjustment boards resulted in the Railroad Labor Board being swamped with grievances, resulting in the time of the board being consumed in considering and adjusting grievances of a minor nature, and making it impossible for the board to give immediate consideration to controversies of major importance.

It will also be noted that in the creation of adjustment boards under section 302 of the transportation act no provision is made for representation of the public on such boards. That many, including Members of Congress, have gained a wrong impression concerning these adjustment boards, and that the importance of representatives of the public on such adjustment boards is being exaggerated by opponents of the bill is evidenced by some of the speeches made on the floor of the House and in much of the propaganda with which Congress is being deluged by opponents of the bill. Perhaps a word or two concerning adjustment boards and the character of disputes that would ordinarily be referred to these boards for consideration and decision would be helpful.

For example, take the case of men engaged in engine service. When a man enters the service of a carrier in the capacity of a locomotive fireman he is immediately required to exert considerable mental and physical effort in order to qualify to assume the responsible duties of a locomotive engineer when there is need for additional engineers on the division where he is employed. A vast majority of the public perhaps do not know that the records of master mechanics' conventions and conventions of other railroad officials bear record of admissions by railroad officials that the work of a locomotive fireman on the great, modern locomotives of to-day has passed almost beyond the limit of human endurance. However, in addition to discharging the duties imposed upon him as a fireman, he is required to spend most of his leisure time, and frequently is required to lose time, in order to prepare for the most exacting and extensive examination on mechanics, combustion, locomotive running repairs, the air brake, train-operating rules, the electric-signal system, and the physical characteristics of the railroad over which he will be required to operate as an engineer when promoted.

The perfectness with which the machine of this great moving industry—the railroads—operates is evidence of the time and study that has been devoted to it by the men directly interested in and responsible for its operation. The operating rules governing train movements and railroad operation generally, and with which the employees in the transportation service must be familiar, have been formulated and are revised from time to time by an authoritative committee appointed by the American Railway Association. Likewise, rules governing the train-signal system, the operation of the automatic air brake, and so forth, are the result of years of study and preparation by men whose lives have been devoted to this work. Several days, and in many cases weeks, are required in conducting examinations of a locomotive fireman for promotion to the position of engineer, and the same is true to a greater or lesser degree in so far as promotions are concerned in other classes of railroad service. Upon entering the service of the railroad an employee must be in perfect physical condition, including normal vision. In qualifying for promotion he is also required to undergo another severe physical examination in order to assure the public, the carrier, and the employees that the highest possible degree of efficiency shall be maintained in the transportation industry. To this end periodical examinations are also conducted.

I have mentioned a few of the technical phases of the railroad situation for the purpose of showing the probabilities for controversies of the most highly technical character arising with regard to the operation of trains. The slightest violation of one of the many hundreds of rules would be sufficient cause for investigation and perhaps the administration of discipline, with the possible dismissal from service, of an employee. It sometimes happens that an honest difference of opinion arising with regard to the execution of a highly technical rule may give rise to a dispute. Occasionally a dispute arises because of the method adopted by a locomotive engineer in hurriedly repairing his engine, which may have broken down en route, thus delaying the train.

Working under severe strain and pressure in an effort to open the main track and thus prevent the congestion of traffic, a question may arise as to whether some particular, technical rule had been complied with. All such disputes growing out of train operation must necessarily be decided in conference or by some tribunal qualified to consider and decide same if we are to have peace upon the railroads of this country. It is for the purpose of deciding such disputes and also minor disputes which may arise in connection with the application of agreements entered into in conference between the railroads and the employees that boards of adjustment have been found necessary and are to be created under the provisions of the Barkley bill, H. R. 7358. In this connection it may be appropriate to say that many of the rules contained in agreements governing rates of pay and working conditions of railway employees do not involve expense to the railroads, but are designed to protect against hardship or injustice. In many instances certain local conditions are covered in agreements which involve the comfort and convenience of the employees and protection of the interests of the railroads.

As stated above, the boards of ajustment are created under the Barkley bill to deal with these technical problems that, although of vital importance to the railroads, the employees, and to the railroad industry itself, are of little direct interest to the public. Surely no one will contend that a representative of the public unfamiliar with the technical phases of railroad operation could assist in an intelligent and just determination of such questions. No such contention has ever heretofore been made by the public, the railroads, or the employees. In fact, there appears to have been unanimity of opinion as between these three interests in the matter of adjustment boards being composed only of men technically qualified to deal with the technical operating questions. It is for these reasons that the proponents of the Barkley bill have not provided for representation of the public on the boards of adjustment contemplated under the provisions of the bill.

Chairman Ben W. Hooper, a public representative on the United States Railroad Labor Board, in his testimony before the Senate subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce—page 256—advocated the creation of boards of adjustment, and, although he has had three years' experience in dealing with these technical railroad problems, he did not recommend that the public be represented on such boards of adjustment.

It has been stated by opponents of the Barkley bill that the creation of adjustment boards as contemplated therein will interfere with certain methods for adjustment of grievances which have been adopted as a result of mutual understanding between representatives of the shopcraft "company unions" and the managements of certain railroads. Such statement is entirely erroneous, as there is nothing in the bill that will interfere with local arrangements, as a result of mutual agreement, which have been adopted for the purpose of adjusting grievances. In fact, such arrangements are merely a continuation of conference and confine the consideration of the problems to the specific property on which same originate.

In order to create prejudice against the Barkley bill it has been alleged by the opponents of the bill that, for example, members of the shopcraft "company unions" employed on the Pennsylvania Railroad could not be expected to appeal a grievance to an adjustment board created under the Barkley bill for the reason that the "company unions" would have no direct representative thereon. The Barkley bill permits any nationally organized craft to submit nominations to the President for appointments on adjustment boards.

If any "company union" becomes a nationally organized craft the members thereof will have the right, under the provisions of the Barkley bill, to submit nominations to the President for appointment on these boards. The facts are, however, the theory upon which the "company unions" are organized in itself is opposed to national organization, because when nationally organized they are no longer system or "company unions." What has been said with regard to the effect that nationalization would have upon "company unions" would also apply if the members of these so-called unions were to assert their independence and take advantage of their right under the law to appeal a dispute to the present Railroad Labor Board. That these "company unions" are absolutely controlled by the management is admitted by the representatives of these "unions" themselves. On page 282, hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate, will be found the following colloquy between Senator HOWELL and Mr. Anderson, the latter representing a "company union," opposing the bill:

Senator HOWELL. Who were the other gentlemen who cooperated with you in preparing this report?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Fleck is one of them; Mr. Gibbons is another, that I see here to-day; Mr. Reynolds is still another; and suggestions came from different ones on the management side as well, where we were seeking information.

From the statement of Theodore H. Davis, representing the shopcraft "company unions" on the Pennsylvania Railroad (p. 287, Senate subcommittee hearings), speaking of the representatives of the "company unions," Mr. Davis said:

They will be provided with the necessary transportation, and the company will reimburse them for time lost and for reasonable expenses while on this service.

Other statements made by representatives of "company unions" before the Senate subcommittee in hearings on the Howell-Barkley bill are quoted as follows:

We maintain that it is perfectly legitimate for the company to assume the expense of this work * * *. (Mr. MacDonald, p. 298.)

The council of the proponents of this bill designated the representatives as paid agents of the company, and we wish to say that the Pennsylvania Railroad system representatives to-day are not paid agents of said company but an elected representative body of men who have voluntarily consented to act as representatives of the various crafts and are simply made whole for time lost and the return of expenses as traveling, hotel, and any other regular expense incurred. (Mr. Peterman, p. 300.)

That the representatives of "company unions" are merely acting as paid agents of the railroads is clearly proven by the above statements of the representatives themselves. Surely no Member of Congress would contend that any real bona fide labor union exists where the management absolutely controls the actions of the representatives of these so-called unions and pays all expense incurred for time lost and hotel expenses, and so forth, of the representatives. Furthermore, is it not a fair assumption that so long as the railroads meet all of the expenses connected with the maintenance of a "company union" and pay the expenses of the representatives that there will be no grievances appealed to any tribunal not created by and connected with the railroad itself? The facts are, if the members of a "company union" would to-day appeal grievances to the Railroad Labor Board, and thereby assert their right under the law, their "company union" would soon be abolished by the railroad management.

This assertion is justified for the reasons already stated, and is supported by the fact that representatives of the so-called "company unions" have never appealed a dispute to the Railroad Labor Board, nor has any dispute affecting members of a "company union" ever been appealed to any tribunal not created by or connected with the railroad. So long as the employees, members of "company unions," are satisfied to restrict the handling of disputes, if any arise, to their respective railroads, there is nothing in the railroad labor bill that will require a change in the method adopted by the so-called "company unions" for the handling of disputes on their respective systems. Their method of adjustment is simply adjustment by conference, which method is provided for in the railway labor bill.

There is therefore no grounds upon which the opponents of this bill are justified in attempting to create a wrong impression in the minds of the public concerning the underlying intent and purpose of the railway labor bill. A careful reading of the bill should be all that is necessary to eliminate any misunderstanding as to its real purpose, and to show that, beyond any question of doubt, it is the most constructive measure that has ever been introduced in Congress as a means for the promotion of peace on the railroads of this country. Ignorance as to the provisions of the bill or a direct attempt to misrepresent the facts must be responsible for some of the misstatements that have been made by its opponents. One of the most deliberate misrepresentations of the facts concerning the Howell-Barkley bill will be found on page 23 of a "Summary of the Twelfth Annual Meeting of the Chambers of Commerce of the United States," held at Cleveland, Ohio, May 6-8, 1924, wherein it is contended that—

This bill would eliminate representation of the public as a party in interest in the determination of controversies between the railroads and their employees, threatening interruption of traffic; would do away with the requirements for public investigation of such controversies; would tend to force railroad employees, regardless of their individual wishes, into particular labor organizations and establish closed-shop conditions on railroads by law.

It does not seem necessary to dwell further upon the question of the extent to which the public is represented under the provisions of the Barkley bill. As already stated, the Board of Mediation is composed entirely of public representatives, appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate, without nomination being made by either the employees or the carriers. On every board of arbitration the public has equal representation with the carriers and employees to the same proportion as the public is now represented on the present Railroad Labor Board.

There is not one line in the railway labor bill which tends to force any railroad employee into any particular labor organization, neither is an employee required to join any labor organization. In fact, section 3a of the bill makes it possible for the employees to select their own representatives without interference, influence, or coercion being exercised over them by anyone. There is not a line in the bill that even refers to the matter of employees taking membership in any labor organization. Neither are there any organizations named in the bill.

As to the establishment of "closed-shop conditions on railroads by law," the railway labor bill neither establishes a "closed shop" nor an "open shop." That the chamber of commerce, itself a bitter opponent of the bill, has adopted the "open-shop" program is evidenced by the following excerpt from page 23 of its twelfth annual report, under the caption "Industrial relations":

The chamber's position, taken through referendum in 1920, is in favor of the "open shop."

It may be of interest to the Members of the House and to the public to know that the railway labor organizations themselves do not maintain a so-called "closed shop." It is not unusual to find a nonunion brakeman working on the same train with a union brakeman. Neither is it unusual to find a nonunion fireman working with a union engineer, and the same is true all through the various occupational classes. Of course, it is safe to say that most of the classes are fairly well, even completely, organized; but this complete organization is not due to the adoption of a "closed-shop" policy. It is largely due to the fact that the railway labor organizations for many years have protected the interests and improved the working conditions of railway employees. They also have established extensive insurance organizations for the purpose of furnishing insurance at cost to this vast army of employees who are engaged in the most hazardous occupation in the world. Extensive provisions for payment of disability claims for injuries received in the service have also been adopted. In fact, these railway labor organizations have become vast benevolent institutions through which great burdens of expense and responsibility have been lifted from society and are now being borne exclusively by the membership of these organizations.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly are being paid to the widows and orphans of the employees killed in railroad service and almost an equal amount is being paid out in disability claims on account of injuries received by employees engaged in this great, moving industry of the country. There is now no compulsion upon a railway employee to join an organization representing his craft, nor is there any such compulsion contained in the Barkley bill. The hazards of employment, the necessity for collective bargaining, and the protection of himself and his loved ones against misfortune are the great, impelling forces which prompt railroad men to seek membership in the organization which represents their respective crafts.

Although the Chamber of Commerce of the United States attempts to pose as the "protector" of the public interest, nothing could be more detrimental to the public welfare and contribute more toward the creation of discord and general dissatisfaction on the railroads of this country than to deluge Members of Congress with absolute misrepresentations of facts concerning the underlying purposes of the railway labor bill.

That the present situation on the railroads of this country requires sober and deliberate thought, with a view to applying a remedy that will accord justice and fair treatment to all parties interested, is quite evident, and it ill becomes the National Chamber of Commerce or any other organization purporting to represent the public viewpoint to deluge Congress with statements containing deliberate misrepresentations of facts concerning a matter of such vital importance to the people. That the railroads and employees have lost faith in the Railroad Labor Board as a tribunal to be utilized in the adjustment of railroad labor disputes is evidenced by the fact that only recently an agreement was reached between representatives of railroads and train-service employees, involving 85 per cent of the mileage in the western territory, whereby it was provided that disputes arising in connection with a settlement, which was at that time negotiated, would be considered and decided by a committee composed of two representatives of the employees and two representatives of the railroads, thus providing a means for settling their disputes without going to the Railroad Labor Board. Furthermore, in a recent conference between representatives of 90 railroads in the western territory and engine-service employees, negotiations extended over a period from April 23 to May 13, inclusive, during which time an effort was made to adjust a number of changes involving wages and working conditions of those employees. Failing to reach a settlement the employees returned to their respective railroads, electing to depend upon their ability to further negotiate with their respective managements in preference to appealing to the United States Railroad Labor Board, in which they have absolutely no faith, and the decisions of which are openly flouted by the railroads.

The railway labor bill is the first constructive measure for the promotion of peace on the railroads that has gained the unanimous support of the employees of the 20 standard railroad labor organizations directly interested. It has taken years of study and consideration of the railroad problem to convince railway employees that legislation such as contemplated in the railway labor bill should be enacted in the interests of the public and for the promotion of peace on the railroads. These railway workers have come to Congress with such a program and are ready to join in the adopting of a program, the successful operation of which will largely depend upon the sincerity and cooperation of the railroads, the employees, and the public representatives. The integrity and honor of these railway labor organizations are on trial to see that the underlying purpose of the railway labor bill is not defeated.

Is the judgment of Congress to be influenced by misrepresentations that are without foundation in fact and which can not be supported either directly or by inference in the language of the railway labor bill? Shall Congress take advantage of this first opportunity offered by the railway employees of this country to insure the promotion of peace on the railroads, or shall a minority in Congress be permitted to deliberately prevent the consideration of such a program on its merits, thus closing the door of Congress in the face of this vast army of employees and allow the present admittedly unsatisfactory and chaotic condition to continue?

A favorite inquiry from critics of this bill is: Why should the public pay the expense of these boards if the public is not represented on them? The answers to this inquiry are many.

First. The public is represented by every one of the appointees of the President who constitutes these boards. It is the duty of each member to act to protect the public interest by seeing that the disputes presented are decided.

Second. The public has the same interest in providing tribunals to administer justice in interpreting railroad labor contracts that it has in providing courts to administer justice in interpreting commercial contracts.

Third. On account of the refusal of the railroads to establish these boards by agreement it has become necessary in the public interest to establish them by law.

Fourth. These adjustment boards can not be established by law except by making them public bodies supported by the Government. Unless they are made public bodies the railroads can continue to refuse to establish them. If they are made public bodies, their members, as public officers, must be paid by the Government.

Fifth. A law which ordered these boards to be created and attempted to compel the parties to pay salaries and expenses would be held unconstitutional, as the Government can only compel the payment of money under the power of taxation, and such a payment has been held not to be a tax.

Therefore the public is asked to pay for the cost of these boards because only in this way can they be created by law, and it is in the public interest to see that justice is done to 2,000,000 railroad employees and that peace prevails in the transportation industry.

1. This bill does not eliminate the public from representation in the settlement of railway labor disputes.

It does increase the public representation from three out of nine members of the present Railroad Labor Board to all five members of the proposed board of mediation.

2. This bill does not set up a new machinery of adjustment boards from which the public are excluded.

It does establish the same sort of adjustment boards which are provided for in the transportation act, wherein there is no provision for public representation on these boards which settle minor and technical disputes.

3. This bill does not standardize wages and rules or require national agreements.

It does require each railroad and its employees to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements for wages and rules governing employment on that road.

4. This bill does not grant special privileges to certain national labor unions.

It does permit all national craft unions to make nominations to the President for appointments to national boards of adjustment, and permits local unions to establish local boards, thus granting all labor organizations equal opportunity to participate in organizing the machinery which they desire for settlement of disputes.

5. This bill does not prevent any change in present rates of pay or working conditions, unless the parties agree to a change.

It does prevent an arbitrary change of wages or rules without notice or opportunity for conference, after which, if an agreement can not be reached, the parties are free to act independently.

6. This bill does not require any increase in transportation rates or make rate reductions impossible.

It does provide a machinery to insure harmonious industrial relations, which should decrease present operating charges and increase net revenues, thereby making possible rate reductions.

7. This bill does not increase the cost of operation of either short-line railroads or the great trunk-line railroads.

It does provide for all railroads a less expensive machinery for adjustment of labor disputes, which should reduce operating expenses.

8. This bill does not leave disputes undecided unless the parties agree.

It does make all decisions of adjustment boards binding on the parties and enforceable just as arbitration awards are enforceable, whereas no decisions of the present Labor Board are enforceable.

9. This bill does not increase indefinitely the public cost of the present law.

It does decrease the total cost of the establishment of the complete machinery of adjustment boards and the Labor Board provided for in the present law and limits the total public cost to only $100,000 more than the present cost of the Labor Board alone.

10. This bill does not legalize strikes or encourage strikes.

It does make agreements resulting from conference, mediation, or arbitration enforceable equally against the railroads and organizations of employees, and binds both parties to comply with the law and so exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements and to settle disputes arising out of the application or interpretation of such agreements.

This bill gives ample protection to all public and private interests involved in the transportation industry. It preserves freedom of contract and insures enforcement of all obligations of contract—contract is the sure and just basis for maintaining peace and insuring cooperation in industry under a democratic organization of society.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCNULTY].

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, there seems to be a misrepresentation floating about this chamber to the effect that there are only four organizations involved in this question. For the edification of all I desire to say that there are 17. Every time a colleague gets up to speak in the interest of organized labor, opposition comes from those who do not understand what labor stands for. Some have expressed themselves as though organized labor were a bunch of bandits. Organized labor tries to keep the peace. There is not a labor institution in this country that does not try to maintain peace. Why do the lawyers organize? Why do the doctors organize? Why do the dentists organize? Why do the manufacturers organize? Why do the farmers organize? And so forth. It is to protect their own interests; and were it not for the organization of labor, God would have to help the workingman and his family, for the average employer would not do so in the way of paying fair wages. Through organized labor it has come to pass that conditions have been created that have made it possible for a workingman and his family to live nearly as God intended that men and women and children should live. I am saddened at times to hear men get up and oppose labor organizations when they have no sound reasons for doing so. I am sure if they would study what labor aims to do in the interest of humanity they would become labor's friends instead of remaining its enemies.

The whole structure of this law is based on the foundation of voluntary service and agreement, the whole intent being to eliminate the present condition that makes of the parties litigants before a tribunal, each clinging tenaciously to the grounds of their maximum demands always with the view of getting the most possible out of any compromise decision that might be rendered by that tribunal.

This law will remove the political complexion from the agency for adjustment of disputes, thus creating a greater degree of confidence by the parties most directly affected.

American workmen will always resent compulsory or coercive methods. Their heritage of freedom is their most precious possession, and they will hold that possession to the limit of their endurance.

In this case the workmen, through their accredited representatives, protested to the last minute the enactment of the present railroad labor bill. When they found their strength insufficient to prevent its enactment, they, as good Americans, said: "This is the law; we do not like it, have no reason to believe that we can secure justice under it; but it is the law, and we propose to comply fully with it." This was their expression individually and collectively. Now they say to the lawmaking body of our Nation: "Years of operation have proved that this law is an abject failure. As good American citizens, we come to you for relief from the intolerable conditions that lopsided enforcement possible under this law has imposed." They are entitled to this relief. In the name of common decency, let us grant it.

The industrial life of the Nation has been beset time and again with ills that might well have been avoided and would not have been imposed had not pernicious legislation given hope of advantage to those who feel themselves strong enough to impose their will, regardless of the equity or justice of their position.

It is the time now for this body to say: "This seems equitable. This seems just. This should bring a condition where the greatest possible degree of harmony will be engendered by direct contact of the parties directly interested. Let us sit down and reason together. Let us have peace." [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I note with a great deal of interest some statements by my colleague, Mr. BLANTON, of Texas. He struts forth to-day as the champion of labor. From all his activities since I have been a Member of Congress and all his activities which I read about before I was a Member I fail to see where in one instance he championed the cause of the workingman. He asked one of the speakers if it was not a fact that if a man did not get behind labor organizations' legislative programs 100 per cent they would mark him unfavorably. I do not believe that my colleague [Mr. BLANTON] ever got behind the program of a labor organization even one-half of 1 per cent. Perhaps he may have thought he was getting behind them one-half of 1 per cent when he supported the Volstead law.

I wish to call attention to the RECORD. On May 14, on page 8784, in the remarks by the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], who is one of the steering committee of the majority party, there are some things which I wish to direct your attention to, because I believe he has by a rather careless handling of the facts or inadvertently put us under a false impression. He pictures a block in his district. There is a widow who lives upon it and a fireman and a pharmacist and a bank cashier, and so forth. The pharmacist is making $120 a month and the fireman is making $11.25 per day, so he says. The fireman that he claims is receiving $11.25 a day for eight hours' work is defined in the decision of the Railroad Labor Board as an outside hostler for the railroads. If the railroad is paying that outside hostler $11.25 a day for eight hours' work, that should be one reason why the present labor section of the transportation act should be repealed, because under the recent decision of the Labor Board that railroad corporation could pay that man only $5.60 a day. I suppose these remarks were inserted in the RECORD so that he could send some of these statements to his farmer constituents to justify his stand as voting against the Howell-Barkley bill.

I insert the following table showing the wages of the railroad employees in the engine service. The facts will show that the railroad employees are underpaid:

My friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] speaks about the paper of the workers. He does not say anything about 90 per cent of the newspapers and magazines which are opposed to labor.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am cursing them all of the time.

Mr. SCHAFER. Thank God, the man who toils for a living has a national paper, properly called "Labor," published in Washington and which is not prostituted to the big business advertisers and owners. Labor is a paper which fearlessly prints the truth and is a bulwark of strength to this Republic and the principles of representative government. Labor brings to the light of day the record of public officials.

Give the people light and they will find the way to make our Government of the people, for the people, and by the people in fact as well as in name. I sincerely hope that everyone who labors in this great Nation will in the near future have an opportunity to read each issue of Labor, so that they will be able to obtain true information on men and measures.

The Barkley bill is a measure in the interest of labor, the railroads, and the general public. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlemn from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, the declared purpose of the bill which is before us today, known as the Howell-Barkley bill, is to insure peaceful settlement of railroad labor disputes. I believe that any such proposition is worthy of the consideration of Congress, because it is vital to the Nation that the operation of our railroads be uninterrupted and that the pay and working conditions of their employees be adequate and just, in order to avoid disputes interfering with efficient operation of our transportation systems and the safe and competent handling of freight and passenger service on the great arteries of commerce in the United States.

But after weeks of careful study and investigation I have been forced to the conclusion that I can not support some of the provisions in the Barkley bill, and a little later I shall give my reasons for taking this position.

I believe it would have been preferable to have considered the Barkley bill in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I am a member, and to which the bill was referred when it was first introduced. When the question came before the committee as to whether or not we would take up the Barkley bill I voted for its consideration. But because of circumsances into which it is not necessary to go at this time it was not possible to secure committee consideration, and I have voted to take the bill up for consideration by the House. I am ready to meet the issue and dispose of it here and now.

SHOULD ABOLISH RAILROAD LABOR BOARD

I have for some time believed that the Railroad Labor Board has not stood the test of experience and should be abolished. When the Labor Board was first established by the transportation act of 1920 I told Congress that I doubted if it would prove satisfactory, and that it would create friction between managers and men rather than prevent trouble. It is generally admitted that under the Railroad Labor Board both sides to disputes have been "passing the buck," and for a time it was only a storm center of trouble and dissension between the operators and workers on the railroads.

Recently the board has been ignored and the railroad companies and their employees have in many instances settled their own differences locally and across the table, which is as it should be.

At its best the Railroad Labor Board is an unnecessary and expensive ornament to the Federal Government, and at its worst it has been a serious trouble maker in the industrial relations of the country.

In the last Congress I introduced a bill to abolish the Railroad Labor Board and to reestablish the provision for the settlement of railway labor disputes by mediation, conciliation, and arbitration, as provided for in the Newlands Act.

WOULD AMEND BARKLEY BILL

The provisions of the Barkley bill which I can not subscribe to and will not support are those in section 3 of the bill, which establishes four national boards of adjustment to which would be referred disputes arising between carriers and the railroad employees.

I have prepared an amendment which I shall offer at the proper time as a substitute for the Barkley bill.

I offer the amendment as a substitute for the entire bill for the reason that the Barkley bill is drafted in such a way as to make it impossible to strike out the four national boards of adjustment without rewriting the entire bill.

WORSE THAN LABOR BOARD

In the speech which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] delivered in the House April 15 in support of his bill he referred to certain persons and organizations outside of the railroad labor organizations who were in favor of abolishing the Railroad Labor Board.

In answer to that statement I want to say that not one of the persons or organizations thus referred to as being in favor of abolishing the Railroad Labor Board has indorsed or approved the Barkley bill. As a matter of fact, the most powerful organization to which he referred, the National Industrial Traffic League, representing several hundred thousand shippers, appeared before the Senate committee during its hearings and opposed the Howell-Barkley bill on the ground that the proposed national adjustment boards provided for in the bill would create conditions far worse than those existing at the present time.

Let me quote what Mr. J. H. Beck, executive secretary of the National Industrial Traffic League, said when he appeared before the Senate committee in opposition to the Howell-Barkley bill. On page 192 of the printed hearings he said:

> We believe it impracticable for a central governmental agency to determine the needs and conditions on every division of railroad in the country without doing an injustice to one side or the other.

He made it plain that this statement applied especially to the proposed national adjustment boards to be established under the provisions of the Howell-Barkley bill.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S POSITION

In this same speech Mr. BARKLEY quoted from the address of President Coolidge in his message, which he delivered to a joint session of Congress December 6 last, in which the President said:

> The settlement of railroad labor disputes is a matter of grave concern. The Labor Board is not altogether satisfactory to the public, the employees, or the companies. If a substantial agreement can be reached among the groups interested there should be no hesitation in enacting such agreement into law.

You will note that the President stated that an agreement should be reached before we attempted to change the present law. But what do we have before us in the Barkley bill? Is it a plan that has been worked out and agreed upon by representatives of the public, the railroad employees, and the operators? Not at all. On the contrary, we find one group composed of railway labor organizations fighting with all the power at their command for the passage of the bill, and another group composed of the railway operators vigorously protesting against it. The representatives of the labor organizations say that if we make the Barkley bill law it will provide the means for the friendly settlement of railroad labor disputes.

But there can be no friendly settlement of a dispute unless the parties to the dispute agree amicably to settle.

The representatives of the railroad operators have appeared before the Senate committee during hearings on the Howell-Barkley bill, and protested against this measure on the ground that it would not settle anything.

MR. DANIEL WILLARD'S VIEWS

Among the railway operators who opposed the bill before the Senate committee was Mr. Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Mr. Willard is one of the most respected and best loved railway operators in the country. Railroad employees respect and honor him for his fairness and interest in their welfare. On page 57 of the printed hearings of the Senate committee Mr. Willard, in speaking in opposition to the Howell-Barkley bill, said:

> If, however, Congress should determine to change the present act, I am convinced that the plan proposed in the bill—> under consideration by this committee would not only not work better than the existing provisions but would fall short of obtaining the results which the public at least has a right to expect from legislation of this character. The provisions in the Howell bill for four national boards of adjustment * * * as proposed, in my opinion, would offer a cumbersome and inflexible agency far less likely to get satisfactory results either for the companies or the workers than could be expected from the adjustment boards already provided for.

So, Mr. Chairman, the position that Congress finds itself in to-day, so far as the Barkley bill is concerned, is between the devil and the deep blue sea. We are asked to pass a bill carrying an appropriation of $500,000, which is strongly supported on the one side by certain railroad labor officials and bitterly opposed by the railway operators and managers on the other hand, while the general public stands on the side lines watching the battle powerless to take any part in the game.

RIGHTS OF PUBLIC FIRST

It is high time that Congress considered the rights of the public in matters of such great importance. [Applause.] The transportation systems of our country are the arteries through which flow the lifeblood of our Nation. Whatever legislation is enacted on this great subject, it should first of all take into consideration the welfare of all of the 110,000,000 people in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I can not yield. The chief criticism of the Barkley bill concerns the proposed national boards of adjustment. Section 3 of the bill provides for the establishment of four such boards, consisting of 40 members, who will receive from the Federal Government salaries of $7,000 apiece annually.

OBJECTIONS TO NATIONAL ADJUSTMENT BOARDS

The supporters of the bill point to the work of the national adjustment boards during Federal control of the railroads as an argument why the proposed boards would work satisfactorily. During Government control there existed three national boards of adjustment, and I want to say that these boards did splendid work and settled many disputes.

But an altogether different condition existed at that time. The railroads were nationalized into one big system. They were under the control of one man, William G. McAdoo, the director general. The salaries of the members of the adjustment boards were paid by the railway operators and the labor organizations. It was easy to do things on a national scale during the war. It made no difference to the operators what it cost to run the railroads, because the Government was guaranteeing the roads a fixed return provided for by an act of Congress.

The setting up of four national boards of adjustment as provided for in the Barkley bill would nationalize certain functions in the operation of the railroads of the country, which are now under separate private control and management. The provisions in the bill for the national boards of adjustment will create two powerful national organizations, the carriers on the one hand and the employees on the other. Such a policy is bound to establish more firmly national organizations of employees and in a like manner will consolidate the railway executives. National organizations mean national agreements.

Now, I would have no objection to such a principle if the railroads were under Government control and operation. But so long as the railroads are under private operation and management, I believe Congress should consider the question carefully before passing any law creating national boards of adjustment as is provided for in the Barkley bill. [Applause.]

THE SHOPMEN'S STRIKE

At the time of the shopmen's strike, two years ago, there were two powerful organizations in the fight, the national organization of the shop employees and a like organization composed of railway executives. During the shop strike both the organizations of employees and the railway executives took the position that there would be no settlement of the strike unless all the railroads settled on the same basis.

There were many railroad systems and their employees that were ready to get together and settle the strike as far as it concerned those particular systems of railroads. But both sides were determined to stand as a unit, and the result was that there was great suffering and the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars before the strike ended; and when settlement was made it was with individual railroads and their employees. The president of one of the largest and best railroad systems in our country, in conversation with me during the shop strike, stated that he was ready to make a settlement with the shopmen on his lines, and that the employees were ready to make a settlement with him, but both parties could not do so by reason of the national agreement made by the railway executive and the shop employees. Of course, I think it only fair to say that in the first instance the shop strike was brought about by the decision of the Railroad Labor Board in reducing the wages of the shopmen all over the country. The reduction in wages by the board was national in its scope, affecting all the railway shopmen in the country. The decision of the Railroad Labor Board in reducing the wages of the shopmen on all the railroads in the country again shows the danger of national boards undertaking to interfere with or settle disputes which might arise between carriers and the railway employees. [Applause.]

It will be said that there is nothing in the Barkley bill that compels the carriers and their employees to submit disputes to the national boards of adjustment. There is nothing in the present law that compels them to submit disputes to the Railroad Labor Board, and yet there are hundreds of cases of disputes pending for settlement before that tribunal to-day. The very existence of the national boards of adjustment will be a standing invitation for the railway employees and operators to submit every kind of grievance to the boards for settlement, just as they were to the Railroad Labor Board when it was first created.

BARKLEY BILL EXPENSIVE

The Barkley bill abolishes the present Railroad Labor Board of nine members, with a total salary expense to the Federal Government of $95,000 per year, and sets up five boards at a total salary expense for its members of $360,000 per annum.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has referred to the adjustment boards provided for in the Esch bill as it was reported from the committee in 1920. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] knows that coupled with the national boards in the Esch bill was a provision for compulsory arbitration. The railroad labor organizations fought the labor provisions of the Esch bill and were bitterly opposed to the same. It is true the Anderson amendment, which was adopted by the House, provided for boards of adjustment. I supported the Anderson amendment for the reason that I had to take my choice between that, compulsory arbitration or the Webster antistrike amendment.

The record will show that when the Esch bill was reported out of our committee I reserved the right to oppose the labor provisions of the bill on the floor of the House. The boards of adjustment established by the Anderson amendment were much different from the boards proposed in the Barkley bill. For instance, in the Anderson amendment the salaries of the members of the boards would have been paid by the railroad companies and the employees whom they would represent, and under the Barkley bill the Federal Government would pay the board members. The adjustment boards which I would establish in my substitute bill are much more like the boards proposed in the Anderson amendment than are the boards proposed in the Howell-Barkley bill.

ADJUSTMENT BOARDS NOW IN EFFECT

Title 3 of the transportation act provides for the creation of adjustment boards. Section 302 of title 3 reads:

Railroad boards of labor adjustment may be established by agreement between any carrier or group of carriers, or the carriers as a whole, and any employees or subordinate of carriers or organization or groups of organizations thereof.

A great deal has been said by the proponents of the Barkley bill about the railroads refusing to agree with the employees to establish adjustment boards as provided for in title 3 of the transportation act. And they have used that as an argument why they want the national boards of adjustment as provided for in the bill which we are now considering.

I say that many railroad boards of adjustment have been established under the present law by agreement between carriers and employees, notwithstanding what has been said to the contrary. Boards of adjustment have been established and are now functioning successfully in the eastern, southeastern, and western sections of our country.

I have had prepared an analysis of the work of the adjustment boards now in operation throughout the country and actually handling disputes arising between railroad employers and employees. This analysis indicates conclusively that agreements have been reached satisfactorily, without any national adjustment boards, on 90 per cent of the class 1 roads, representing approximately 219,000 miles of railroads.

HUNDREDS OF SETTLEMENTS MADE

From January 1, 1923, to May 1, 1924, no less than 539 settlements were made on the important railroads of the country between the representatives of the managers and the men without resort to the Railroad Labor Board. This does not include settlements reached with representatives of the small or miscellaneous groups of employees, such as stationary firemen and oilers and marine-department employees. Agreements to continue existing rates of pay for a definite period were considered as wage settlement, and therefore such agreements are included in this statement.

The agreements include those made with engineers, firemen and hostlers, conductors, trainmen and switchmen, telegraph employees, show employees, clerical and station employees, maintenance-of-way employees, and signalmen. During the period there were 217 settlements in the eastern territory, 201 on the railroads in the western territory, and 121 in the southeastern territory. Last April an agreement was reached between the railroads in the western territory and the conductors and trainmen providing for regional agreements involving more than 90 roads. At the present time a concerted movement involving a majority of the roads in the western territory is under way with the locomotive engineers and firemen.

During the latter part of 1922 agreements were reached with train and engine service employees to continue the then existing rates for definite periods, usually one year, on practically every large class 1 road. These settlements are not included in the figures given above, because they were made prior to January 1, 1923.

NATIONAL BOARDS NOT NEEDED

Surely these figures show that it is not necessary for Congress to establish national boards of adjustment to insure peaceful settlement of railroad labor disputes. Peaceful relations exist now between the railroads and their employees without national boards and by both sides ignoring the existence of the Railroad Labor Board.

A further analysis of the existing method of settling railroad labor disputes by local and regional boards of adjustment set up voluntarily by the railroads and their employees show that from January 1, 1923, to May 1, 1924, a grand total of 1,400 decisions were rendered by train-service boards of adjustment for the eastern, western, and southeastern sections and by similar boards on the Pennsylvania and Philadelphia & Reading Railroads. These decisions invoked matters of pay, discipline, seniority, and other miscellaneous questions which arose. Of this total number 696 were settled in favor of the railroads, 427 in favor of the employees, 139 were remanded, 50 were compromised, 80 withdrawn, and there were only 8 deadlocks, all in the southeastern section.

Why, in view of the conditions at present existing, should Congress establish more Government boards, paid by the taxpayers, to complicate matters?

Such railroads as the Baltimore & Ohio, the Boston & Albany, the Boston & Maine, the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis, the Cincinnati Northern, the Lake Erie & Western, the Michigan Central, New York Central, Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, Toledo & Ohio Central, Zanesville & Western, Pennsylvania, Philadelphia & Reading in the east, and the important western and southeastern roads all have existing boards of adjustment or similar machinery established by mutual agreement between the managements and employees, the decisions of which are final and binding on both parties.

Let me cite to the House some other authorities which show that adjustment boards have been set up and are now functioning successfully at this time.

ROBERTSON SAYS PRESENT PLAN WORKS WELL

On pages 15 and 16 of the printed hearings before the Senate committee on the Howell-Barkley bill you will find the statement of Mr. David Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, who said:

It requires boards of adjustment to decide disputes not settled in conference. All the railroads during the war and most of the great systems to-day utilize such boards or similar machinery.

Further on he says:

At the present time equipartisan adjustment boards are functioning successfully in the eastern, western, and southeastern regions.

On page 18 of the printed hearings appears the statement of Mr. Donald Richberg, counsel for the organized railway employees. In speaking of the adjustment boards, he said:

Such boards have been established by individual roads and by groups of carriers.

It should be remembered that Mr. Robertson and Mr. Richberg are the chief supporters and sponsors of the Howell-Barkley bill who appeared before the Senate committee. They agree that local boards of adjustment are working successfully to-day throughout the country.

SHOULD CONGRESS INTERFERE?

So, Mr. Chairman, on 90 per cent of the class I railroads to-day the managers and employees are making contracts on wage agreements and settling their differences without Government interference. They have established adjustment boards to decide disputes. Is it a wise thing for Congress to interfere with the friendly and successful relation that are existing between the railroad operators and employees to-day? I want you to consider this important matter carefully before you take any action on this question. Will it be good statesmanship on the part of Congress to pass a law at this time establishing four national boards of adjustment at a great cost to the taxpayers, which I believe would interfere with the boards which are now functioning, at least to some degree of success?

Now, Mr. Chairman, in closing I desire to say that in a way I regret that I am compelled to take the position I have taken to-day. No one knows better than I that the Barkley bill has the indorsement and support of many of the labor organizations in our country.

I had hoped that some way could be found whereby the Barkley bill could be changed so that it would receive the support of many Members of Congress who desire to abolish the Railroad Labor Board. The supporters of the bill whom I conferred with insisted they would not agree to any change, especially in regard to the national boards of adjustment.

I reluctantly informed them that I could not support the bill with this provision in it.

I regret exceedingly that I can not support the representatives of the railroad employees in this matter. They have been my friends for many years. I have tried to be their friend.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] stated on the floor a few days ago that your vote on this bill would be the test as to whether or not you were for or against labor.

Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned I am ready to meet the test. I meet it with malice toward none and with a clear conscience and deep conviction that I have done my duty as I see it. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I would not undertake in 10 minutes to discuss in any degree of detail the provisions of the bill nor the remarks which have been made by those who have opposed it. I have the highest personal regard for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], with whom I have served on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce ever since he has been a Member, and, I think, ever since I have been a Member of the House, and I am unable to understand the vicious opposition which he seems to harbor against this measure, peculiarly because he objects to the national adjustment boards to which he refers. As I said a few days ago when the Esch bill was reported originally from the committee of which we are both members, it provided for these very national boards, and the gentleman from Ohio voted to report that bill out to the House. During the consideration of that bill on the floor of the House the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] offered an amendment to Title III of the bill which provided for three national boards of the same character and type as provided in this bill, and even though he had voted for the original provision of the bill as reported by the committee, the gentleman from Ohio voted for the Anderson amendment, which provided for national boards as created in this bill. Of course, the gentleman from Ohio has the right to change his mind upon the question of national boards, but it does offer some curiosity to me, at least, why, after having voted twice on this before the present Esch-Cummins law was passed for the creation of national boards of adjustment, now he finds it so impossible to support the very same thing which he twice voted on in former Congresses. The gentleman referred to Daniel E. Willard, for whom I have the greatest respect and who has been before our committee a number of times. When the present transportation act was passed it became a question of whether the voluntary provisions of the law should be carried into effect by the creation of these voluntary adjustment boards, and the question arose as to whether they should be regional adjustment boards or national adjustment boards, and the association of railway executives, composed of 101, I believe, of the railway presidents, appointed a labor committee of nine, of which Daniel E. Willard was a member. He helped to write and sign the report of that committee of nine in favor of the creation of national adjustment boards like those in the bill which has been under consideration, and the only man who voted against it was Mr. Atterbury, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and his purpose was deliberately to break down every railroad organization in the United States, and there was no secret about it at the time.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I can not, I have only a few minutes. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] and other alleged friends of labor say that they are in favor of abolishing the present Railroad Labor Board. In other words, they are in favor of abolishing the machinery that is now already in existence, but they are unwilling to set up any other machinery that may be resorted to in order to settle disputes that may arise on the railroads of the country. Criticism has been offered by certain gentlemen against the so-called standard railroad organizations because of their activity in behalf of this proposition. Neither the standard organizations nor the independent organizations, if there were any at the time, nor unorganized employees nor anybody else representing any employees asked for the Railroad Labor Board. Everybody knows, and especially those on the conference committee know, the present provision for a railroad labor board as incorporated in the transportation act was never considered by any committee. It was not even deliberately considered by the committee on conference. It came there one day out of a clear sky because the railroads were to be turned back in a few days to private ownership, and it was accepted by many as the best thing that could be obtained.

Mr. BECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I can not yield.

Mr. BECK. I wondered if the public was represented?

Mr. BARKLEY. The public was not represented in the conference committee, except in so far as the conference committee itself represented the public. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said that he was in favor of the abolishment of the Railroad Labor Board, but he does not want anything put in its place. Are you going to leave the railroad men without recourse to any tribunal when they find they can not adjust their disputes by private conference? There is nothing that prevents the adjustment of disputes by private conference. Every railroad, big and little, long and short, has the right and power to confer together with their employees, to use every possible means to settle their own disputes, and in doing that they can establish their own system of local adjustment boards if they desire to do so. They can enter into any kind of a contract and set up any kind of machinery that they and their employees desire to set up to settle disputes without reference to the machinery of this bill. Suppose they can not do that. Suppose, having exhausted all other resources, now that they have created a system, have conferred across the table, and they are still unable to settle their disputes. Are you going to say that there shall be no tribunal, no machinery, no force that can be brought to bear bringing those two contending parties together?

It is unthinkable that any man who is really pretending to be a friend of the public and does not want strikes to come would say that he is in favor of abolishing the machinery that now exists, but is unwilling to create anything in its place.

Objection has been made to the provision that these boards are to be paid by the public. In the report by Mr. Willard, and other members of the committee of nine, his reason was that the creation of national boards would get the disputants away from the local atmosphere and away from the local prejudice, and make it easier to enter into settlements. So far as I am concerned, I am not very much concerned whether these adjustment boards are paid by the Government or by private interests. But I would like to know how you can create a public officer and provide that he shall be paid by private interests. If you are to have national boards, as I believe you ought to have, they should be Government employees, and paid out of the Treasury, and not depend upon any private interests for the stipend they will draw, which would make them simply partisans of the two sides and prevent that impartiality which is necessary in enabling both sides to reach agreements.

The gentleman has referred to the independent and unorganized railroad employees. If there were any way by which the unorganized employees of the railroads could get together in the way of submitting names to the President of the United States, it might be considered. But their unorganized condition precludes the possibility of their submitting names, because otherwise every community, every voting district, might submit names for the President's appointment, and when submitted they would not be representatives of the employees as a whole, but representatives of community or local interests, and they can not divest themselves of that community interest or local interest.

I intend to offer an amendment at the proper place in connection with the creation of board No. 4, which it is proposed to divide, so as not only to allow national organizations provided for in the bill—and that does not mean merely the standard national organizations that now exist; they may go out of business next year; they may all cease to exist at any time—but any organization that covers sufficient territory to make it fairly representative, so that they may have the right to submit names to the President, in order that the interests of those organizations, through these appointees on the adjustment boards that do not deal with wages or conditions of labor, but grievances, may be preserved. During the years of the Government Railroad Administration over 6,000 of these disputes were settled by these adjustment boards, and only 12 of them ever reached the Director General. I will offer an amendment to allow any representative organization to submit names to the President for appointment on board No. 4, so that they will not be able to claim that they have no representation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

PRELIMINARY

SECTION 1.

(A) DEFINITIONS

When used in this act—(1) The term "carrier" includes any express company, sleeping-car company, private car company, and any carrier by railroad subject to the interstate commerce act, including interurban and suburban electric railways operating as independent units or as a part of the general railroad system of transportation, including all bureaus, associations, committees, and institutions of whatsoever kind or character maintained or supported by or existing in furtherance of the interest of carriers, and including all floating equipment, such as boats, barges, tugs, bridges, ferries, and other transportation facilities owned and operated by electric, gas, or steam operated railways, and any receiver or any other individual or body, judicial or otherwise, when in the possession of the business of employers or carriers covered by this act.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will it be in order to offer an amendment to this particular subdivision, or must the whole section be read before an amendment is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The entire section must be read for amendment unless it is determined otherwise by the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the bill may be read by paragraphs.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent that, in view of the length of the bill and the novel features of it, which are entirely new and have not had the consideration of the committee, the bill be subject to amendment paragraph by paragraph. I make that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the bill be subject to amendment paragraph by paragraph. Is there objection?

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

(2) The term "adjustment board" means one of the boards of adjustment created by this act;

(3) The term "board of mediation and conciliation" means the board of mediation and conciliation created by this act;

(4) The term "commerce" means commerce among the several States or between any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia and any foreign nation, or between any Territory or the District of Columbia and any State, or between any Territory and any other Territory, or between any Territory and the District of Columbia, or within any Territory or the District of Columbia, or between points in the same State but through any other State or any Territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation;

(5) The term "officer" means all persons engaged in the service of carriers included in the "executive officer group," "general officer group," "division officer group," and "official staff assistant group," as these groups are established in the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission dated April 18, anno Domini 1921, effective July 1, anno Domini 1921, and entitled "Rules governing the classification of steam railway employees and reports of their service and compensation";

(6) The terms "employees" and "employees and (or) subordinate officials" mean all persons engaged in the service of carriers not included in the "executive officer group," "general officer group," "division officer group," and "official staff assistant group" as those are established in the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission dated April 18, anno Domini 1921, effective July 1, anno Domini 1921, and entitled "Rules governing the classification of steam railway employees and reports of their service and compensation," including all persons in the employ of bureaus, associations, committees, and institutions of whatsoever kind or character maintained or supported by or existing in furtherance of the interest of carriers;

(7) For the purposes of this act the occupational classification established by the Interstate Commerce Commission in its order dated April 18, anno Domini 1921, effective July 1, anno Domini 1921, and entitled "Rules governing the classification of steam railway employees and reports of their service and compensation," is hereby amended to include, and adopted as the legal classification of, all persons engaged in any capacity in the service of carriers, including all those persons included within the terms "employees" and "subordinate officials": Provided, That the occupational classification of any position shall not be changed from that established by the aforesaid occupational classification until such change of classification shall have been first approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, after due notice and hearing to the carriers, the employees and subordinate officials of carriers, and organizations thereof directly to be affected by such change of classification: And provided further, That such occupational classification shall not be construed to define the crafts according to which railway employees are organized by their voluntary action nor shall the jurisdiction of such national craft organizations be regarded as in any way limited or defined by the provision of this act.

(8) This act may be cited as the railway labor act.

(B) CONSTRUCTION

(1) If any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgments shall have been rendered.

(2) The definitions of terms made in this act shall not be construed as limitations on the nature of the meaning of the terms herein defined.

(C) REPEAL

All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; and particularly Title III of the transportation act, 1920, which is sections 300 to 316, inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and the acts approved July 15, 1913, providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No; I refuse to yield for that purpose.

I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the enacting clause. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, after listening to the able argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], I can not help but believe that the membership of this House who have followed the question of the national boards of adjustment are convinced that the Barkley bill will not solve the railroad troubles, and that the national boards of adjustment set up by the Barkley bill would bring the country back to a strike-inviting situation.

It is true that there were national boards of adjustment during the war, but they were not governmental tribunals, as provided here. It is true that there have been adjustment boards before which have been by agreement of the parties. But that does not mean these national boards of adjustment which are proposed to be created by this measure, which would set the country back, so far as the settlement of railroad disputes is concerned, to the point where we used to have strikes every year.

Mr. Chairman, if we could give the proper study to the Cooper bill this committee might be willing to substitute it for the pending bill. But I think the thing to do is to strike out the enacting clause of this specious measure and then give consideration to the Cooper measure as a separate and independent act. And therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think this is the time to kill this bill and settle the whole thing. [Applause.]

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I hope this motion will not prevail.

There are four features of the Esch-Cummins Act that are very unsatisfactory. These are: Section 15a, regulating freight rates; the taking away so largely of intrastate power from State railway commissions; the book-value basis of valuation; and Title III, setting up a Labor Board.

The Barkley bill deals with Title III. This part of the Esch-Cummins Act has failed to insure or even promote industrial peace. It was the result of hasty compromise. It has satisfied neither the employers, the employees, nor the public.

Under the Erdman Act, the Newlands Act, and Federal control there were 30 years practically without interruption of transportation service. Under Title III we have seen four years of discord, strife, and the only national strike in our history.

This fruitage was inevitable. The present law is faulty in principle and weak in administration. It is in the nature of things that all compromises on principle work out badly. The present law attempts to reconcile the irreconcilable—compulsion and persuasion.

The administration is weak because a tribunal is set up without power either to end disputes or to enforce decisions. It pretends to set up mediators who are soon compelled to decide disputes, and so quickly lose their standing as mediators and the confidence of contending parties, without which mediation is impossible.

The Esch-Cummins law gives the Labor Board no power to impose its decisions upon the parties. Such power would not be conducive of peace. Therefore force in any form should be eliminated entirely from the law. Everything should be done to bring about agreement by persuasion.

The result of four years' experience with Title III is therefore that the Labor Board has been roundly condemned by carriers, employees, shippers, and Government. President Harding suggested its abolishment to Congress.

The purpose of the Barkley bill is industrial peace. This purpose is stated clearly in the beginning, where it is made the general duty of railways and employees—> to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, rules, and working conditions and to settle all disputes arising out of the application of said agreements.

Clearly the object is right, and because it is right, making for industrial peace, progressives support it irrespective of party.

Moreover, it is sound in principle. This fact runs through it from first to last, that railway employees ask for no one thing that is not fully accorded also to the railway employers. Equity is the test of justice and a guaranty of fairness.

The working machinery set up is as simple as it is scientific. In every detail this machinery reflects the simplicity of wisdom and the wisdom of simplicity. Between the original grievance or cause for complaint on the part of either party and the final adjustment of the grievance and removal of the cause of complaint there are four stages, each based on the principle of equity, justice, and fairness, where the parties are brought together face to face.

The first stage is conference. The law enjoins and affords every practical means to encourage and bring about conferences between the employer and employee. It makes it a legal duty for them to confer in the first instance with the view of a peaceful settlement of any controversy.

The next stage is adjustment before an adjustment board. Here grievances arising out of the interpretation of agreements only or out of disciplinary punishments will be considered by the chosen representatives of both parties. These grievances will be discussed pro and con across the table, in the light of past interpretations of practices. I can conceive of no wiser or simpler method that can be devised.

Then comes the stage of mediation and conciliation. Five mediators, who are also conciliators, selected without favoritism and without prejudice toward either party from the public, are in duty bound under the law to do everything possible to persuade railways and workers to come to an agreement. I know of no more simple, no more wise method that can be brought to bear by law to accomplish the purpose of industrial peace.

And, finally, we come to the last stage—a reference of a contested question of wages, working conditions, or interpretation of agreements to arbitration. Each party is to choose a representative arbitrator, they to choose a third, and if they can not agree on anyone, the Board of Mediation and Conciliation is to name the third impartial arbitrator from the public. And before arbitration, the parties are to specify the subject matter, the methods, and to agree to be bound by the award. Again, I say, I can think of no more simple nor wise method of eliminating causes for strife, discord, bitterness, and war, for strikes are nothing but warfare machinery carefully designed to secure the inestimable benefits of industrial peace to capital, to labor, and to the public.

Our confidence that the Barkley bill when enacted will prove more effective for purposes of industrial peace than the present Title III of the Esch-Cummins Act is grounded fundamentally on the basis of common sense.

LASTING PEACE CAN NOT BE COMPELLED

It must be brought about peacefully by bringing the contending parties face to face. Such machinery was a part of the Esch-Cummins Act, but was so badly constructed that it failed to operate. The railways refused to set up adjustment boards. This bill corrects that weakness. Adjustment boards are set up by it, around which common table day after day these contending parties—railway employer and the railway employee—will discuss grievances, interpretations, and penalties. There is no better way that can be suggested than bringing parties face to face to discuss with each other the causes of dispute. Moral suasion is the sister of common sense.

We have confidence in this machinery, because it aims to bring knowledge, light, to the contending parties sitting around the adjustment table. Both sides will select experts having detailed experience with the subject matter in all its technical details, men chosen who are level-headed, trained, and experienced railway men. Such persons will quickly be able in the light of the knowledge they have of the practical conditions of railroading to determine readily the merits or demerits of any grievance or penalty.

Our confidence is further based on the knowledge of the compelling power of self-interest. The carrier is interested in avoiding conflict, litigation, strife. So are the organizations of labor, both standng to lose thousands or hundreds of thousands, millions or hundreds of millions. Self-interest, when the parties are face to face with each other, will impel them to adjust grievances rather than let them run on and result in strife and strikes with the loss of both wages and dividends.

We have confidence in the machinery of this bill, because it eliminates the main source of trouble, the intermeddling third party. It is humanly impossible for the third party to eliminate preference either for the railway corporations or for the railway employees. This is remarkably noticeable in the case of the present Labor Board. These so-called public representatives were not impartial and soon indicated their leaning toward the railway side of questions in dispute. And even if they tried to be fair, it is inevitable that they will be suspected, and therefore confidence will be lost. Of course, whether they are suspected or they are in fact biased, they lose the confidence of at least one of the contending parties and their usefulness for purposes of mediation and conciliation is at an end.

This is perfectly apparent in the present Labor Board, where, as a result of this introduction of the third party, the board has worked at cross purposes. Neither the railway employer nor the employee has any confidence in it. Both sides ignored or defied it, and this is especially true of the carriers.

The same disturbing influence would result if third parties were put upon the adjustment boards. Besides the natural tendency to lean to one side or the other, and the consequent effect of suspicion or lack of confidence on the part of one or the other of the parties at interest, the public representatives have not the knowledge of the technicalities of railway operation; and the self-interest of the public representative is usually merely political.

In the light of these fundamental facts, so clearly evidenced if one will but read the bill without prejudice, let us consider the stock objections.

These really come from one source, the railroad lawyers, but make their appearance publicly in various forms in the hearings, where first the railway lawyers give them utterance.

Next they are urged upon us by the so-called short lines, who are really under coercion of the larger systems.

Then we have the dummy railroad unions who present them.

And finally, the public special-interest agencies—the chambers of commerce, the biased press, the influenced business men, or the railroad representatives in Congress.

Consider first the objections made by these public agencies of the railroads.

CLASS 1. CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE, SHIPPERS, ETC.

OBJECTION A. PUBLIC LEFT OUT

Answer. The Barkley bill gives the public entire membership of Board of Mediation and Conciliation. Also third member in every dispute referred to arbitration. The President, representing the public, selects members of the adjustment boards out of recommendations made. The power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to protect the public against increased freight rates remains unaffected.

Finally, the whole scheme is so arranged as to bring the full force of public opinion and public sentiment to bear on disputes between contending parties. Under present law the public representation of the Labor Board is only one-third of the membership. It is therefore not sufficient to be effective, but just enough to be a disturbing factor and therefore harmful.

OBJECTION B. EXPENSE ITEM. A FAVORITE MISREPRESENTATION IS THAT IT WILL BE A MILLION DOLLARS A YEAR

Answer. The truth is that the bill itself limits the expense to $500,000. All the proposed law contemplates is $80,000 for the Board of Mediation, $30,000 for arbitration, $366,000 for boards of adjustment, or a total of $476,000.

Contrast this with the present law. The Labor Board alone costs $380,000. The machinery of adjustment boards contemplated by that law were not set up. Had they been, this would have added $366,000, a total of $746,000.

In other words, had the machinery of the present law been fully set up, it would have cost at least $300,000 more than the machinery of the proposed law.

But even without that machinery, the cost is $380,000; or, in other words, the proposed law would cost less than $100,000 more.

Now, what a pitiful argument. In one strike the railroad employers and the railroad employees each lost over one hundred millions, and the damage suffered by the public was incalculable.

Money spent on the present Labor Board is a waste of funds. If we are not to have an efficient board, let us do away with the Labor Board entirely and save at least $380,000.

OBJECTION C. HIGH RAILWAY WAGES WILL BE MAINTAINED OR BOOSTED

Answer. There is absolutely nothing in the Barkley bill to justify this objection. Adjustment boards do not change wages. When wage changes are proposed 30 days' notice must be given and opportunity for conference and conciliation. If this fails, there is no bar to railroads reducing wages. The Board of Mediation and Conciliation has the function of representing the public when change of wage is involved. The Interstate Commerce Commission must pass on any effort to increase rates as a result of any wage change. Therefore the public is amply protected.

SHORT LINES

OBJECTION A. SHORT-LINE EMPLOYEE CAN NOT GET HIS GRIEVANCE HEARD

Answer. There is nothing in the proposed measure to prevent local adjustments whenever they wish. They can not suffer, because craft representative on adjustment board will not make precedent that will prove injurious to any employee. Adjustment boards are to interpret standard agreements generally.

OBJECTION B. EMPLOYEE ON SHORT LINE CAN NOT BE APPOINTED ON ADJUSTMENT BOARD

Answer. There is no prohibition upon appointment of any employee who represents nationally organized craft. If employees will organize nationally, they may make recommendations to the President.

The President is to make the rules and regulations determining nominations. Obviously it would be unfair that some employee representing a group of, say, 500 should be selected and another group of employees representing 75,000 or 100,000 should be ignored.

Common sense must determine this matter. It would be impracticable for the President to select from a large number of small groups, and, moreover, the danger would be that these small groups would be merely dummies for the railroads, which would introduce discord and strife, the very thing that should be avoided.

OBJECTION C. BARKLEY BILL TENDS TO STANDARDIZE WAGES OR AGREEMENTS

Answer. This is impossible, because there is no power to do this under the proposed machinery. Every case will be decided upon its own merit, based on specific contract on any individual road. The Board of Mediation has no power to change agreements. The mediators try to bring the parties together who make the changes, and therefore they can not standardize anything. Nor will the arbitrators standardize anything, because they, too, deal with a specific case on its merits. These decisions are not permanent. They change constantly.

Present Labor Board does change agreements and wages, and the tendency is constantly to standardize wages and working agreements according to needs of the trunk lines and their employees. Therefore precedent made for trunk line will be made to apply to short line. The short lines are therefore protesting, contrary to their best interests, and are acting under pressure of the big roads.

OBJECTION D. SHORT LINES WILL BE COMPELLED TO DEAL WITH NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

Answer. This complaint means nothing more than that these short lines refuse to deal with national unions and, furthermore, that they desire to keep their employees in subjection, giving them no redress.

OBJECTION E. COST OF ADJUSTING GRIEVANCES WILL BE INCREASED

Answer. Under the Barkley bill the short lines deal directly with their employees in conference, and only bring in public mediator for their local problems. The mediator will come to the short-line road, and it will be relieved of expense of going to Chicago to Labor Board, as at present.

OBJECTION F. THE BILL INVOLVES UNNECESSARY EXPENSE

Answer. The answer is that they ought not to be objecting to this proposed law which permits them to deal with their own employees without interference. They ought to object then to the Labor Board of the present law when it is required to settle wage disputes. This Labor Board fixes wages which are standard. The Labor Board can not decide one thing in one case and one thing in another, but makes uniform decisions, and they are standard conditions, preventing the very thing that these short-line roads say they would like to have the power to do.

Under the Barkley bill the short lines deal with their employees directly, and only bring in a public mediator for their local problems. They can be more readily relieved of burdens than if they are required to go to the present Labor Board which would be bound by its precedents.

OBJECTION G. SHORT LINES AND THEIR EMPLOYEES ON A HAPPY, PEACEFUL BASIS

Answer. The proposed law makes it a duty for employer and employees to maintain such friendly relations. There is nothing in the proposed measure to prevent the short lines from making agreements with their employees. If they get along without trouble, there is no occasion for going before any of the boards, but if there is real complaint on the part of the employees of the short-line roads, this law gives them redress, and that is in the interest of the public as well as of justice.

DUMMY ORGANIZATIONS

OBJECTION A. BARKLEY BILL WILL BENEFIT AND PROTECT NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS, BUT WILL BE UNFAIR TO INDEPENDENT ORGANIZATIONS

Answer. If independent organization is really an employees' organization, this bill protects its members just as it protects members of national organizations, because boards of adjustment can not and will not establish precedents injurious to any member of a craft.

OBJECTION B. BARKLEY BILL MEANS COMPLETE EXTERMINATION OF INDEPENDENT ORGANIZATIONS

Answer. There is nothing in the bill compelling independent organizations to identify themselves with national unions.

OBJECTION C. REPRESENTATIVES OF ADJUSTMENT BOARDS HAVE POWER TO EXAMINE ANY PAPERS OR RECORDS

Answer. This objection is proof that these independent organizations of employees are fostered by the carriers and members join under compulsion, their dues being deducted from wages. They merely reflect the views of their masters, the railroads.

OBJECTION D. THESE BOARDS WILL ENTAIL HEAVY EXPENSE

Answer. There is no expense to members of these independent organizations. This is really an objection made by the railroads themselves through these organizations. Even though slightly more expensive than present Labor Board, the results attained by having the proper machinery will justify the small additional expense.

OBJECTION E. SMALL ORGANIZATIONS HAD NO PART IN PREPARING BARKLEY BILL

Answer. The bill was drafted by the representatives of 16 standard railway organizations with the aid of the American Federation of Labor. The object of the bill is the welfare of all employees wherever employed.

OBJECTION F. BARKLEY BILL WILL RESULT IN REPUDIATION OF EMPLOYEES WHO REMAINED LOYAL DURING THE STRIKE OF 1922

Answer. There is nothing whatever in the bill to justify this objection.

ADVANCED BY RAILROAD ATTORNEYS

OBJECTION A. CLASSIFICATION OF EMPLOYEES BY THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION BEING MADE OFFICIAL

Answer. This is made necessary because the railroads would change classifications to evade decisions of adjustment boards just as they have shifted employees under the present labor board. It is necessary to avoid confusion. Official classification does not prevent a man being employed and doing more than one job. He will simply get another classification.

OBJECTION B. THAT 20 DAYS' NOTICE REQUIRED IS TOO SHORT

Answer. This notice only applies to beginning the conference. It is intended to prevent the present practice of the railroads in delaying conference two or three months, sometimes indefinitely, resulting in bad feeling. There is no limitation whatever as to the time the conference may consume.

OBJECTION C. CARRIERS ARE NOT PERMITTED TO PASS ON CHARACTER OF EMPLOYEES APPOINTED TO ADJUSTMENT BOARDS

Answer. Why should they? Each group should select its own representatives without interference or dictation from the contending party. The trouble is that the railroads have in the past tried to control even the representatives of the railroad employees. This, and this only, is prohibited by this bill. The railroad employees have never had the privilege to thus dictate who the railroad representatives should be.

OBJECTION D. THAT THESE PARTISAN BOARDS WILL NEVER COME TO AGREEMENT

Answer. These boards are not intended even to make or change contracts. The adjustment boards merely interpret agreements. Being made up of technical experts, they will soon convince the contending parties to agree by pointing out the correct procedure.

OBJECTION E. WITHOUT COMPULSORY ARBITRATION NOTHING WILL COME OF THIS LAW

Answer. Compulsory arbitration would not be conducive of peace. Industrial peace can only be had through agreement, without resort to force, but upon the foundation of justice and good will.

In conclusion, the progressives are for the Howell-Barkley bill because they know that these words embody the spirit of truth, justice, and patriotism. I quote from a pamphlet submitted to Congress by the railway brotherhoods:

It has been found necessary to establish a public machinery to compel the railroads to treat the public fairly in furnishing service and in making charges. Likewise, it has been found to be necessary to establish a public machinery to compel the railroads to treat their employees fairly in fixing working conditions and rates of pay. This proposed machinery is required for the public interest as urgently as the machinery of rates and service regulation. It is opposed by selfish private interests in the railroads just as they have always opposed every exercise of public authority to protect public interests. It is sponsored by the genuine representatives of "the overwhelming majority of the railroad employees and subordinate officials, stated by those who are in a position to speak with confidence and authority to be more than 90 per cent."

The organized railway employees bring forward a tried and successful program for industrial cooperation with the encouragement and support of governmental authority. It is submitted as the most effective measure ever presented to Congress to eliminate strikes from the American railroads. It will be absolutely effective, if railroad managements cooperate, particularly because the employees will be pledged to the public and to each other to prove that their constructive program to solve labor problems in the transportation industry is in truth a program of peace.

We are for this measure because it is right. It stands for industrial peace. It embodies the principle of justice, fairness, and equity. It has in it the virtue of the simplicity of wisdom and the wisdom of simplicity and will prove to be effective because it is founded on common sense, knowledge of conditions and details, the best self-interests of contending parties, and is justified by experience. Industrial peace can only be had through agreement, whether effected by personal conference, by adjustment, by mediation and conciliation, or by arbitration, without resort to force, but upon the foundation of justice and good will.

The following correspondence will abundantly demonstrate the need of the Barkley bill in setting up adjustment boards to adjust grievances:

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP CLERKS,
FREIGHT HANDLERS, EXPRESS AND STATION EMPLOYEES,
SYSTEM BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT, GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD,
St. Paul, Minn., June 24, 1921.

Mr. J. A. COCHRANE,
Assistant to Vice President, Great Northern Railway,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Following is statement of grievances now pending in addition to several others upon which individual letters have been written to you recently requesting a conference for the purpose of closing them up one way or the other.

Some of these cases have been under consideration by you for over six months and we have been promised a conference to dispose of them for over three months.

It is such apparently unwarranted delays which cause much dissatisfaction among the employees whom we represent and is bound to reflect in the services rendered. Will therefore thank you to set a date for conference as quickly as possible, and oblige,

Yours very truly,

E. W. ANDERSON, General Chairman.

1. Claim in favor of Mr. Owen Cunningham, employed at Clearwater Junction yard, filed with you December 17, 1920. You advised under date of March 23: "I would be glad to discuss this case with you and will fix a date for doing so at my earliest opportunity."

2. Bulletining position of assistant chief clerk in the general superintendent's office at Great Falls, filed with you on January 6, 1921. You advised under date of March 25: "I am agreeable to submitting this to the Labor Board and will arrange to meet you at my earliest opportunity for the purpose of agreeing upon a statement of facts."

3. Claim in favor of Mr. C. J. Ruttkie, employed at Grand Forks, N. Dak., and filed with you on December 16, 1920. You advised under date of April 6: "I will be pleased to discuss this case with you and will set a date at my earliest opportunity."

4. Claim in favor of Mr. J. W. McConville, employed at Minneapolis Junction, filed with you on January 31, 1921. You advised under date of April 16: "I will arrange to meet you at my earliest opportunity for the purpose of discussing this case."

5. Rates of pay of janitors at Minot and Rugby, filed under date of March 8, 1921. Our request was declined in your letter of April 18, and will therefore thank you to set a date for conference to dispose of the case.

6. Rates of pay for train and engine crew callers at Minot and Williston, filed with you on February 3, 1921. Our request declined, and therefore requested a conference for disposing of the case in my letters of April 16 and May 12, 1921.

7. Application of Decision No. 2 for the station helpers at Towner and Granville, filed with you on January 13, 1921. You advised under date of April 20, 1921: "I will set a date to meet you for the purpose of discussing this case at my earliest opportunity."

8. Claim in favor of B. Theo. Olson, employed in the office of the auditor capital expenditures, St. Paul, filed with you under date of March 29, 1921. You advised under date of April 21: "There are quite a number of cases on which you have requested conference and this case can be discussed along with the others."

9. Claim in favor of Mr. J. E. Healey, employed at Great Falls, filed with you under date of February 24, 1921. You advised under date of April 22: "There are a number of other cases which I will arrange to go over with you at my earliest opportunity, and we can discuss this case at that time."

10. Claim in favor of Mr. Adolph Anderson, employed at Superior yard, filed with you under date of December 18, 1920. You advised under date of April 22: "There are a number of other cases which I will arrange to go over with you at my earliest opportunity, and we can discuss this case at that time."

11. Proper rate of pay for train and engine crew callers at the terminals division, filed with you under date of November 15, 1920. To date you have failed to acknowledge receipt or render a decision. Will therefore thank you to set a date for conference to definitely dispose of the case.

12. Claim in favor of baggageman, janitors, etc., employed at the Minneapolis passenger station, filed with you under date of November 11, 1920. We requested date for conference on April 7. To date you have not acknowledged receipt or complied with our request.

13. Claim in favor of extra gang timekeepers employed at the terminals division and other points on the system, filed with you under date of November 15, 1920. Under date of April 7 we requested you to consider the case further, and if you could not see fit to comply with our request that you set a date for conference for the purpose of disposing of it. You advised under date of April 25 as follows: "Effective as of May 1, 1921, the railway will discontinue the application of this rule to extra gang timekeepers and apply the daily rates to these positions." And on June 15 you advised: "Your request to make this retroactive is respectfully declined." As you have complied with only part of our original request, will you kindly set a date for conference as requested in my letter of April 7?

14. Claim in favor of perishable freight inspectors, icing foremen, and heater men throughout the system, filed with you under date of December 27, 1920. Under date of March 17 we furnished you "statement of facts" for signature to submit case to Labor Board and requested date for conference in case you took any exceptions to our "statement." You have failed to return signed "statements" with your letter of April 6, wherein you advise this is a matter of schedule revision. Our request is not a matter of schedule revision but a proposition of complying with agreement reached during negotiations on our present schedule. Will therefore thank you to set a date for conference as previously requested.

15. Claim in favor of Mr. E. A. Douglas, employed in the office of the superintendent motive power, St. Paul, filed with you under date of February 24, 1921. Under date of May 9 we requested a date for conference be set for the purpose of disposing of this case.

16. Claim in favor of train and engine crew callers at Hillyard, filed with you under date of April 16, 1921. Have received no acknowledgement or decision and will thank you to set a date for conference to definitely dispose of the case.

17. Claim in favor of George Haase, employed at Raymond, filed with you under date of March 17, 1921. In my letter of May 9 I requested favorable decision, or date for conference to dispose of it. You advised on June 13 our claim is again declined. Will you kindly set a date for conference as requested?

18. Claim in favor of Mr. Ed. Gehrmann, employed at the Dale Street store, filed with you under date of May 6, 1921. In my letter of May 27 I requested a favorable decision, or a date for conference to dispose of the case. You advised on June 13 our claim is again declined. Will you kindly set a date for conference as requested?

19. Claim in favor of train and engine crew callers employed on Kalispell division, filed with you under date of April 15, 1921. Our request for compensation on the daily basis is declined in your letter of June 13. Will therefore thank you to set a date for conference to dispose of the case.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP CLERKS,
FREIGHT HANDLERS, EXPRESS AND STATION EMPLOYEES,
SYSTEM BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD,
St. Paul, Minn., August 20, 1921.

Mr. G. R. MARTIN,
Vice President, Executive Department, Great Northern Railway Co., St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed herewith is copy of letter written to Mr. J. A. Cochrane, assistant to vice president, under date of June 23, 1921, in connection with grievances pending at that time. Mr. Cochrane replied to this letter on July 6, 1921, advising as follows:

"With reference to yours of June 20 regarding conference in connection with the 19 cases listed:

"My time for several months has been fully taken up in connection with revision of agreements pursuant to decision No. 119, and with wage-rate adjustment matters, but I expect to be able to confer with you within a short time and will advise you definitely as soon as it is possible for me to do so."

Since that time the following additions should be made:

20. Claim of Walter Bruning, at Great Falls, for compensation for time lost from January 2, 1921, account being deprived of the right to exercise his seniority as provided in our schedule. On July 6 Mr. Cochrane advised as follows: "I think it would be well to add this case to the others listed in your letter of that date in connection with which you ask for conference."

21. Claim in favor of storehouse and material yard employee at St. Cloud store for proper increases under decision No. 2, which was effective May 1, 1920. On July 6 Mr. Cochrane advised as follows: "I think it would be well to add this case to the 19 others listed in your letter of the same date, on which you ask for conference."

22. Claim for proper seniority date of J. H. Carpenter, employed in the superintendent's office at Wolf Point, Mont. Mr. Cochrane, on July 27, advised as follows: "I have added this case to the list of those for discussion received with your June 28 letter."

23. Claim for time off account vacation in December, 1920, in favor of C. F. Burns, employed in the superintendent's office at Breckenridge. On August 10 Mr. Cochrane advised as follows: "I have added this case to the list of cases on which we are expecting to confer."

24. Claim in favor of A. W. McCarthy, formerly employed as chief clerk in the general agent's office at Seattle, Wash., for the 13 cents per hour increase as provided under decision 2 instead of the flat $25 per month increase as granted. This case was referred to Mr. Cochrane on March 16, 1921. We traced for replies on April 21, May 9, and June 20, and to date have received no acknowledgment from Mr. Cochrane.

25. Claim in favor of certain freight checkers at Great Falls for proper rate of pay, which was referred to Mr. Cochrane on April 23, 1921, and no acknowledgment to date.

26. Claim in favor of freight checkers at Great Falls and Havre for an additional 1 cent per hour account increased only 12 cents under decision No. 2. This case was referred to Mr. Cochrane on April 28, 1921, and no decision rendered to date.

27. Claim in favor of elevator operators in the general office building at St. Paul account required to work eight hours in a spread of ten instead of eight hours, exclusive of the meal period, as provided in our schedule. On April 15, 1921, we requested Mr. Cochrane to set a date for conference in order that this matter may be discussed, and, if necessary, a joint submission made to the Labor Board for decision. We traced Mr. Cochrane for a reply on May 12, which has not been received to date.

28. Claim in favor of E. L. Braun, employed in office of auditor passenger receipts, for refund of cash fare paid by him from St. Paul, Minn., to La Crosse, Wis., and return account serious illness of his sister. This case was referred to Mr. Cochrane on May 16, 1921, and to date he has failed to render a decision.

29. Claim in favor of W. E. Wentsel, employed in the Minneapolis freight office, for proper rate of pay on the position of rate clerk account rates having been shifted. On March 16, 1921, we requested Mr. Cochrane to either allow the claims on our statement of facts or hold an investigation to fully determine all the facts. We traced Mr. Cochrane for a reply on May 9, which he has failed to render to date.

30. Claim in favor of Miss E. L. Rausch, employed nine and one-half years in office of general superintendent of transportation, for free foreign transportation for her dependent mother. This case was discussed quite thoroughly with Mr. A. L. Bergfeld, general superintendent of transportation, and no legitimate reason was given for declining to grant the transportation. The case was referred to Mr. Cochrane, who, on July 14, 1921, advised as follows: "The granting of transportation to employees by the railway is purely complimentary, and not subject to handling as a grievance, for which reason I can not comply with your request." Mr. Cochrane's statements were true prior to the time the employees of our craft were organized and negotiated a schedule; but our schedule fully provides for just such cases, so I called at Mr. Cochrane's office the morning of July 19 for the purpose of adjusting the matter. I was advised that Mr. Cochrane was out of town, and shortly afterwards I passed Mr. Cochrane on the street. It was necessary for Miss Rausch to pay railroad fare for her mother, and we now have request in for refund.

You will undoubtedly recollect our exchange of correspondence during February and March, 1921, with reference to the unwarranted delay in obtaining a decision from Mr. Cochrane on the case of the 69 employees in the Minneapolis passenger station who were being improperly paid under the "intermittent service" rule, your file 4299. Mr. Cochrane rendered a decision on March 18 denying our claim; and, as you will note, this is one of the cases upon which we are still waiting a conference.

We also desire that you refer to our exchange of correspondence during November, 1920, your file 8497, in connection with designating the highest official to whom appeals may be made as provided in our schedule, and particularly to my letter of November 19, 1920, reading in part as follows: "In my opinion it would be presumptuous on my part to designate who we do or do not desire designated as the company's representative. We will endeavor to transact our business with whoever may be designated, but of course we do desire that whoever is designated give these matters the prompt consideration they merit."

We dislike very much to trouble you with such matters and do so only as a last resort, as it is absolutely impossible for us to continue on the present basis. Not only have final settlements on these cases been delayed beyond any reasonable period, but it apparently has been done deliberately. The employees whom we represent can not understand such an attitude otherwise than of being very antagonistic, and you can appreciate what the natural result of such an attitude will be.

We feel that Mr. Cochrane's attitude does not represent that of the management of the Great Northern Railway Co., neither do we believe the management expects those delegated to represent them to misrepresent the facts, and we therefore request that Mr. Cochrane be instructed to immediately arrange a conference to dispose of all unsettled grievances or that some one else be designated to represent the railway company who will do so—preferably the latter. Will you please advise what we may expect, and oblige,

Yours very truly,

E. W. ANDERSON, General Chairman.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO.,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
St. Paul, Minn., August 27, 1921.

Mr. E. W. ANDERSON,
General Chairman—Clerks, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Answering yours of the 20th instant in regard to grievance claims which have been presented to Mr. Cochrane for consideration.

The past few months have been very busy ones for those who have had to do with labor matters. Mr. Cochrane thinks now that he can give attention to the clerks' claims about October 1. Will this not be satisfactory to you?

Yours truly,

G. R. MARTIN,
Vice President.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP CLERKS,
FREIGHT HANDLERS, EXPRESS AND STATION EMPLOYEES,
SYSTEM BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD,
St. Paul, Minn., September 8, 1921.

Mr. G. R. MARTIN,
Vice President Great Northern Railway Co.,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Replying to yours of August 27 with reference to grievances presented to Mr. J. A. Cochrane for consideration:

While it undoubtedly is true that those who have had to do with labor matters have been very busy the past few months, I am sure you will agree that no other business of the railway company would be delayed or neglected as badly as this particular part has been without some very definite action taken with those responsible for such delays or neglect and a remedy applied.

It is not our intention to say how these matters should be handled or who is to handle them, but there is absolutely no question in my mind that a conference on these cases has been delayed beyond any reasonable period, and it would seem if Mr. Cochrane really has not had sufficient time to properly handle these cases, some other arrangements would have been made so they would have been handled within a reasonable period.

You can undoubtedly appreciate that the date (about October 1) designated for a conference is rather indefinite, and especially so in view of receiving the same kind of information from Mr. Cochrane since about January, 1921, and we would therefore prefer a definite date be set, and it also appears a conference could be held before the proposed date of October 1, as that is approximately a whole month from now, and I certainly can not conceive of any legitimate reason for such a long delay in disposing of these cases, and especially so in view of many of them being considered by Mr. Cochrane for from six to ten months already.

After giving this matter further consideration, I am confident you will agree we are not unreasonable in requesting a conference be held on or before September 15, 1921, for the purpose of disposing of these many cases, either with Mr. Cochrane or such other representative of the railway company as may be designated.

Will you kindly advise if this will be arranged, and oblige,

Yours very truly,

E. W. ANDERSON, General Chairman.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO.,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
St. Paul, Minn., September 15, 1921.

Mr. E. W. ANDERSON,
General Chairman—Clerks, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Answering yours of the 3d instant about arrangement for conference with reference to grievances:

Mr. Cochrane is away on his vacation, and I do not see that anything better can be arranged for than about October 1, as per my letter of August 27 to you.

Yours truly,

G. R. MARTIN, Vice President.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP CLERKS,

SYSTEM BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD,
St. Paul, Minn., October 14, 1921.

Mr. G. R. MARTIN,
Vice President Great Northern Railway Co.,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of September 15, file 8497, with reference to arranging a conference covering various grievances which have been pending with Mr. J. A. Cochrane for several months, wherein you advise that Mr. Cochrane was away on his vacation and therefore nothing better could be arranged for a conference than about October 1.

Wish to advise that to date I have received no information from Mr. Cochrane as to setting a date for conference.

I believe that you will agree that we have been very patient in this matter and have endeavored to adjust these cases with our local management. However, if it is impossible to obtain a conference on these cases, it will necessitate submitting them to the United States Railroad Labor Board and arguing our cases before that board rather than adjusting them with the management of the Great Northern Railway Co., which I think you will agree is much preferable.

Will you kindly advise further, and oblige,

Yours very truly,

E. W. ANDERSON,
General Chairman.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO.,

Mr. E. W. ANDERSON,
General Chairman—Clerks, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Referring to yours of the 14th instant about conference with Mr. Cochrane covering various grievances.

Have you taken up with him the question of a date for a conference? If not, I would suggest that you do so.

Yours truly,

(Signed) G. R. MARTIN,
Vice President.

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILWAY AND STEAMSHIP CLERKS,
FREIGHT HANDLERS, EXPRESS AND STATION EMPLOYEES,
SYSTEM BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT, GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD,
St. Paul, Minn., October 25, 1921.

Mr. J. A. COCHRANE,
Assistant to Vice President Great Northern Railway Co.,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: As per your telephone request, I am inclosing herewith copy of my letter of June 21 addressed to you and my letter of August 20 addressed to Mr. G. R. Martin, vice president, listing 30 grievances which were pending, awaiting a conference with you for final disposition.

In addition to the 30 cases listed, the following cases are still unsettled, awaiting conference.

31. Claim in favor of John Ekblad for compensation for eight hours per day from January 31 to February 14, 1921.

32. Claim in favor of John Ekblad, account making application for position of oil-house foreman at Jackson Street.

33. Claim in favor of John Ekblad, account making application for position of section stockman at Dale Street.

34. Claim in favor of Frank Trupka for the rate of store attendant at Breckenridge Store.

35. Claim in favor of Harry Clemens, to be assigned to the position of freight checker at Vancouver, British Columbia.

36. Claim in favor of George Batson for time lost as trucker at Tacoma, Wash.

37. Claim account changing the assigned hours of service of Hamline Transfer.

38. Claim in favor of material handlers at Whitefish Store and other points for proper rate of pay.

Yours very truly,

E. W. ANDERSON, General Chairman.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO.,
OPERATING DEPARTMENT,
St. Paul, Minn., January 14, 1922.

Mr. E. W. ANDERSON,
General Chairman—Clerks,
366 Jackson Street, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing herewith two copies, proposed statements of fact in the cases listed by you and discussed in our conferences November 15, 16, 17, and 18, except cases 13, 24, 26, and 36.

Case 26 is not included for the reason that there is no definite information as to who the employees are in whose behalf the claim is made, which information you agreed to furnish. Case 13 is the subject of my letter of the 12th instant to you. Claim in case 24 has been paid, and the claim in case 36 will be paid.

I have no file regarding case 11 listed by you, but it covers the application of Rule 50 to call boys on the terminals division, and the decision in cases 6, 16, and 19 would apply to the same facts in case 11.

If you will kindly indicate your O. K. on one of the copies and return it to me, I will make enough copies for submission to the board.

Yours very truly,

J. A. COCHRANE,
Assistant to Vice President.
